Why is it that sometimes the best concerts are least well attended? That is what happened yesterday afternoon in Hart House, when baritone Donald Brown and accompanist, Dr. George Brough presented a recital. The program was skilfully constructed, and equally well performed, and yet a mere handful of students was present. Only one number on the program was written within the last hundred years, but such was the variety of older music performed, that boredom was at all times kept at a distance.

The central group on the program was Beethoven's much-discussed but seldom-performed song cycle "An die ferne Geliebte" ("To the distant beloved"). Beethoven composed the six brief, passionate poems comprising the cycle in very simple, eloquent style. Some of the songs repeat the same musical phrase over and over in different, though related keys; two of them are strophic, repeating several verses to the same music. Throughout, it is the unity in thought between the words and the subtle rhythmic and harmonic changes of the accompaniment that sustain interest in the music. It is to Mr. Brown's and Dr. Brough's great credit that they strove to attain this unity in their performance, and succeeded admirably. Piano and voice were equally devoted to expression of the feelings of the poems, and when the cycle closed with a reference to the melody of the original song, we felt that they had never parted company from beginning to end.

To open the recital, Mr. Brown sang four eighteenth century songs, two by Handel and two by Bach. The agility of his voice, and his clean intonation make this sort of music very suitable for him. He also managed to convey to the audience the diference between the singers — Phoebus, Pan, and a boastful Philistine giant — in spite of the fact that the music given to all three is very similar.

Mr. Brown also sang a number of old English songs, and four Irish ballads. Here his excellent enunciation made it possible to follow the stories related by the songs. Coupled with his feeling for modal melody, this made the group particularly appealing. They were sung with all their native simplicity and humor, and were very well received by the audience.

It has long been our contention that Dr. Brough is one of the finest accompanists in Toronto. He lived up to his reputation once again on Wednesday, and gave us crisp, clean, and very carefully controlled accompaniments. He was never obtrusive, and always a worthy partner of a fine singer.

School Night

Every year the faculty of Applied Science and Engineering puts on its annual Skule Nite. It always features a lot of music, new songs, and a new machine. In the above picture we see people helping with the sets for the production. From left to right, they are: Francis Miller, Katherine Snack, Audrey Sim, and Margaret Bonnell. The machine for this year is still a big, dark secret, but if you come to the show it is reported to be easy to find out what it is. Tickets go on sale today.

Bob Revue And Rehearsals

The time is ten to ten. It is a typical night of rehearsals for the Bob Revue. The pace is fast, and scattered through the College are the various groups who have been practising since six o'clock.

One room is packed with pretty girls, singing, dancing and smiling. Two pianos are banging out a long list of new numbers for the show. rooms, while the singing chorus is Skits are rehearsing in various other in Wymilwood. Little Vic is the home of forty busy prop builders and set painters. Producers, directors and other exec types are rushing from room to room. The general picture is one of mayhem set to music, with enthusiasm the reigning force.

About ten-thirty or eleven, the whole ravenous cast descends on Murray's for a fast cup and a rehash of the evening's fun. This has been the nightly routine for five weeks. It shows results in a smooth-running production which will break at Hart House Theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

This year, Victoria College boasts more outstanding amateur and professional talent than any of its rivals. There are the four girls who danced with Mr. Durante, Arline Patterson, Carol Merritt, Sheila Catto and Leila Anderson. Dave Peddie and George McCowan are handling original skits written by Ricky Arnold and Walt Stewart of "Oxford Letter" fame. Bob Jackson of C.B.C. and Max Yalden ensure the audience lots of laughs. The sets are unique and colorful, emphasizing simplicity, and focusing attention on the sensational costumes.

Fran MacDonald, a Leslie Bell soloist, and Phelps-Bell are directing the music for the Revue, and without giving too much away, they tell us Victoria's new school song will constitute a rousing finale to the show.

It seems to us, the way tickets are selling, that the show will be a sensation—something no one should miss. What tickets are left, are on sale at Victoria College and Hart House Theatre. If you haven't got your ticket yet, better get it right away. They're just $1.25.

P.S. — Wait until you see the programmes — no advertising and a real souvenir of the show.

E. G. ROBINSON

Edward G. Robinson appears all next week at the Royal Alexandra in Arthur Koestler's 'Darkness at Noon'. The play is a story about the Communist party and the difficulties involved in keeping on the right track.

By DAVE PEDDIE

Next week the Royal Alex is playing host to DARKNESS AT NOON and it will be a relief to see a professional show that is not of the calibre of OKLAHOMA, which was good once but that is its limit. DARKNESS AT NOON was originally a novel by Arthur Koestler, written in the thirties just after he had left the Communist party. He has since become a very bitter opponent to Communism and has tried to formulate in vaguely philosophical terms the reasons why Communism is a poor political creed.

The play which has been on Broadway for the last year is about a party man who is under suspicion and is in jail for investigation. This investigation almost breaks the man completely, leaving him exhausted and barely able to find anything to live for.

The lead part will be played by Edward G. Robinson who has taken over from the original actor, Claude Rains.

The first of the revues will take over Hart House Theatre next week — The Bob Revue will play Monday to Wednesday and the U.C. Follies will be on stage Friday and Saturday. These are the only shows put on by the Arts Colleges and they will both be eager to outdo each other.

College shows have come up for a great deal of criticism lately. People are beginning to ask whether these shows are worth the trouble and the money. It has become more and more expensive to produce them and on top of that there have been a number of people whose marks have definitely suffered from lack of studying.

Since there are only a few acts in each full-length show that are really good "theatre," the promoters of the college show cannot say that they are developing talent. And after that the only excuse for the shows is that they help that very tenuous creature "college spirit." Just how much does it build spirit and if it does — what kind of spirit does it build?

There have been a few moans from the Hart House box office that the seats for MADWOMAN OF CHAILLOTT are not selling as they should. In the past the house has been almost full every night of the week. Is the university losing its interest in the theatre or are the students too broke to pay 75 cents to see a play by students on the campus? It is a sad reflection on the student body when they go less and less to plays and yet turn out in as great strength to see the football games. The two are not mutually exclusive; going to see a good play can be just as entertaining. In the case of the MADWOMAN OF CHAILLOT it can even be good fun.

Basketballers Begin

With all of last year's team returning except two players, and with a host of high school stars in their first year this year, the array of basketball talent which will be out with the Blues next Monday, when the practices begin, should be among the most imposing the University has seen.

Both the coaches, Bob Masterson and Dalt White, are busy with the football team, and as yet nobody knows who is going to take the team through their preliminary paces the first week or two weeks.

Steve Carr and Jack Gray are the only Blues not returning to the court this year. Both have graduated. Trying to put some of last year's players off will be such high school stars as George Stulac, one man team with Western Tech; Bill Corcoran of UTS, also a one man team last year; Ray Monotte of Etobicoke, Mike Baida of Harbord, Don Ottaway of Malvern, Jack Garbutt of Runnymede, Frank Palermo of Bloor, Don Harrison, Bob Kimoff, and Bruce Johnston of East York; Steve Oneschuk of St. Catharines, and doubtless others.

Theer will also be some improved men from last year's championship Intermediate team, which has such returnees as Lou Lukenda and Don Fawcett (both of whom played games for the Blues). One or two may make the jump from Interfaculty, possibly Russell and Woods from St. Mike's.

Blues Face UWO Only Two Injured

Guardian angels, who for over two years now have shunned Varsity as though it were the gates of hell, seem to have come back to the Bloor Bowl once again. Not only are the Blues in the best physical shape they have been in at this time of the season since 1948, with only two regulars out of action due to injuries, but they went through their weekly scrimmage with the Intermediates last night without anyone getting crocked for at least a week.

Pete Hynbida pulled a muscle, and Al Brown hurt his arm, but neither injury is of a nature that could put the owner out for this Saturday's game with Western.

The most serious injury in camp is Jim Butler's broken hand. Jim is carrying the mitt around in a cast, and is definitely out for this Saturday. Given his chance when Jack Roberts was put out by a head injury, this solid young rookie from East York Collegiate has stepped into a regular first string role at right guard. Roy McMurtry will replace him unless Gerry Sutherland is moved over from centre, in which case he will go at the guard position instead.

The other recent injury is to Bob Leeming, who received a knee injury in the Queen's game, and will likely watch the Western game from the sidelines. Leeming, the right side linebacker, plays only defensive ball, and will be replaced by Bob Rumball, who is recovered from his side injury. Leeming made the jump to Senior from Junior Skule last year, though he had a year with the Intermediates the year before.

Ollie Mandryk, quarterback, has pretty well recovered from his knee injury, but is still a question mark for this Saturday. Al Haig's kicking foot is improving, and may take over the kicking chores again this week, though John Adams has been doing well enough lately to carry the load himself.

In a fast game at O.C.E. last night, Vic Freshies A defeated St. Mike's first year team 14-4. The Vic girls were really connecting and their passing was accurate, but the losers gave them a good fight.

The PHE third team played Vic Junior-Senior A, and carried through after a close game to win 19-16. Towards the end Vic began to mount up their score, but they were not quite fast enough for the Phys. Eds.

In the third game last night St. Hilda's Freshies lost to the first year A from UC 13-25. It was fast-moving all the way, but UC proved the better team in accuracy and intercepting, while the Saints, in spite of being on the wrong side of a 25-6 score at half time, worked hard and managed to double their total by the end of the game.

Nurses met Meds in a fast scoring basketball game last Tuesday afternoon and the Nurses came out on top by a 27-23 count. The score at half time was 16-13 for Meds, and during the last half, neither team gained a lead of more than a point until Helen Blott scored two quick baskets near the end of the game to put the Nurses on top. Donna Parr was top scorer for the winners.

The softball game played Wednesday, October 31 between PHE I and St. Mike's has been disputed. The decision of the umpire has been withdrawn and the game will be played again on Thursday, November 1.

In the other softball semi-final, UC trounced St. Hilda's 19 to 4. The UC team got away to a good start when they downed the first three Saint batters in order, and then banged in four runs in the bottom of the first inning. The second frame was a close contest with each team making one run. The Trinity gals warmed up in the third with three telling hits but the UC-ites retaliated with four runs. The fourth inning saw the Red and White team thwart the Saints' attempts with some accurate fielding. Daphne Walker and June Biggar were two of the reasons the UC team made the finals while short-stop, Elaine Hunt made a terrific showing for Trinity.

A powerful Red and White football machine ro 16-0 win over the undermanned Meds I squad on campus yesterday. On the strength of a fine perform QB Byron Peebles and the running of backs Brow Richardson, UC had little trouble with the doctors but three substitutes to spell off their overworked Quarterback Wheeling was a bright spot for the me

After a dull and scoreless first half, things really got rolling and UC struck for three touchdowns, only one being converted. The first came early in the third quarter when UC recovered the ball as Wheeler fumbled a bad snap deep in Meds territory. Nichols went for one first down and then Richardson took a pitchout and galloped way round the end for a major. Peebles hoofed the extra point.

Two plays later, UC intercepted a pass. Cucin went all the way to the 2-yard line and on the next scrimmage, Peebles sneaked over the end again. This time the convert attempt failed. In the last quarter, Richardson stormed for two first downs taking play to the Meds one. Peebles threw it over to Brown who went away wide for the major which was unconverted again. And that was the story of the scoring.

There was one injury of a serious nature in the game, that to Moran of Meds who was hurt on the same play that got UC its final touchdown. He was borne off on a stretcher and later to the General Hospital suffering from a torn cartilage in his knee.

Play moved up and down the field during the whole first half with neither side getting very close to 'pay dirt. Both QB's, Peebles for UC and Wheeler for Meds, clicked with a few passes but none for large gains. Richardson got away for one good run for the Red and White but it was nullified by a clipping penalty and this same thing happened to a number of plays on both sides. The half ended with nothing decided.

Bryon Peebles was a triple threat star in this contest. His passes were hitting the mark, his kicks were consistently long and when he chose to run the ball himself he went places. He ghosted through for one touchdown and another time, when he was back to kick and was rushed, he zig-zagged for forty yards right up the middle of the Meds team. Richardson, Brown, Cucin and Wilkes were ground-gainers for the Red and White. The first two both scored majors and Cucin set one up with a spectacular run to the two before he was downed. Jack McFarlane was steady on and lugged the ball a times.

For the doctors, Whe quarter was the pick. some nice passes and wa well. Shatz and Stipec went they all had trouble against the big arts team. of manpower was certainly since Meds held up well in half but wilted, visibly as wore on.

bates at U.C. Al Strauss, Literary Director of the University College Literary Society said yesterday. Entries close Friday, Nov. 9, and the debates start two weeks following.

By last night 16 teams had signed up for the debates and half of those were first year men. There are still openings of the lists on the door of the J.C.R.

The Robinette Debates are held at noon hour in Room 8, University College. Most topics for these impromptu debates are humorous, and fairly simple.

The team of Eli Rubin, School of Social Work, and G. A. Drew was disqualified because they are not undergraduates registered in the University of Toronto.

Pewter beer mugs are the prizes given to the winning team. All interested students are invited to come and attend these debates.

SAILOR'S LIFE

Grass Skirts — Pubs

Join the navy and see the world; dozens of men from the University of Toronto have done just that during the past summer. Tales of grass skirts, Hawaiian beauties that fill grass skirts, navy discipline, submarine rides, English pubs, Piccadilly Square, cigarettes at ten cents a pack can still be heard all over the campus. On board ship the UNTD Cadets faced naval discipline at its toughest and on shore they did the things that sailors will do. The highlights of the summer training were the actual cruise and the forty-eight hour leave at the point of debarkation.

On board ship (frigates) the Cadets had considerably more to do than play shuffle board. Each Cadet was fully employed with dog-watches, messenger duty, seamanship lectures, and huge doses of navy discipline and deck swabbing. And then there was the inevitable seasickness for some of the cadets.

While on board the cadets had no time to realize what a great experience they were undergoing, but as soon as they docked and had their feet on solid ground, the cruise seemed a most remarkable experience. Most cadets crammed more into the forty-eight hour leave immediately after docking than any Skuleman could pack into a quarter of a dozen football week-ends in Montreal. From both England and Hawaii cadets brought home loot ranging from grass skirts to Harris Tweed sport jackets.

In order that the cadets will be able to survive this the UNTD insists that they obtain the very best material. Of the three armed services, the Navy is the only branch that admits men on the basis of oral examinations. A candidate, if in good physical condition, is interviewed and either accepted or turned down on the basis of that interview. If accepted the candidate assumes the rank of Ordinary Seaman and must attend weekly "parades" at H.M.C.S. York. At these evening classes the seaman goes through boot training, attends lectures, and gets his first taste of that notorious naval discipline. After some weeks of this type of training the seaman then comes before his Board, consisting of both Reserve and Regular Naval officers, where he faces a series of oral questions. These questions may range from "Do you go steady?" to "Who won the World Series?" If the seaman passes his "Board" he is promoted from Ordinary Seaman to Cadet.

The merits of the naval disciplinary system cannot be denied. The UNTD's main function is to train men to be naval officers of a high calibre; and to be a good leader the cadet must show that he is humble enough to be led during that training. The actual training of the cadets is of the very best as witnessed by the summer cruise. The best way to learn about a ship is to live, sweat, and get seasick on that ship.

But who cares about hard work and tough discipline when fags are a half a cent each and Hawaii is in view?

Baha'i Teachings Subject of Talk

"The human world needs the help and remedy, the new life and regeneration which can come only from God", said Mrs. Audrey Westheuser at the open meeting of the University Baha'i Student Group yesterday.

"God's eternal covenant has been revealed progressively. Irrigating currents of revelation have been the source of spiritual renewal in every age and have been the mighty civilizing forces of their time," the speaker went on to say. "Through obedience to the ordinances of God we can overcome the exigencies of our time and learn to dominate our environment. Thus the power of God operates through a collective center and today is flowing through the creative words of Baha'u'llah".

Mrs. Westheuser continued by saying that "the goal is to unite races, creeds, and nations, to clear away the superstitutions, dogmas and rituals which are keeping men from truth and reality in all religion, and to show that there is but one religion and that all the prophets have taught it."

"In one hundred and six countries of the world Baha'is are learning to live according to principles of unity. World peace cannot be assured through patriotic devotion nor can human agencies alone bring peace. The guidance of God is essential, and this guidance has been given to us clearly and explicitly by Baha'u'llah".

The speaker concluded by suggesting that these claims are open to criticism and evaluation, but that Baha'is believe that within the Baha'i teachings is to be found the divine solution for every human problem.

From the third floor of Terra Sancta, one can see the Judean hills, rich in Biblical history and representative of the past. Through another window one can see a transit work camp which houses thousands of Israel's new citizens; this is representative of the present. And the work being done in medical laboratories and scientific research institutes is representative of the future. Thus the past, the present and the future is involved in the scope of the Hebrew University and of its students there.

Shell Out!

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Shell Out

Shell out, shell out,
We'll break your windows inside out.

The tumult and the shouting have died. All the witches and evil spirits have departed to the murky underworld for another year. Neighbors are picking their porch furniture from telephone-pole tops while storekeepers busily rub soap scrawls from their windows.

And today on All Saints' Day, the children of the city are back in school, bleary-eyed and scrubbed, chortling over their ill-gotten gains and fiendish exploits.

At least, this is the way it used to be. Lately, however, there are rumors that Halloween is being organized—schools and churches are arranging parties to keep the little devils off the street and out of people's hair.

What ignominy! From wild and glorious attempts to fill baskets and bags with enough candies and apples to makes one child in three sick for days, we are degenerating to apple bobs and charades. From the eerie, witch-filled October night, children are being swept into the prosaic dullness of the school gymnasium and the church hall.

How are the fine old traditions of Halloween to be preserved? Perhaps we, the university students, can do something.

We are slowly growing out of the awkward age. We are at the stage when going from door to door in costume would not seem too childish and silly. Instead, colorful costumes on Halloween night would be great fun.

Maybe we are missing the chance to exploit Halloween. Instead of asking for candy kisses, we have lots to ask for that would seem to go a long way: Red Feather, Jamaican university relief, All Varsity Aid, the poverty-stricken sets of initials like ISS.

Think of the effect of burly engineers in costume going from door to door. Think of the large supply of witches in our midst.

And think of the donors who could be easily shown the advantages of releasing nickels and dimes into the empty coffers of needy organizations. Next year, let the slogan be:

Shell out, shell out,
We'll break your windows, inside out.

No Politics Here

The Editor, The Varsity:

What is the purpose of having campus elections for the Mock Parliament? The demand for them is coming from the political clubs who represent a very small proportion of the student body. Only those in the clubs will take an active interest in them but the whole campus will be involved. Most Varsity students are not interested in the Mock Parliament, yet the results of the election, if held, will be announced in large letters in Toronto papers as the opinion of the student body. I see no reason why Varsity should provide propaganda for any party, right or left wing.

There is another objection to elections at this time. The Mock Parliament discusses only Dominion issues, not Provincial matters. Yet the tentative date for election is November 15, just a wee[k] fore the Ontario vote. Inevitably, V[ar]sity political leaders will use campaign [ma]terial supplied by Messrs. Frost, [Le]slie Thomson or McLeod. People will be [ask]ed on the basis of one set of prob[lems] which it will not be able to discuss. T[hus] the election results will be most mis[lead]ing. Many people vote for different [par]ties in the Provincial and Dominion [fi]elds.

Are there not enough extra-curric[ular] activities on the campus now? If we [have] so many politicians in the university [let] them campaign for local candidates in [the] city. Personally, I came to Varsity [to] receive an education not to read [party] propaganda. Thus I am strongly oppo[sed] to campus elections.

A Proud Refrain

Editor, The Varsity:

From the South-East corner of our campus comes a tiny squeak of protest. One of the smallest faculties of the University is crying for better and more accurate publicity.

The student body of the Faculty of Music beseeches The Varsity to refrain from using the term, "the School of Music". The confusion is justifiable. In the Faculty of Music there are two courses: (a) General Music, and (b) School Music. Thus the mix-up between Faculty of Music and the course called School Music.

However, if some studious scribe will consult the back cover of any U. of T. calendar, he will discover that we are definitely recognized under the former term.

Our student body is proud of the work we do throughout the campus. Without our help, many student music activities would be without ogod leadership. Graham Jackson is the director of the UC Music Club, and Charles Wilson heads the Vic Glee Club. Phyllis Graham is the chairman of the SAC Music Committee (not Lois Graham from School of Nursing as you reported).

Just glance at a list of our graduates. In the past, Lee Hepner, Bob Cringan, Bill Girvin and Elmer Eiseler were important to campus music. This year the names Ward McAdam, Keith Keith Girard, and Jim Guthro are in the news. And who can forget the charming Margo MacKinnon, who graduated from our course last year? Small wonder that we are proud of our achievements in the past and the present!

On behalf of my fellow artistes, I ask The Varsity to repor[t] accurately the activities [of] geniuses of the University [of] world.

Wants Lower Fees

Editor, The Varsity:

Do we want lower fees? U.B.C.'s got them.

As we read in last Wednesday's The Varsity, the enrolment of our university has decreased considerably this year over and above the thousand or so DVA students who have graduated.

In common with many other students we have had the feeling that although the fees increases were rather steep, we would just have to sit back and take it on the chin (or out of the pocketbook). But we recently heard from a friend of ours at the University of British Columbia that their student council sponsored a referendum on the subject of fees increases, and that as a result, their President Mackenzie has announced a decrease in the second instalment of this year's fees.

Speaking on the findings and significance of the Massey Report, Dr. James, President of McGill University, said last Thursday night that there are ". . . many students of outstanding ability who have no opportunity to go to university because they cannot raise sufficient funds". Also according to Dr. James, our country's universities have fewer scholarships and bursaries, but higher fees, than any other university that he knows of in the British Empire.

In view of this, we feel obliged to conduct a poll of say 100 students to enquire whether they are satisfied with the fees increases.

(Those interested in serving on this committee can reach us at KI. 7414 between 6 and 7 tonight.) We feel confident that the results of this small poll, a cross-section of student opinion, will justify an all-Varsity fees referendum.

VANDALS PAINT CAMPUS

University College took a beating on Wednesday night. Most likely the sign shown above and another one saying "Skule Forever" will be visible for years unless an ugly light patch obliterates them.

Hold Emergency Meeting To Investigate Rowdyism

No university windows were broken on Hallowe'en, but a wave of vandalism did sweep the campus Wednesday night as All Saints' Day was ushered in.

Students coming to classes yesterday morning were greeted by painted signs on the walls of University College, Whitney Hall, Trinity and Knox, and on the steps of Victoria College.

The Students' Administrative Council has called a special meeting of its Executive Committee, together with college and faculty presidents, to air the matter.

SAC President Syd Wax said last night that if necessary an investigating committee will be set up to look into the whole problem of mob spirit and rowdyism on the campus.

The emergency meeting will be held at 1 p.m. today. Members present will be the Presidents of the UC, Vic and Engineering student governments; the president, vice-president and secretary-treasurers of the SAC, and the Editor of The Varsity.

"I don't remember a worse case of vandalism in all my years at the university," commented UC Principal Jeanneret yesterday. "I cannot believe that any student of this or any other university committed this vandalism. If it is found that some student is responsible, I think he deserves expulsion."

The signs, painted in oil-base paints, are still to be found on the front and side walls of University College, the windows of Knox, and the steps of Victoria. They have already been removed from Trinity and Wymilwood.

UC suffered the worst damage from the as yet unidentified vandals. Two men spent most of yesterday trying to remove the white-paint "Skule Forever" on the side wall of Croft Chapter House. Although they have managed to remove most of the paint, much of it still remains in the stone itself, and can be clearly read. The other sign, "Skule Stable," still remains on the front wall.

"Passion Pit" was the comment painted on the red brick wall of Whitney Hall, the UC girls' residence. In both the case of Whitney and UC, the paint will have to be scraped slowly away by hand. It is impossible to use solvent, since the solvent and paint would sink even deeper into the bricks. Sand-blasting would necessitate cleaning the entire wall.

"Those signs will be there for some years to come," commented one UC caretaker.

At Trinity, one of the heavy wooden front-doors was taken down for refinishing, after the painted "Skule" sign had been removed. The other door has been cleaned with gasoline and will need refinishing, but has been left on the main entrance.

One of the large gym windows of Knox College, opening out on the lane between Knox and Simcoe Hall, was liberally painted with signs of "Skule," "Meds," "fool," and various initials. On the front steps of Victoria College, someone painted "Pink 'n Yellow." This was done in a different color paint from the others, and some feel this is an indication it was done by a different group of persons.

In Wymilwood, one of the Vic women's residences, "Skule" was painted in white over the fireplace.

At the O.T. Huts on Devonshire Place, the door was blocked by a sign nailed across it. When the caretaker came to open the huts, she was hurt in removing the sign. She may have a fractured bone in her hand, as a result of injury from the falling sign.

In an official statement to the University, the Engineering Society said: "The appearance of the word "Skule" in oil paint inferred that members of the Engineering student body were at fault. If it is found that students of our faculty are responsible for the damage, we shall certainly support any disciplinary action which might be taken by the university authorities. In our opinion, the incident was highly deplorable. We would welcome any accurate information which might shed some true light on the unfortunate situation."

Radio Round Table May Be Resumed

The University Radio Round Table may be going over the airwaves this year after all, in spite of a report from the SAC Radio Committee that CKEY had refused to broadcast it. The round table, entitled "Of Minds and Men" was heard on CKEY last winter, under the auspices of the Radio Committee.

However, the broadcast schedule will not begin until the new year, since coming provincial and muncipal elections are taking up all the free time on the station. Programs will be able to start the first week in January according to station officials.

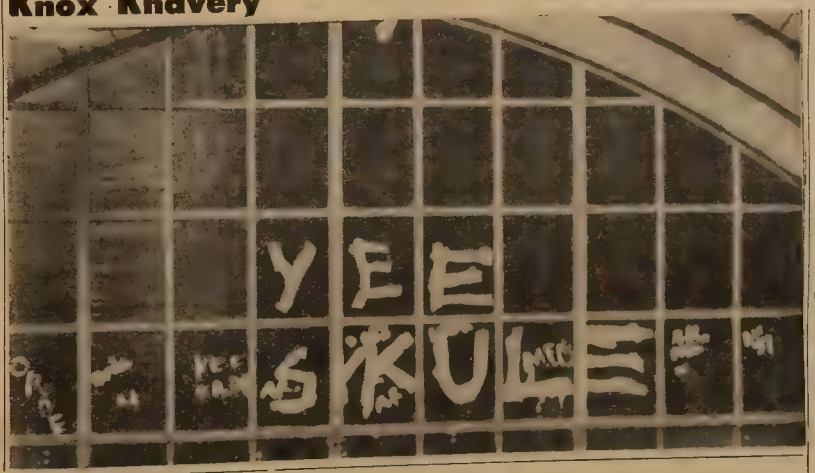
The Students' Administrative Council received this information at its meeting Wednesday night in a letter from CKEY News Editor Harry Rasky.

The Radio Committee has not yet definitely said whether or not it would produce the program now that CKEY had offered to co-operate.

In his letter, Rasky told the Council: "I am once again willing to undertake the production of the University of Toronto round table discussion known as 'Of Minds and Men'." He went on to say that both he and the station management feel the program was successful.

"You understand of course that the management expects me to act as liaison between the university and the station," said Rasky, "and would like me to act as moderator and producer again. Since all my work on this program is voluntary, I would appreciate as much co-operation from (the Council) as possible."

At the first SAC meeting of the year, Rocky Martino, Grad, then chairman of the Radio Committee, was reported as criticizing Rasky's work as moderator of the round table last year.



Referring to the report of this meeting, Rasky said, "I was somewhat shocked and amused to read an item about myself in a recent issue of The Varsity. However, I have been told that the article was substantially incorrect, and in view

Knox Knavery

On Wednesday night a group of unidentified persons satisfied their ambitions by painting a window at Knox College. It wasn't until Thursday afternoon that Knox discovered that there was some writing on the yellow-stained window at the south end of their gymnasium. This was the only sign containing the word "Meds" out of the 12 that were painted. The initials cannot be connected with the years and the name "Orde" is not listed in the student directory.

Council Statement

The use of paint on the walls of University College is a childish prank, but, because it has a mutilating effect on the stonework, it will be practically impossible to remove for some time, and it becomes more serious.

The campus seems to reflect a distorted sense of humor and lack of proportion lately. The theft of almost $300 worth of decoration from the Homecoming Dance at Hart House marked a new high in juvenile irresponsibility.

The same infantile outlook is manifest in the painting on the walls of the various buildings. What may have been considered as a great stunt at the time shows a lack of imagination and has resulted in damage to buildings with possible serious repercussions to the student body as a whole.

What the students seem to have forgotten is that their actions may cast serious reflections on the student body. The Students' Administrative Council will not condone any irresponsible student pranks.

Sydney Wax, President, SAC.

Plan Translation Bureau

The University of Toronto may have the only foreign language translation office run by students in Canada in the near future. A plan for such an office was brought to the Students' Administrative Council at its meeting Wednesday night. Now the plan has been handed over to the SAC Student Service Commission to investigate.

Dr. F. M. Heichelheim, University College lecturer in Greek and Roman History, explained to the Council the need for such a service. He pointed out that because they don't understand the foreign languages in which many of the best texts are written, students are often forced to use second-rate English texts. This difficulty is also found on the graduate and faculty level, he added.

"You can't ask anyone to know 25 languages", said Dr. Heichelheim. "Many times I have been lucky in the past by finding a student in my class who could translate a language I do not know. But other times it has meant hard work with a dictionary."

Dr. Heichelheim envisioned a translation bureau composed of students with a working knowledge of the various languages.

He thinks it should be self-sufficient. Fees for students would be asked only if a typed translation was required; for grads and faculty a small, reasonable fee would be charged for any work; for outsiders a higher fee would be asked.

"This project is such a good idea, and so valuable, that it should really be given to the university authorities to carry out," commented Professor R. S. Knox, SAC Faculty Advisor. Doug Sherk, Engineering, agreed saying that such a bureau was outside the authority of the SAC.

It was finally decided to pass it to the Student Service Commission for investigation. The commission has been empowered to get in touch with university authorities in connection with the translation bureau

Fees Fuming
Mercenary Mayhem

"More schools, less jails." Those words of John Ruskin come to mind as we realize an increase of 20% in university fees. In a survey taken on the campus, general opinion felt this has resulted in a decreased enrolment.

With medical and engineering fees up $70 to $80, students who are forced to pay their complete tuition themselves find it difficult, in many cases impossible, to earn their tuition fees during one summer. Another point it that scholarshius granted cover only the old fees. The fortunate students are those who have extra funds from other summers as a backlog. Those less fortunate find it necessary to seek part-time employment to supplement their meagre funds. A 1st year Meds student, to cite an example, has 23 hours of straight lectures. Library work plus studying bring the total hours to approximately fifty hours per week. Fifty hours of school does not leave one much time for a part-time job.

Too, a university education is not an education in only book work as most students feel. It should be an education in living and learning of things outside the confines of any one course. The student who must fill all his spare time with a part-time job is denied participation in almost any extra-curricular activity, such as political clubs, science clubs, and cultural activities.

Generally speaking, the arts student, from interviews on and around the campus, does not seem to feel so keenly the new boost in fees. Many felt, as did George Lowe, (II Pass) that thirty-two dollars was a week's salary, true, but "it's the kids in other courses that are really affected." However, Harold Cone, II Pass, felt quite differently. "Our fees definitely should not have been raised. The government should have granted a subsidy. Surely part of the huge sum spent on preparations for the Royal Visit could have been well used by the U. of T."

Leon Bookman, IV Chemical Engineering, whose fees have been increased $80, also felt that the government should have helped the situation. He revealed that various students in his course were already in debt in an effort to clear their fees.

Ricky Rosenbaum, (1 Dental Nursing) agreed with those who felt the government might easily have offered aid here. "In practical terms, the $32 which we are paying over last year's fees, could have paid for regulation shoes and stockings, plus lunches; or $32 could have rented a typewriter." Those who felt most strongly the new expenses are those students who are living away from home. As one put it, "$50 pays three weeks room and board."

To sum up, student feelings seem to be divided on the question of whether or not the increase was just. However, their opinions, generally, were that the situation might have been avoided had our government, Federal or provincial, or both, granted the U. of T. a sum sufficient to cover new expenditures. Recent figures published in a well-known Toronto newspaper show the excess taxes of the Ontario government to be roughly $30 million. Six hundred thousand dollars, that is one-fiftieth of this sum, would have kept fees at last year's level. By simple arithmetic then, fees should not only not have been raised, but they might have been lowered!

DAILY CALIFORNIAN RECEIVES ALL-AMERICAN RATING

Berkeley, Calif., (Exchange) — The Daily Californian, of the University of California, last week received an All-American rating from the Associated Collegiate press, once again attaining its standings set in previous years.

The ratings, which involve news value, writing and editing, make-up, and departments and features, fall into five categories. All-American is the highest.

The Associated Collegiate press, working out of the University of Minnesota, sent a scorebook in which they gave ratings on twenty-three individual departments, and made comments and criticisms.

quiring a loyalty test?" was raised. "The anti-discrimination act passed at the last session applies to race, color, creed, and place of origin, not political belief," was the reply.

Finally, both PC members were asked why they belonged to the Progressive Conservative Party. Because it believes in the least amount of socialism possible was the gist of the answer given.

Red China Admission Debated At UN Club

"The present attitude of the United States toward the Chinese Communist regime seems to be born out of a psychological frustration at having lost her chance in China," said Ali Tayeb at the United Nations club meeting last night.

The recently formed UN club was congratulated by Tayeb on the selection of the topic: "The Problem of the Admission of Communist China to the United Nations Organization."

The problem was classed as a knotty one by the speaker. "I use the word 'knotty' in either of its phonetic alternatives . . . the US has contributed its maximum in introducing the knottiness . . . and the Soviet . . . the naughtiness" he said.

Tayeb, a native of Pakistan, is currently engaged in Graduate studies at this University. He is also lecturing on Asian geography and has written several books on that subject.

The speaker gave a chronological outline of the situation in southeast Asia since the Chinese revolution of 1949. President Roland Corineille, in thanking Tayeb, described the outline as "an excellent skeleton" on which the flesh of future discussions could be built.

The talk, mainly factual, was planned to introduce the problem of admitting Red China to the UN. No definite conclusions were reached, and few opinions offered, although the current policies of the main nations toward the Peking government were sketched.

Tayeb described India's position with regard to Red China as one which recognizes realistically the validity of Peking's Claims. "India has moved to a feeling of disg toward those powers that f see the obvious," he added.

Speaking of Pakistan's poli Tayeb stated: "My governme categorically stands for the reco nition of Communist China by t UN, and the expulsion of Chian who represents no one but a gro of army leaders."

The UN club, teaming up w the International Students' Orga ization, will split into eleven d cussion groups at future meetin Each group will represent a diff ent nation and will attempt to fo mulate a typical, working policy t ward Red China.

These proposals of policy will presented to a mock Security Co cil on December 6th. The m practical suggestions will be d cussed and voted on, whether fo against admission of Commu China to the UNO.

Varsity Reviewing Lecture

All students interested in terested in reviewing for The Varsity are invited to attend a lecture to be given by Jack Gray, an occasional student, on "The Art of Reviewing", at 1.00 p.m. today in Room 13, UC. Present staff members are expected to attend.

This is the last in a series of four open lectures. The previous lectures covered news-reporting and the art of make-up.

This is the third year that luctures have been given by The Varsity staff. Their success makes it probable that they will become an annual institution.

Scholar Hollers Decrease Follers

Last spring the students of the University of British Columbia found that it would cost them thirty dollars more to go to college this year. But they did more than sit back and take it. Through student action, the University President agreed to recommend a slash. By December first they will know by how much their action paid off.

The increase was announced with the publication of a new calendar about April first last year. It was the second in two years, and totalled sixty-one dollars in Arts and Science Faculty.

At the time of the raise, it was assumed that federal aid amounting to $500,000 would be forthcoming. When pressed, the administration announced that if the aid did come through at the assumed sum, they would consider a fee decrease.

With this in mind the students took up the fight. The Ubyssey published a special issue deploring the increase. This fall the student council after receiving complaints, met with the President, Dr. A. M. MacKenzie. He agreed after two and a half hours of discussion to recommend a decrease.

"I realize," he said, "that it is becoming more and more difficult for students with limited means to attend university. It is my hope that within the next few years we will have evolved a situation wh no student of ability will find impossible to attend universit

It all goes to show, said Les mour, editor of The Ubyssey, student protests are of some a

Students Query Porter On Liquor And Health

"Is there a law against serving liquor to minors at a cocktail party in your home?" was one of the questions put to the Hon. Dana Porter at a meeting of the Macdonald-Cartier Club at Trinity last night. Several students present showed signs of relief when they were told by the Attorney-General that he did not know of one.

About twenty-five persons were present to question Kelso Roberts, Progressive Conservative candidate for St. Patrick's riding, and Mr. Porter about provincial party policy. David Fry IV Trinity, president of the McDonald-Cartier Club, introduced topics of discussion which ranged from policy on health and education to the liquor question.

Mr. Porter expressed the belief that a socialized plan of hospitalization such as British Columbia and Saskatchewan now have is not at present desirable because such a plan means that people neither want nor are ready for.

When the topic of conservation was introduced, he said "Talk of devastation of forests is to a large extent nonsense. Every lumber company contract has a condition as to perpetuity cropping." Switching to what David Fry designated as the Attorney General's department, the question "What is the legal position of a company's re-

The Bob Revue, Vic's traditional show will be on review Nov. 5, 6, 7. Songs, skits, girls, gags, glamor, pack the show as they have never packed a Vic show before. One of the highlights of the performances will be the introduction of the new Vic song. Programmes this year will be a souvenir item, as they will have no advertising. The cast has been working steadily at rehearsals, for some time now. Producers of the show are Terry Lawson, Phelps Bell, and George McCowan. The Bob Revue is only a couple of hundred tickets away from a sell-out.

This Election Important Says Salsberg

"This (provincial) election, more than any other before it, is of vital importance to the student and youth in general," Joseph B. Salsberg, Labor Progressive MPP, said at a meeting of the campus LPP club yesterday. "It is not just an ordinary election," he emphasized, but comes at one of the most crucial moments in the history of mankind." We are faced with the basic problem of peace or war, he said.

Salsberg has been a member of the Ontario Legislature since 1943 for the Riding of St. Andrew's and has an active record in the trade union movement. He spoke on "The Student and the Provincial Elections."

"Youth should always be in the forefront in elections, stated Salsberg. "My colleague, A. A. Macleod, and myself have always favored an 18-year-old vote," he added. "Youth will make some mistakes, but they will never be as great as those the oldtimers have and are making."

Salsberg claimed that the present government was not emphasizing a peace solution, but stressing arm-

New Cheer Is Announced For Injured Footballers

A new policy regarding cheers for players injured during a football game was announced yesterday by the Blue and White Society of the Students' Administrative Council.

The Cheerleaders have been instructed to adopt the new yell which will be used in the future; an example of which is:

Yea Bob,
Yea Masterson,
Yea, Yea Bob Masterson.

This yell will be followed by applause. The yell will only be used when the extent of the injury deems it.

John Armour, director of the Blue and White Society, said: "We are asking the cooperation of the entire student body in following the cheerleaders and to leave the necessity of a yell to their discretion. In every case, an applause will be led for an injured player leaving the field."

Chapel Talk Tea Too

The second in the series of Victoria College Union (VCU) sponsored Chapel Services will take place on Sunday, Nov. 4 at 7:00 p.m. in the Victoria College Chapel.

The speaker will be Mr. Kelly, M.A., B.D., S.T.M., of St. Andrew's Church, Toronto, and his topic is "The Hollow Giants." The two student assistants will be Alex Gigeroff and Bill Angus.

The series of talks will deal mostly with student problems and will endeavour to bring students from all faculties the different aspects of religion.

After the service there will be a reception in Wymilwood.

On the grounds that outside financial drives organized by the students divert too much student time and talent from purely student drives, last year's Students' Administrative Council decided not to hold a Feather Fair. However, in view of the large sum the event raised, the Council this year decided that a Fair would be held.

'No American TV' Say UC Debaters

An appeal to the University College Debating Parliament by Ann Wilkinson, first speaker for the government, that they should act as artsmen and not engineers, helped the Parliament to decide last night that "in the interests of Canadian culture private enterprise should not be given complete control of television."

Miss Wilkinson said that a delay was better "than having Betty Grable in our homes," and that free enterprise admits that their programs are for an audience of children of seven or eight. She gave the motto of television in the United States as: "Entertainment for morons."

The resolution was defeated by a vote of 21 to 17, although the first division of the house was 21 to 4 against. Speaking for the government, Harriet Thomson, II UC, said that while advertising may be a "dirty word" even the opera depends on advertising. She said that if television was left to the private stations there would be no resentment against "highbrow stuff" being thrown down arbitrarily. Miss Thomson remarked that the CBC cost Canadians $3,000,000. annually and could afford to be arbitrary and extravagant while private enterprise did not cost a cent.

Charles Hanly, III U.C., second speaker for the opposition, felt that any person whose life is governed by the dollar is not free, and that private enterprise is not interested in the public welfare. He was then asked by Eli Rubin, IV UC, "what has the opposition got against money?"

Other comments were that TV was "a capitalist plot to distract the workingman from constructive thought"—Jack Robson, past president of the UC Lit, and Jack Medcoff, IV UC, "if you don't like television you can turn it off."

OPEN WINDOWS

A Glance At Buddha

By RUTH SCOLNIK

With today's student seeking a broader knowledge of the world in which he lives, the Department of East Asiatic Studies is offering, for the first time since its inception in 1948, a course in Chinese religious and philosophic thought.

Dr. L. C. Walmsley, Head of the Department, had a long and rich experience in educational work in the interior of China. Living there, among people uninterrupted in their culture by the progress of science, he was able to see the Buddhists at meditation, and the Confucian pattern of social relationships at work. Dr. Walmsley is giving this new course, "designed to open up the windows to the student, into the wonderfully rich historical and cultural background of one of the world's longest and greatest civilizations."

Though many of the roots of our Western Culture originated in the Mediterranean areas — Greece, Rome, and the Near East, there is now in progress one of the greatest cultural collisions in history. In the past the West achieved power and control over the world's resources to the extent where it could readily dominate China, and be concerned with her only as it was convenient. Those days are gone forever—China is now awakening with stupendous fervour, "disclosing the power of sleeping giants." Four hundred and fifty million people can no longer be ignored!

This new course in Chinese thought aims at revealing to the student interested in the world's great philosophies and religions, something of the thought processes of this vast nation, its history, and its remarkable cultural continuity.

The course, given to Pass Arts students, is a three year sequence. The first part (given last year) dealt with the history of China, the second with its thought processes, and the third (to be given for the first time next year) with its art. Together, they form the basis for an understanding of China's position and role in the world today.

The University of Toronto, Laval and the University of British Columbia are the only institutions in Canada offering Eastern Asiatic studies. U. of T. has the advantage of the magnificent examples of the Chinese Galleries in the Royal Ontario Museum, evidences of cultural contributions dating from the Shang Dynasty to the present, a period of more than three thousand years. In Chinese culture—the early gains of which have not been lost—we are dealing with a living, not a dead civilization, whose past is the key to the understanding and appreciation of its present and future.

Victoria Band Makes Debut

Yesterday at noon-hour, the SGLIRB (The Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Band), accompanied by eight Victoria cheerleaders, serenaded the campus. It was the first in a probable series of future concerts publicizing the Vic Bob Revue, which will take place in Hart House on Nov. 5, 6, and 7.

The band's tour began at Vic and made its way to Hart House and from there around the island where the U.C. book-store stands. The whole tour lasted about an hour, during which time the numbers of the band fluctuated from twelve to eighteen.

The band played marches while the cheerleaders provided the spirit and a preview of the Bob "kick-line".

'Germany Today' Subject at IRC

"The Russian shadow that has hung over post war plans is nowhere more blatant than in Germany," declared Professor Walfgang Friedmann of the School of Law, in his address to the International Relations Club last night.

To Professor Friedmann the picture of Germany today is one of "fantastic complexities and confusions." However he stressed the deep concern which these problems have for us here in Canada with reference to the 27th Brigade which will soon form part of Eisenhower's forces in Germany.

The allied foothold in Berlin, he said, was a "colossal liability" and one of the "grotesque oddities" of the situation. Once it was clear that four power government was hopeless in Berlin, the West might have quit the city and concentrated on the West German Republic . . . but once the Russians cut them off with the blockade it became a matter of prestige to stay on, he said.

He outlined the circumstances of the partition of Germany and the doctrine of unconditional surrender, calculated to destroy German industrial and military strength forever. Yet today, he said, we are begging her for defence contributions. The reason for this of course, was the despair of collaboration with Russia, which resulted in a radical shift of American opinion in about 194[illegible]. The Americans couldn't very well go on treating Germany as an enemy, and continue the cold war with Russia, especially, he added, in view of the tremendous significance of the German coal resources.

He emphasized the "natural ingenuity and industry" of the Germans as being largely responsible for their recovery from the physical chaos at the end of the war.

"The great psychological blunder" that the Americans made, he said, was to let the Germans know how desperately they needed a German army. This had caused the Germans to continue to "raise the price" of such an army and has increased the hostility of the French. Today, he said, the German communists are telling the people to abandon "disunifying imperialism"; they say they will allow free elections and if necessary withdraw occupation troops. This leaves the allies in the position of enemies of German unity and might create a united Germany dangerously close to Russia.

All Hollywood studios make musicals. A few of these turn out to be great entertainment. But most of them are not meant to be world-beaters, they just make money.

TEXAS CARNIVAL (at Loew's) is no world-beater. Red Skelton and Esther Williams are the people involved, which means this isn't a light song-and-dance deal but comedy and sex have a big place in it. Semi-musical may be the correct classification.

Their two previous efforts, BATHING BEAUTY and NEPTUNE'S DAUGHTER, would indicate that this new one should be top stuff. Nothing happens that is extraordinary.

Red Skelton is potentially one of the funniest visual comics around. But with only average material, Skelton is wasted. His drunk scene, his defeated attempts to cope with cowboy clothes, his general inanity provoke laughs out of you. But there should be more to his business.

Miss Williams is, of course, a splendid specimen of American womanhood. On her, you will find no indiscreet bulge. While it is true that she is frighteningly gigantic and healthy-looking, she is a beautiful example of clean, fresh sex, visually that is. She is a good excuse for Technicolor.

Unlike Jane Russell, Miss Williams has more than one talent—she swims well. In TEXAS CARNIVAL, this swimming is kept down to a dream sequence—which makes her swimming into a graceful and lovely dance.

Keenan Wynn augments the comedy as a Texas millionaire (oil wells and cattle and so forth), but he has only two sequences. It is funny enough of Wynn.

The music and dancing are provided in the main by Howard Keel and Ann Miller. Mr. Keel must be an acquired taste like a fetish for running shoes. Many young ladies, even seemingly intelligent coeds, would immediately attack this opinion. Which is why he is making the money he is. But happy to say, Mr. Keel is much more palatable in TEXAS CARNIVAL than before. His Whoa Emma is quite pleasant, well done in the tradition of the western-music hoedowns.

Miss Miller is a good dancer, and she has an excellent dance number staged by Hermes Pan in which surprisingly Red Norvo and his jazz group appear costumed like stage Indians. And to top it all, "Keep in the Heart of Texas" is revived in the film.

If you wanted to make a case for it, TEXAS CARNIVAL could be called a gentle satire on Texans. It will make you laugh sometimes, and your feet tap sometimes. But after it's all over, what can you say but it's harmless.

But hold onto your hats. The biggest MGM musical, Gene Kelly in AN AMERICAN IN PARIS, is due soon. Naturally you've heard about it. The magazines and the critics have been going crazy about this effort.

And judging from what Kelly musicals have been like recently since he himself has been allowed a hand in the creation, like ANCHORS AWEIGH, TAKE ME OUT TO THE BALL GAME, ON THE TOWN, this new musical is worth seeing for anybody. Unless you just hate musicals. And, maybe even for you too.

After a carry-over week, new movies are taking over at most first-run theatres. Worth seeing are the new Alec Guinness picture, THE LAVENDER HILL MOB (at the Odeon-Hyland next week), THE DAY THE EARTH STOOD STILL, the science-fiction picture hailed as more intelligent and less deadly serious than its predecessors (at the Imperial), and of course, AN AMERICAN IN PARIS (at Loew's).

Round Table Held On Canoe Paddling

Canoe Paddling in Canadian History was the subject of an original round table discussion by third year history students Thursday. It was the first of a series of round-tables to be held up every Monday on leading aspects of history, to occur every Thursday.

The first question under fire was "What were the origins of the canoe?"

"The canoe is a Good Thing anyway," declared Bud Japp Junior, Vic.

"The canoe is here to stay," added Bruce Cameron III UC.

Jean Leith III Vic expressed the hope that one of the history department staff would give a personal demonstration of canoe paddling at a future round table.

The discussion also touched upon the formation of a new society on the campus, The CHOP.

"The Campus Hair-Raisers on Parade is an organization dedicated to raising glorious moments in history on the campus," explained Trudi Trumperton III Vic, Social Directress, who went on to express the hope that next year's float parade will see a float from Modern History.

ament and further sacrifices. He went on from here to blast the Conservatives, and to outline the LPP platform.

In education, Salsberg said that the LPP "differed fundamentally from the Tory (and by and large the Liberal) in their mental approach.

"We reject the Tory idea of narrowing down educational opportunities," he stated. "The government should supplement say two million dollars to reduce fees," he suggested.

"We should have a provincial university similar to New York City College," he went on "where workers and farmers could enroll at nominal fee rates."

"Most of the members in the Ontario Parliament are 'rubber stamps,' concluded Salsberg. 'MacLeod and I are better than 25 of them.' "

New Club Aids Foreign Students

If you happen to be one of the many foreign students studying at Canadian Universities and are perplexed amidst the chaos of new impressions in a new country, take heart. There is a group of Canadians who are especially concerned with your welfare, and have formed an organization called Friendly Relations with Overseas Students (FROS) to help you.

There are 2,000 foreign students studying in Canada annually, representatives of many countries and religions; some receive good attention, others don't. Interested Canadians, realising this, have invited representatives of national student, religious, and educational groups, to further friendly relations with these students. Although the FROS is a national organization, it has a Toronto sub-committee, and a student sub-committee on this campus which numbers among its members representatives of the ISS, Newman Club, SCM, and other student organizations.

The aim of the FROS is twofold: to acquaint the students with Canada's people, and institutions, and equally important, to give Canadian an opportunity to learn more of the people and institutions represented by students from abroad.

The Community is concerned in establishing direct contact with these students, and in helping them make arrangements for such things as living quarters, entertainment, hospitality in Canadian homes, and vacation visits. From the moment of their arrival there is someone to receive them, and from then on, assistance is given along academic and extra-curricular lines.

Last year, the FROS helped students with language difficulties, organized tours for them to various centers of Canadian industry, government, and business, so that they get an idea of the workings of Canadian democracy. Canadians, on the other hand, phone up to ask students for Thanksgiving weekends, Christmas dinner, and make them part of the Canadian family and customs on such occasions.

As there is, as yet, no easy way to obtain a complete list of foreign students, everyone is asked by the FROS to register with Mrs. Kay Riddell, their new Toronto office, in the Household Science Building, or to phone MI. 4884.

You will soon find that Canadians are eager to extend their hospitality to you, and to contribute to the good impressions you will be taking with you.

University Education Just Start—Warden

"Many expect a university education to give them a passport to life," Hart House Warden Nicholas Ignatieff said last night in the first of the Health Service lecture series at the Psychiatric Hospital before a small group of six.

"The feeling should be, however, that the university is only the beginning in life—there is much more later," he said.

Speaking on "The University and the Community," the Warden suggested that college extra-curricular activities should fill this gap as interest in the arts, world affairs and politics is something that is developed when a youth is near or at maturity.

"Extra-curricular activities help develop the whole man, aid latent talents, assist in developing judgment, improve physical condition and encourage initiative," he said. Warden Ignatieff also described these activities as aiding the undergrad in becoming conscious of the great opportunities in Canada, something which many accept as "matter of fact."

"The university shows the way in medicine, engineering and other professions, to a lesser extent in literature and creative art, but the university begins to slip when it comes to human affairs," he stated.

The Warden then mentioned the state of our affairs as a whole in the world today. "Never in our history have we been nearer a precipice," he said; "man has not learned to control his environment."

"Artificially stimulated emotion, as displayed by pep rallies and cheerleaders, exhibits exactly what a university should not be," he continued. "These artificial emotional efforts cut right across the sense of individualism prevalent in North America the spontaneous desire to do something together.

Warden Ignatieff criticized the effect of mass efforts at artificial emotion as tending to produce a "bunch of sheep", being led to support any cause, no matter what it is. In its innocent way, this cut across the sense of individualism and dragged us down, he said.

Teams At Full Strengt Mustangs Out For Upse As Blues Seek 9th Wi

By BRUCE MACDONALD

With an injury list so short that Coach Bob Maste can hardly believe his own eyes and the team in better dition generally than they have been all season, the Bl travel to London tomorrow afternoon in an attempt to ex their unbeaten streak to nine games and break a 15-year that has kept them winless in London town for 15 long ye

Although Varsity teams managed to tie the Mustangs on their home ground in 1937 and 1947, the Blues have not come home from Western with a win since the championship year of 1936. With practically all hope of retaining the Yates hardware gone for the Metrasmen, they will be gunning to save face by upsetting the Blues on their trip towards the championship.

Coach Bob Masterson is as worried about this game as he has been about any during the season, even though he has a couple of new plays up his sleeve to try on the Mustangs, and hopes that a few new defensive formations will be what the doctor ordered as far as halting the Mustang offensive is concerned.

Bob Leeming and Jim Butler, rookie guard with a broken hand, along with centre Ray Yakasovitch, who is bothered with an ankle injury are the three Blues who will not see action tomorrow. Roy McMurtry, who saw some action against the Gaels last week will fill in at guard for the injured Butler.

Bob Garside, one of the Blues' most potent defensive weapons this season, will be back in action at his left secondary spot after missing the game last week. Bob Rumball, recovered from a bout with some sprained ribs, will play defensive secondary on the right hand side of the line. Al Haig, whose injured Achilles tendon has kept him from his usual job of kicking, will be doing some of the punting, along with Tony Adams who has capably filled Haig's shoes in the past three games.

Like the Blues, the Mustangs appear to be at almost full strength for this contest. Quarterback Truant was back in action against McGill last week after a shoulder injury earlier in the season, but was injured again last weekend and is a doubtful starter for the game tomorrow. Fitzgerald is back with Metrasmen after missing the f the season due to an untimely pendix operation.

Theoretically, the Mustangs still in the running for the collegiate championship, but Q must beat the Redmen to give even a mathematical hope, and way the McGill squad has been ing these past weeks, that is a hope indeed.

With much practice time week devoted to polishing up tle-used pass attack, the Blue be expected to take to the at least a few occasions tomo should the weather prove suitable

The Hockey Season Is Here. Already with the thermometer dipping to the freezing point, intercollegiate and intramural teams have begun their practices. About sixty hopefuls for the Blues turned out at Varsity Arena on Monday and Wednesday but with the first out on Wednesday the group has been pared down to a manageable size of approximately thirty.

It appears at this early date that the Blues will be packed with power offensively, but the defensive situation is at present one of great doubt. Coach Bill Wade has an abundance of good forwards this year but the loss of stellar goalie Ev Leuty and defencemen Porky MacDougall and John Addison has left a large defensive gap.

Up front Wade has veterans Ernie Frey, Norm Fox, Pete Vernon, Al Conboy, Bill Yeo, Jerry Henderson and Doug Dies all fighting for their old positions. Besides these performers there is an impressive number of newcomers who should add a great deal of scoring punch to the team. Foremost amongst the new players is Jack McKenzie who last year played with the Marlboro Seniors. Other members of the Leafs' chain that should show well are Don Rope, now playing soccer, and Jack Weldrake.

Red Stevens, late of the Oshawa Generals, is almost a sure bet to tie down a regular position on the team. Logie, Davison, Holden, Bennett, Fasan, Lawson and Fullerton are the other forwards that survived the first chop.

The only regular member of last year's defence corps that has been out so far, is Joe Kane. Fingland, Machin, and Prendergast, who have all played for either the Intermediates or the Junior B's, are currently engaged in attempting to secure regular defence positions. Others who are still in the running for the rearguard division are Moreau, Stewart, Andrew, and Dalgleish.

At present there are four net-minders vying for Leuty's old position. All have played with Varsity's intercollegiate teams before. Doug Orr, regular goalie in the 1949-50 season is out to regain his old position. John Milne and Bruce Taylor, former Junior B goalies, and Jim Ross, last year's intermediate goalie are the other three seeking the netminder's position.

Two footballers are expected to augment the squad when the rugby season ends. Gerry Fitzhenry will likely take a second lease on his defence position, while Johnny Adams is expected to annex a forward position.

Intermediate practices will commence on November 19.

Meeting

There will be an important meeting of the Varsity sports staff, on Tuesday, November 10 at 1:00 p.m., in Room 78, University College. The following are urged to attend: John Gray, Bruce North, Bob Godson, Frank Quinlan, Barry Thomas, Jack Sturman, Al Roger, Irwin Guttman, Gerry Hollyer, Bill Corcoran, Jim Proudfoot, Bill Wilson, David Rotenberg, Mal Crawford, Carolyn Schmidt, Carol Logan, Joan Haggart, Kay Schenk.

Jr. Skule Defeats Dents 7-0 All Scoring In Last Quarter

By BILL WILSON

Yesterday afternoon, the red-hot Junior SPS squad extended their unbeaten streak to practically clinch first place in their group. They edged a fighting Dents team that needed a win to stay in the running, 7-0. All the scoring was done in the last quarter when the winners notched a single and a converted touchdown.

The Dentists outplayed Skule by a fair margin in the abbreviated first half but failed to score. One touchdown by Dents Jack Gilbert was called back because of an offside on the play. However, they did hem the Engineers in their own end for most of the half as a result of a partially blocked kick and a long pass. Dents Bill Jeffry was taken off with a dislocated shoulder, the first of two injuries in the game.

Skule's long kickoff to start the second half set Dents back on their ten yard line and their kick on third down was almost blocked and went into touch at the fifteen. The Dentists set them back after two running plays and then blocked the attempted placement.

Taking over, Dents marched down into Skule territory led by quarter Jack Gilbert who burst through for two long gains. They were pushed back to centre and Pete O'Connor's nice put was taken out to the fifteen. SPS quick-kicked on second down and then the teams changed ends for the final quarter.

O'Connor's kick was brought out to the ten and Horton's kick was run back across the field for a small gain by Dent's Jack Wall. Gilbert's pass was intercepted by Norm Newell for Skule. Bill Horton's pass was caught by Fred Smale for a first down. Then came the first real break of the game for the Engineers. A beautiful sixty-yard boot by Horton was fumbled and Skule recovered on the thirty from where Horton hoisted a high spiral into touch-in-goal for a single.

Taking possession on the forty Dents tried a long pass by O'Connor and then had one intercepted. A long Skule toss was also intercepted. On the first play Wall took a hand-off from Gilbert and broke off-tackle for fifteen yards and a first down. On the play Skule's Bruce Day who had been playing a good game was hurt making the tackle and carried off on stretcher. Dents elected to run the ball on third down and Skule held. This was the real turning point.

Horton threw two passes in succession to Newell and Smale to take play to the one yard line. On second down Ollie Babirad went across for the major. Pete Bannister's pass to Smale off a fake placement was good for the extra point. This ended the Dents' hopes and the game ended a few plays later.

Both teams came up with terrific performances along the line. Bob Varey and Fred Spratt were particularly outstanding for the winning Skulemen. Wall and Gilbert played well in a losing game.

There was only one soccer game reported yesterday, and in this, the University College squad trimmed the Trinity A entry by a 3-1 count. The Buttery boys held to Redmen to a one all draw at the end of the first half, but the UC'ers broke loose with two tallies in the second session. Dalinaki was the star of the game potting two tallies for the winners.

One the lacrosse front, SPS III edged the Vic II entry by a 2-1 count in a contest marred by numerous penalties. The Engineers were given five sentences while the Vicsters were banished four times. The Skulemen took a two goal lead in the first quarters on tallies by Beck and Kingstone and were shut out from there on in. But the margin was enough as all that the Vic team could age was a tally by Hulbert in third.

In the five o'clock encou St. Mike's A drubbed the firsts by a 12-6 score. Led b phy who netted no less than tallies, the Mikemen compl outplayed their opponents. T and Morrissey added two apiec complete the winner's total. W led the losing Vicsters with tallies.

In the final bowla tilt of the Knox beat Meds V, 6-4. The was pretty even but the Meds were hampered by five penal At the half the score was 3-3 the game was in doubt until final minute. Graham led the ning Theologs with four and Walsh netted two for the ers.

On the volleyball floor, beat Law 15-3, 8-15, 15-10. took Jr. Vic two straight 15-6. Architecture lost the to Pharmacy 15-7 but came to take the last two 15-7 and In the final tilt Wycliffe C St. Mikes E 15-13 and 15-9.

aby Blues At Stadium Today
ilt May Decide Championship

h Jack Kennedy's Intermed- ootballers square off against estern Colts today at 2 p.m., game that may decide the ionship of the Intermediate ollegiate Football League.

e Baby Blues, come off with in this encounter, they will rought home the first Inter- ate Championship to Varsity e 1951 season. Unbeaten in eague games and an exhibi- ill, the Blues take on a West- eam that has lost two and one in League play, one loss ng at the Varsity meds. As the schedule calls total of four games for each squads in the three team a win by Varsity today will second place Western no e to take the tilt.

For this big game, Coach Kennedy's twelve will be undermanned both offensively and defensively, as that old nemesis, Mr. Injury Jinx has forced three of the Intermeds to view proceedings from the sidelines, with a possible three more players being forced out of the game. Halfback Bob Kimaff, with water on the knee, and ends Don Smith suffering from a bad charley horse and Ted Lansky with torn ligaments in the ankle are the Baby Blue stalwarts who will definitely be out of the game.

The doubtful starters are Captain Al George, Guard Don Mattison and centre John MacKenzie. MacKenzie's ailment is a pulled muscle, while Mattison's hurt is a sore shoulder.

Gerry Fitzhenry and Al Geekie will once again be at the quarter spot, directing the team's passing attack. The Blues attack has been most successful through the air, thanks to these players and the sure fingers of the ends. As a matter of fact, so strong is their passing, that most of the team's touchdowns have been via the pass route.

Although the Colts were defeated at the hands of the Intermeds the last time the teams met, the score was only 15-7 for the Blues, and this was largely to the fact that the Varsity seconds capitalized on numerous Western fumbles. Coach Kennedy expects that the Western team will be vastly improved for this tilt, resulting in a tough game for both squads.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

As was supposed by most of those who speculate on these matters, McMaster's venture into the kick-'em-and-clout-'em company of the ORFU was a short one. Ivor Wynne, McMaster's athletic director, announced the other day that this year was his college's first and last in the semi-pro league.

Wynne said that he didn't expect his team to win in the bigger company, but he didn't like the idea of watching college boys take the physical beating from older, tougher opponents accustomed to what goes in semi-pro football. He added that Windsor and Sarnia had agreed at the first of the season that they would limit themselves to a couple of imports this season. Beaches denied that any such agreement had been made. However, that was how it started out all right, and when Sarnia, with an all-Canadian team, started to pull away from the others right off the bat, Windsor and Toronto brought in more imports.

McMaster won two decisive victories over the floundering Windsor Royals, and had a couple of close ones with Beaches, but lost all their games with Beaches and Sarnia. Nevertheless, Mel Hawkrigg, Marauders left halfback, won the scoring championship with 70 points, including 13 touchdowns, in spite of the fact that McMaster played only half the number of games the others did.

The purpose behind entering the ORFU was to get out of Intermediate ball and show what they could do in Senior, in the hope of gaining entry into the Senior Intercollegiate League, a project that has been close to Mac hearts for many years. If anyone on our staff had told us three months ago that McMaster would win one game in the ORFU, we would have banished him to the denizens of Toike Oike. The big difference between college and semi-pro ball, outside of the use of imports, is on the line. That extra two or three years makes a big difference in the biff and bruise business.

Lacking a sixth team, the Intercoll league would have to provide off days for one team every week if it let McMaster in. Personally, we can't see anything wrong with that—it's a long season. A fifth team would provide variety badly needed in a four team league.

DON'T BE A FLOP - AT FRIDAY NIGHT'S HOP

Soul Expression

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Ungentle Art

Last Friday we wrote an editorial in which it was suggested that undergraduates ought to be given a lesson in "the gentle art of raising hell". Students today often seem unnecessarily prosaic and lack the imagination which characterized their illustrious predecessors.

In the past week two events have occurred which might question the validity of our judgment. One was the theft of the Bracken trophy. The other was the defacing of university buildings with paint.

Whoever took the Bracken Trophy showed the imagination and initiative that we had believed lacking on the campus. Our so-called challenge to action backfired onto our own laps. We were the victims of student ingenuity.

And the final touch of genius consisted in sending the Trophy to The Manitoban — whose articles we have been over-zealously reprinting. Or so the Trophy-takers seemed to indicate.

The whole scheme involved clever planning and careful execution. No harm resulted from the action. Nothing was destroyed, no expenses were entailed.

In contrast to this pretty piece of engineering we have the actions of the paint smearers, who accomplished nothing but disfigured much.

That the whole idea was conceived and executed by students on this campus seems to be a warranted assumption. It is also a shameful confession.

To deface University of Toronto buildings with indelible oil paint was a simple act of vandalism. In indicates a nihilistic force which has no right to exist, let alone reason, in the university or the world at large.

The plan was entirely pointless and not alleviated by any originality of idea. All sense of humour was mutilated by the sheer joy of making a mess.

Puppies and kittens are chastized for misbehaving, yet they finally grow up to be respectable, even funloving members of the family. We would suggest, however, that university students ought to be housebroken before they are allowed to leave home.

Acts of destruction such as this paint smearing episode tend to show that those responsible are not only dull-witted and unimaginative, but also nasty, brutish and mean.

Tinged With Shoddine

Alarmed by recent threats to free speech in American Universities, our Canadian University Press Editor points out some of the danger points and student reaction to them.

By RALPH WINTROB

While we on Canadian campi are dissipating our energies worrying about whether coeds are to be allowed in the front door of the Arts Building or whether we should adopt the principle of an exchange of Russian and Canadian students, a few big American universities are fighting to protect free speech on their campi. Intellectual freedom is slipping out from under them.

But more than that the American university community is up against a profound question: Where do we stand in relation to the democratic principles of the right of the universities to seek truth? How many of these rights, guaranteed in the Bill of Rights primarily, can we give up or suspend temporarily for the sake of national security?

The last few weeks have seen further efforts to restrict free speech on various American campi. In each case the question has descended to a matter of people of dubious loyalty being permitted to speak or else an open conflagration to prevent Communists from having a campus outlet. Yet where fear of being labelled has conflicted with the rights of a university to seek the truth, from whosoever's lips it may come, students have taken up the cudgels for right and truth.

The first such example occurred this year at the University of California, seat of the controversy over signing a loyalty oath last year.

On the U. of C. campus there is already a ruling that no political speeches may be held on the campus unless both sides are represented. This has been in force a long time. To get around it, a tradition of long standing has grown up that anyone who wants to spout politics sets up a soapbox and a loudspeaker at one of two gates, Sather or West, just outside the grounds and says his piece. It is the U. of C.'s Hyde Park.

Just before the present semester started the Berkeley city council was asked to approve a motion to ban sound trucks, loudspeakers and public meetings at various points in the city. The reason: they were main traffic arteries and these meetings, it was said, obstructed traffic. Two of the places mentioned were, of course, Sather and West Gate.

It did not take long for the issue to be set before the students and action was forthcoming. Nor did it take long for the issue to become tinged with traces of subversity. Two prominent supporters of the ordinances are actually prominent members of the California staff. One is Prof. H. E. Stone, Dean of Students.

When a motion was put before the Association of Students of the University of Californ[ia] student council), Stone brought the issue into the open. Said he: I aim to prevent com[mu]tinged organizations from being allowed to around the campus. "I have talked to ab[ou]exclaimed, "who have had difficulty in get[ti]because of the Sather Gate rallies. Pro[fe]employers hear about the rallies and get [the] pression that the university is a bunch of re[d]

However, the council decided to spark a ca[m]to defeat the ordinances. Contact was mad[e] campus clubs, interviews were held to ga[u]feeling of the students and the campus ne[ws] The Daily Californian, opened its pages to [di]sions of opinion. Finally a special committe[e] formed to organize the fight.

When the city council held an open mee[ti]give a chance to the citizens to air thei[r] the result was an overwhelming majority of [th]opposed to the gagging measures. The motio[n] sent back to the city attorney for reconsider[a]Today Sather Gate and West Gate are st[ill] scenes of rallies for all who want to use

But there is no reaso nto suspect that the is dead.

At Ohio State University, the trustees [h]passed a ruling recently that would ba[r] speakers on the campus whom the president not think the students ought to hear. This as the result of an address by a well known Dealer, whose views are now considered [un]Thus when it comes to politics, 25,000 student be spoon-fed with what the president thinks little minds should absorb. The authorities [re]even to hear a presentation of the objection the students.

"And while occurrences like this take plac[e] over the United States," exclaimed The Californian, editorially, "the public is conse subjected to a lot of prattle concerning the job American universities must do in tra tomorrow's citizens."

The United States has become the [w]champion of freedom as the greatest and glorious democracy. But its greatness is about the edges with shoddiness as principle sacrificed for so-called expediency. But Am college students give an even shoddier impr when they allow fear and labelling to [fo]their intellectual freedom. For without it, a versity no longer deserves to be called [a] students no longer are the vigorous protecti freedom and democracy.

Curses, scooped again!
Yes, the FEARLESS campus newspaper has once more outdone the holder (?) of the Bracken Trophy. Our reading public is wondering at your reticence to expose Wednesday's foul plot. (Which, incidentally, was intended to sabotage this year's extravagant production of Skule Night, by breaking Engineering Spirit through the loss of our proud symbol.)

However, "Honest Engineering Methods" have triumphed over the amalgamated forces of The Western Gazette and The Varsity. Have you dropped altogether the "Uni" and arrived at "Varsity" as synonomous with "Toronto"? Must you in "representing" the University collude with the enemy to make" news? Would your "blow by blow account", in the words of a staffer, had peared had you been succ in your week-old plotting.

Dissenting Majority

Editor, The Varsity:

I read the editorial in yesterday's Varsity in which Mr. I. S. Wishart claims that there should be no Mock Parliament election, because most students are not interested in that election and because, moreover, the Mock Parliament discusses only federal issues, in time when the provincial elections are on the doorstep.

What authority has Mr. Wishart to talk in the name of the majority of the students? Did he question most students of this university on the subject, or was he appointed by the "dissenting majority" to talk in their name?

Secondly, what is wrong with discussing Dominion issues? Are the Dominion issues not the most important ones for all those who are (or should be) concerned with the future of Canada?

Imagine now that not only the students, but the large public followed the example given by Mr. Wishart and fell into a political apathy. It would give the small, but ambitious subversive minorities a chance to win their struggle for power. How can you ever maintain democracy, if people are disinterested in politics?

It might be suggested that the institution of the Mock Parliament and the election for it is useless, because it does not affect the current issues anyhow. That is right. But it gives the student stimulus to think about these issues; it draws his attention to the good and bad points of the different political parties; it prepares him for the time when he will be expected to act as a responsible voter for the Canadian government.

YEAR'S CLOSEST GAME MUSTANGS - BLUES TIE

By MAL CRAWFORD

Western Mustangs came the closest of any team yet this season to a victory over Varsity's undefeated Blues, as they held the first place Toronto squad to a 13-13 tie at London Saturday. Though both of Western's touchdowns were scored on "breaks" — a Varsity fumble, and a blocked kick that rolled out in the clear nowhere near a Varsity player, a Western victory was prevented only by the convert attempts being blocked or partially blocked by end Al Brown.

The game was played in near-freezing weather that made catching passes or pitch-outs difficult, and the field, though well-cleared of snow, did not provide good footing. Western, depending entirely on the single wing for their wide running plays, was probably not handicapped as much by these factors as Toronto, whose faster-breaking T end plays depend on how quickly the backs and blockers can get out wide, and the wet ground made this kind of tough.

Varsity was running well through the line, as Oneschuk, Bewley and MacFarlane clipped off big gains on traps and quick-openers after taking hand-offs from Alex Lawson. Their end sweeps were not as effective, Mustang ends Beatty and McNichol broke many of them up on the line of scrimmage.

Even at that, the Blues outgained the Mustangs on the ground. The starting trio of ball carriers, MacFarlane, Bewley and Oneschuk, gained nearly 200 yards net amongst them. Bill MacFarlane played his best game of the season as he racked up a total of 78 yards net from scrimmage. Oneschuk was hurt near the end of the second quarter, and Bewley hurt his shoulder again at the start of the second half, so neither was able to play more than half the game. Bob Garside, who was the best man on the field defensively, went well in Oneschuk's place offensively, his first chance this year to carry the ball with any regularity, and Bob Rumball, after an absence of several weeks due to injury, took over for Bewley.

The Mustangs behaved like they owned the park (?) in the first period, holding the Blues deep in their own territory as fullbacks Gino Fracas and Jacques Belec, and left half Bob Smith smashed off and inside the Varsity tackles for repeated gains. All they could get though was a single point kicked by Humberside grad Bud Obal.

Then Varsity started to roll. Pushed back to their own end, Western fumbled a short kick on their 26 and Rumball recovered. In five plays, Bewley was over for a touchdown.

But Varsity, whose backs lost the ball five times on fumbles, were too gentlemanly to take such a gift without returning it. MacFarlane fumbled on his 30 and Murray Henderson ran to the 14 with it, carrying over himself five plays later. Al Brown blocked the convert attempt.

At the end of the third period, Varsity put on one of the scoring drives that they have become famous for this year about once a game. Obal had kicked two singles to put Western ahead 8-7, and Jim Carrol, hitting off Varsity's left tackle from a single wing power play almost every play, had been driving the Blues back into their own end. From the 25, Rumball, Adams and Dale drove all the way to a TD, Dale carrying around end for the score.

A blocked kick by McNichol bounded into the clear on Varsity's 30 early in the fourth and Beatty, right end, who incidentally played a great game there after being switched from the backfield, got it and ran unmolested into the end zone. Brown deflected the ball on the convert attempt and the score was tied.

Western drove back to Varsity's 30 on ground plays with three minutes to go.

New Attempt Orient Frosh During Year

Interest sheets filled out this year by all arts freshmen have been used to encourage greater freshmen participation in All Varsity activities. This is the first step taken under the new Freshmen Orientation program begun this year by the SAC.

For the past seven or eight years UC has been using such freshmen interest cards. Dave Rose, IV UC, said that the 35 UC frosh indicating an interest in dramatics were contacted by Robert Gill and 15 have since worked under him. He felt this to be very encouraging.

Four tea-dances under the auspices of the Co-ordinating Committee of the SAC will also be held this fall as a part of the orientation program. The first of these will be Friday, Nov. 16 at Victoria College.

Tea-dances will also be held Nov. 23 at UC, Dec. 7 at Trinity and Dec. 14 at St. Mike's. It is hoped to have informal discussion groups at these tea-dances, with "congenial members of the faculty" on hand, Rose said.

This program is the first step in fostering a University-wide perspective, and is necessarily on a small scale, Rose explained. Next year activities may be broadened to include freshmen from both Meds and SPS. Rose expressed the hope that the program may have a "year by year unity and continuity."

SAC Cancels Rally Decries Vandalism

As a result of a directive from the Executive Committee of the Students' Administrative Council, Blue and White Society plans for a pep rally next Friday night have had to be cancelled.

This was only part of the program undertaken at a special meeting held last Friday, in an effort to avoid a continuance of last week's hooliganism on the campus.

A special committee, including the president, vice - president, finance commissioner, faculty representatives, and secretary-treasurer of the SAC, has been set up to investigate the whole situation.

The first duty of the new committee will be "to attempt to get to the bottom of the sign painting episode" stated SAC President Syd Wax. Investigations are scheduled to begin today.

All persons who know anything of the situation or of the people involved are being asked by the committee to get in touch with the SAC office in Hart House, either by phone or in person. Wax emphasized that the names of those people who possessed any information concerning the event would be treated in the utmost confidence by the Committee.

Although the immediate object of the newly formed Committee was to investigate last Wednesday night's vandalism, a long term project was also epvisioned. The secondary aim of the Committee would be to study mob psychology and make a positive effort to prevent such occurrences in the future. Concern was expressed by those at Friday's meeting over the present spirit of rowdyism which seemed to be infecting the campus.

Aside from cancelling the pap rally, which seemed advisable to the committee under the circumstances, positive measures were taken to avoid retaliatory actions by the colleges concerned.

Better police protection of university grounds was planned for over the weekend. In addition to this, the presidents of the colleges affected by the incident were asked to do all they could to prevent any retaliation by members of their faculties.

A letter explaining the actions being taken by the Students' Administrative Council was sent to the CAPUT whose regular meeting was scheduled for Friday afternoon.

Presidents of the UC and Engineering student governments, the vice-president, finance commissioner, secretary-treasurers and faculty representatives of the SAC and the Editor of The Varsity attended the emergency meeting caled by SAC President Sid Wax on Friday.

The UC presidents Dave Rose and Marg Fleming, did not take part in the discussion which resulted in the cancellation of the pep rally.

EAC

An open meeting of the External Affairs Commission (EAC) of the Students' Administrative Council (SAC) has been called for Thursday evening to discuss the whole question of Canadian participation in international student affairs, and in particular the invitation of Russian students to Canada.

At this meeting all students on the campus will be free to ask questions about Russian student exchange, and reasons for Toronto's refusal to support the proposal at the NFCUS conference.

Because the decision of EAC to refer their decision on Russian student exchange back to the student governments for ratification, it was felt that a meeting open to all students should be held to inform students on the whole issue.

Time and place will be announced in The Varsity later this week.

Santa Arrives Early At Western Game

"Follow the Blues, we'll back them up if they win or they lose" was the theme as the Blues tied the Mustangs this weekend at London in the coldest game of the season. London papers gave the temperature for Saturday afternoon as 27 degrees.

Car rugs and blankets were worn in four ways. Some people sat on their blankets, in preference to the cold, snowy benches. Others had blankets over their knees in the traditional manner. Blankets were worn as stoles over the shoulders. (Little Memorial Stadium is decidedly windswept). The final variation on this theme was an Indian-style arrangement with a plaid blanket wrapped around the head and shoulders and a tweeper peeking forth.

A new use has been found for Tweepers! One of the cheerleaders says that they made showy earmuffs. He admitted that these improvided ear-muffs were not wind proof but that they were in the spirit of a rugby weekend.

The Varsity band, particularly the brass section, were hampered by the cold weather. After the first quarter the keys on their instruments froze. The cheerleaders did cartwheels on every possible occasion, either out of enthusiasm or in order to restore their circulation.

Blue and White policy announced last week regarding cheering injured players from the field was well received. Cheer-leaders said this was on of the most enthusiastic crowds seen this season.

Santa Claus came to town a little early. In his well-known red and white outfit he shook hands with as many of his admirers as possible. Between St. Nick, "Jingle Bells" and the snow, several befuddled fans wondered if they had experienced a lost month or two and it were now Christmas.

Even though it was the mardi-gras weekend and a time for rejoicing some sharp characters kept their noses to the grindstone. A blue and white "vote Liberal" sign was hoisted near the score board.

One sensible cheer-leader from Western wore slacks in place of the usual short skirt. Another did cartwheels in snow boots, and very well too.

A fire at half-time on the field served to warm as many of the spectators as could gather near it. It was a very short fire though, newspapers don't burn for very long, but Saturday afternoon every possible warming method was tried.

Censure U of T! No Tarp

The Toronto Argonauts won their rugby game on Saturday afternoon by a convertless touchdown, on a muddy, snow-covered field for which the stadium officials were blamed. Both Toronto afternoon papers said that the U of T officials were lax in not having the new tarpaulin out to protect the field for the game.

What they had forgotten was that the tarpaulin does not belong to the stadium nor to the "Big Four league", but to the Canadian Rugby Union and is reserved for the Grey Cup games. Secretary T. H. C. Alison of the CRU said on Saturday that the CRU might have allowed the tarp to be used, but that there was no request from the league.

Even if permission had been obtained, the tarp could not have been used. It takes four hours to lay the canvas and the ground was already covered with snow on Friday afternoon by the time the Intermediate game was finished

Pots To Keep Original Name They Like It

It has been rumoured on the campus recently that the students in Physical and Occupational Therapy are to have their course's name changed to Occupational and Physical Therapy. A group of these students, when informed of the rumour, expressed amazement. They couldn't understand why it would even be considered.

"You can't pronounce the name in short form," one girl said. None of them objected to being called POTS. It's distinctive, they say—like Skule—an easy name to remember and pronounce.

According to Miss F. Laidlaw, the Secretary of P and OT, no such change has actually been contemplated. In June of this year the Senate gave official approval to the name, Division of Physical and Occupational Therapy in the Faculty of Medicine. To change the name a petition would have to be sent through Dean MacFarlane of the Faculty of Medicine, then to the Faculty Council and finally to the Senate.

New Radio Club

Ottawa (CUP) — A workshop in radio broadcasting has been introduced by the Extension department of Carleton College here.

Some of the fifteen two-hour sessions will be held at radio station CFRA. Instruction is offered in speech and diction, writing, production, and planning and broadcasting a series of programs originating in the workshop.

United States Inciting War Says Nearing

"If some force can restrain the United States government and prevent it from preparing and inciting war, there is a chance that the cold war will not become a hot one," said the guest speaker, Scott Nearing, at the Friday meeting of the Campus Fellowship of Reconciliation.

Nearing claimed the capitalist world is dying and being replaced by a rising communist world. "The world power centre of 1910 has been broken and a new power centre is being built around Asia in association with the Soviet Union and not under its direction," said Nearing.

"The western world has a stake in war because it is a civilized community and war is a fundamental of civilization. Never in U.S. hostory has there been a period of full employment until there has been a full-scale war," he said.

"The eastern world however, has a stake in peace. In 1941-45 the Soviet Union bore the brunt of the Nazi attack and as a result one-third of Soviet economy was destroyed," stated Nearing. He further stated that the Marxists have been consistently anti-militarists because war is wasteful.

CAMFOR has as its real ideal the promoting of peace and invites guest speakers both pro and con to speak at their meetings. Scott Nearing, speaker at the latest meeting taught Sociology at Temple University in the United States from 1903 to 1917 when he was indicted before the US federal court after voicing opposition to World War I.

UWO Denies Boozed Band

London, Ont. (CUP)—University of Western Ontario bandleader Brock Hammond denied at a University Students Council meeting recently that drinking had been responsible for the failure of the Western band to appear at half-time of the Western-Toronto football game in Varsity Stadium.

He said that numerous factors made a half-time appearance undesirable. The decision was his own, he said.

The main reason for the affair was the late arrival of the band in Toronto. Hammond pointed out that there was not time for a pre-game run-through of the intricate half-time flag formation.

He admitted that two band members had been drinking but denied that this had been a major factor in his decision to stay off the field.

In The Dark

Allan Ford, a Varsity photographer, was snapped enlarging his own picture, due to the shortage of darkroom assistants. Unfortunately female help, though appreciated, would be impossible, as the darkroom is in Hart House. To complicate the situation still further, the Hart House Camera Club also uses the room.

Females Too!

Detroit, Michigan. (Exchange)—Wayne University too, has a "Hart House Farm" known as the Schmidt Foundation. This student-operated farm offers facilities for hayrides and dancing, and chicken dinners will be served groups or organizations if reservations are made. In speaking of the Schmidt Foundation, The Detroit Collegian, Wayne's student newspaper, makes no mention of discrimination against female guests at the farm.

Fun For Funds At Feather Fair

he annual Feather Fair Wed-day, Nov. 7, will find the 'Is-d' in front of Hart House trans-ed into a combination mid-and three ring circus.

arkers, clowns, pranksters and ds of all descriptions will be peting with each other and le's cannon to see who can col-the most money for the Red ther campaign.

veral of last year's feature ctions will be back again this . The Meds' "Outdoor Health ic"—anybody want a free k-up? co-eds preferred—and Crown and Anchor game, one the games of chance under the isorship of Trinity, are both g a return engagement. The Godiva Memorial Band will supply the music for the r.

f course, no Fair would be plete without somebody getting gry. Hot dogs, cokes, fudge, mburgers, candy, sandwiches coffee stands will be dispers-throughout the 'Island', to make e nobody wastes time by going e for lunch.

here is one new addition to the r this year. A Cheerleading test. All the faculties and leges are invited to see whose erleading can convince their supporters to contribute the most money to the Community Chest. A prize will be given to those who can collect the most money from their supporters.

Last year the School of Law taught everyone (for a fee) how to 'beat the races'. Mice were used in place of the customary horses and kewpie dolls were given away as prizes to those who learned the fastest. Unfortunately for the newcomers to this University, this attraction is not on the program this year. The SPS famous Horror House, in which the Skule Cannon is the star performer, is also out this year, but the Cannon will be at the Fair in another setting.

The Fair was originally held on the front campus in front of University College. Last year, to make the Fair more compact and to give the barkers a better chance to snare the unsuspecting onlooker, the Fair was transferred to the 'Island' behind the Bookstore.

President Sidney Smith will open the proceedings officially at 1:00 from a stand set up in front of Hart House. The Fair, plus the sale of tags held at the same time, last year netted $1,167.12. The ambition of the Fair this year is to duplicate this figure and perhaps to better it. Tags will also be sold this year.

Settlement House

. Christopher's's Settlement se, jointly sponsored by the mmunity Chest and the United rch of Canada, needs the help both male and female under-duates in carrying out its pro-ms. The house was founded forty years ago at 67 Wales , just east of Western Hospital, an area which is a melting pot many nations and creeds.

n 1950 the membership was 1,247 h a total attendance of 87,143. e varied, flexible program covers age group which extends from ee to sixty. Volunteers are parti-rly needed for the Nursery hool.

here are also some specialized ds for a Home Economics stu-nt, or anyone who knows how to k and is interested in teaching roup of young boys to cook. If re is any person on the campus o can give square dance calls he fill a spot in one of the adult bs.

ive persons constitute the full-e staff, four of them University Toronto graduates. Janet Wolfe, o graduated from the School of ial Work, is in charge of the ior Department which includes ldren from five to seven.

lenna Graham, who graduated m Pass Arts, went to OCE. Then found what she wanted at St. opher House, and now is in rge of children from eight to teen. Here there are varied pro-ms in craft, sports and dancing, h great enthusiasm for the bal-classes. This year teachers are ded for them. Glenna explained t there was no rigid conformity to what a volunteer should do. the volunteer had any special erest in mind at all, he or she ld head a group in it. She point-out that all the time required s about two hours once a week.

Varsity basketball fans will re-mber John Braithwaite who duated from Pass Arts last year. n played with the Varsity Jun-, Senior and Intermediates. In rge of the Boys' Department, n promotes basketball at St. ristopher's. He has twelve teams ging from minor bantam to sen-iors. Altogether 115 boys are in his department.

"So far I've got ten volunteers for them," John said. "But we need more to be able to give them individual attention."

John explained that he needed people to head groups, such as photography, woodworking, ping-pong or anything else that a volunteer can suggest.

In the past, second year psychology students have filled our part of the staff requirements. This year the appeal is carried again to them, and to everyone else who can spare a fe whours a week.

"The work is rewarding not only in seeing the improvement with children," Miss Wilson, a graduate of UC, said, "but in obtaining a greater understanding of children. It also gives practical experience in dealing with people."

All those interested are urged to drop in to see tthe staff mentioned, or phone them at WA. 6525.

Highest Bid Gets Smith's School Book

Ottawa (CUP)—A ninth-grade text belonging to Toronto's President Sidney Smith, with filled-in margins of many boyish notes and jokes, was among the sale of personal effects of famous people sold at an auction here recently over which a college president presided.

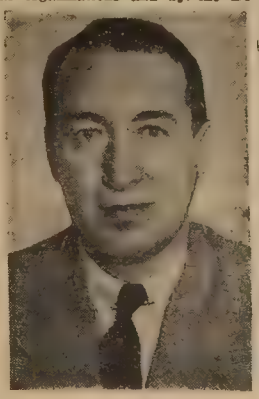
Six hundred people eagerly bid for the English composition text, bound in oil-skin by Dr. Smith's mother; a scarf belonging to Lily Pons; a steer's head belonging to Hopalong Cassidy; and ballet slippers worn by Moira Shearer were among the items sold.

Dr. M. M. MacOdrum, Carleton College President, pounded the gavel at the auction, held to aid a loan fund for Carleton College students.

All articles were accompanied by a personal letter from the donor.

Service At Convocation Hall For Dr. Harold M. Cassidy

Dr. Harold M. Cassidy, director of the School of Social Work, died Friday after being seriously ill for more than a month. Funeral services were held in Convocation Hall on Saturday afternoon with six staff members of the School of Social Work serving as active pallbearers.



In paying tribute to Dr. Cassidy, President Sidney Smith said that his leadership was recognized in the field of social work not only throughout Canada but in the United States and by the United Nations.

Dr. Cassidy had been on the staffs of the Universities of California and his native British Columbia as well as being Director for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration in 1945.

He first came to the University of Toronto in 1929 as assistant professor of Social Science and was here for a period of five years. In 1939 he studied under a Rockefeller fellowship in the United States and was then professor of Social Welfare and Dean of the School of Social Welfare at the University of California for another five year period.

Three times Dr. Cassidy gave up positions in the United States to return to Canada because he felt that he was a Canadian and wanted to remain one.

Last year Dr. Cassidy was nominated as a candidate for the leadership of the Liberal party in Ontario where was able to oust another candidate who had the support of the Federal Liberal cabinet, but was in turn defeated by Walter C. Thomson. However, his advice was sought by Conservative and CCF as well as Liberal organizations and by the Dominion Department of Health and Welfare and the Canadian Welfare Council. From 1934 to 1939 he was director of social welfare for the province of British Columbia.

DR. H. M. CASSIDY

Dr. Smith said on Saturday that: "The outstanding service of Dr. H. M. Cassidy to Canada is epitomized in the record of his labor, wisdom, and vision as Director of the School of Social Work of the University of Toronto. He brought to the Directorship a wide experience in social welfare administration and in academic fields. Building on sound foundations, he raised the School in the short period of seven years to the front rank of schools of social work throughout the world.

"His dynamic energy and his unbounded courage were a never-failing source of inspiration to colleagues and students alike. It was unthinkable to him that he should spare himself in any way in the high service to which his life was devoted.

"His standards of professional education was high. His administration was based on the concept that goodwill and good intentions, even when combined with practical experience, are insufficient qualifications for a social worker. To him the worthy member of that calling was a person well grounded in the elements of the humanities and social sciences; one who apprehends the social, economic and political forces that affect the lives of men, and who by intensive study and investigation sees how these forces could be focussed on the solution of vital problems. He had a unique capacity to relate the theoretical studies of the classroom to the realities of a developing society.

"He was one of the pioneers in Canada in increasing the prestige of the social worker, and in demonstrating the need for private and public agencies to call upon specialists in this field of endeavors for the common weal.

"His untimely passing is a loss to Canada; and nowhere will Harry Cassidy be mourned more deeply and sincerely than in the University of Toronto."

It was requested by the family that no flowers be sent and that memorial contributions be directed to the Toronto Community Chest.

Women See Art Showing

Hart House can be invaded by women now. The Board of Stewards have opened the Hart House Art Gallery to women from 4 to 5 every Wednesday afternoon. Actually last week was the third Wednesday the Gallery was open to women, but it was not publicized until yesterday. Four women were present the first Wednesday, three the second, and four last week. Several men students were also present. The collection then being shown was painted by contemporary artists of Quebec.

Jane Carson, IV Art and Arch, said the paintings had more to them than she expected. Eva Kemeny, I UC was particularly impressed with a painting by Pierre Petel, "Old Montaignais Indian." Many expressed a liking for this painting.

It is felt that if more women patronize these exhibits, more collections may be made available to them.

Blood Donors Aid Charities

Montreal (Cup) — After three days of canvassing last week the Combined Charities Appeal at McGill University reported that only $250 had been collected, or five cents per student. However students had contributed 526 pints of blood to the Red Cross Blood Donor Clinic, set up on the campus to amplify the Charities appeal.

Money collected from the drive goes to support city charities, distributed proportionately according to the number of students of each religious faith on the campus. Twenty-five percent of the total raised goes to the International Student Service to aid students abroad.

Besides contributions from personal canvass, a cocktail party, variety show, tea dance following Saturday's football game and other activities have been planned to help raise money for the annual drive.

Ontario

The following, reprinted from The Georgian, organ of Sir George Williams College in Montreal, gives Stuart Beattie's impression of Ontario. Mr. Beattie admits never having been to this province.

"ONTARIO, unlike the other Provinces of Canada, is part of the British Empire. It sometimes appears that Ontario is all that is left of the British Empire. Its people are so British that they usually provoke visiting Englishmen into hysterical laughter.

"Some of the more sensible citizens are becoming ashamed with their conduct, and are now digging a large hole in Toronto where they may hide from the glaring world.

"It might be of interest to learn the British-Toronto housewife talks like this to her husband: 'Hi, Hoib! Gees, what a crowd downtown. Yuh know that gum dispensah on the cornah of Yonge? I couldn't get it ta wolk. Yeahhh. Oh, it's foah uh-clock, honey, Cro get da beah outa da icebox. Gees, yuh shuda seen all them Yankee tourists downtown. So nauseatin. Austerity Programs

Winnipeg

Winnipeg (CUP)—The council of the University of Manitoba Student Union refused to approve the $550 fee owing to the National Federation of Canadian University Students. The question will be reviewed at the meeting of the UMSU council subject to a final decision then. Reasons given by The Manitoban for tabling the fee payment, which would curtail the activities of NFCUS at Manitoba as well as university participation in the national student organization, were a drastically smaller budget this year and opposition to NFCUS on the campus.

A total of $44048 was approved at the session. Described as an austerity budget by treasurer Glen McLeod he blamed a drop in enrollment for the decreased funds available for UMSU activities.

Besides the NFCUS budget being tabled the proposed cut in the music program budget principally the band led to the resignation of the chairman of that committee, Bill Renton, who also acts as bandmaster. His request for an increased honorarium of $100 was opposed on the grounds he was a student and entitled to no more salary than any other subcommittee head.

As a result of this action Renton resigned as chairman and threatened to take the band outside the university with a sponsor and operate it at a profit he felt sure it can make, he told the council.

Biggest slash was the refusal to sanction on expenditure of $1260 for a tape recorder and allied equipment for the radio committee to record its programs prior to broadcasting. Manitoba students operate their own broadcasting station. The committee was left with $100 deemed by the chairman as necessary to carry out the year's activities.

In presenting the NFCUS case to the council Frank Muldoon, chairman of Manitoba's External Affairs Committee said that the advantages gained by NFCUS membership were intangible.

"After listing all the doubtful benefits of belonging to NFCUS," commented The Manitoban editorially, "Mr. Muldoon concluded that at any rate one should not ask for concrete, visible benefits from an organization such as NFCUS; that such advantages as may be gained from paying it the full levy of twenty cents per student are not of the tangible variety. It hardly seems reasonable, in a tight year, (when we are forced to cut the budgets of local activities that yield direct and obvious benefits to those who pay for them) to force students to pay out a substantial sum of money to an organization when they cannot see what they are getting."

London

London, Ont. (CUP)—A series of austerity cuts have been laid before the University of Western Ontario's Student Council following publication of decreased campus enrolment statistics.

Recommendations include the reduction of the campus paper, The Gazette, from forty-two to thirty-one issues, and the end of club grants under the USC jurisdiction.

A tentative proposal to reduce faculty grants by twenty-five cents a student has been included in the proposed cuts.

A recent Gazette editorial stated that the University Student Council (USC) was in a financial mess. It blamed a combination of causes, including careless spending, higher costs and a fixed income for the present $1,700 deficit.

It is planned that the proposed decrease in spending will reduce the debt to $300 by next year.

Ottawa

Ottawa (CUP) — Blaming the Carleton College administration and last session's yearbook debt, Student Council President Vic Hryhorchuk told a Council meeting here recently that Student Association finances are in a critical condition.

He cited the College administration for refusing to pay for the heating of the Student Union building this winter. Hryhorchuk also blamed an unusually large debt accumulated by last session's year book, the Raven.

The Council treasurer stated that at least $800 was needed to see the Council balance a minimum budget.

That figure, she said, was barely enough to cover expenses. It would be too small to allow the Council funds with which to issue grants to various clubs at the College.

Outstanding bills to be paid by the Council include a $140 debt for decoration and maintenance of the Union, and a $500 payment due on the recently-completed extension.

This report follows a recent statement at Carleton that some student athletic activities are to be cancelled this year due to lack of funds.

By DAVID PEDIE

It will become a habit in this column to discuss radio-programs [illegible] one hardly need sit in a balcony nor need one "view" radio in the accepted sense of the word, but since the CBC claim to present serious drama, we might once in a while take them at their word and view with the ears their more profound efforts.

When people talk about professional actors in Toronto — the best of them — they generally mention the people who make their living on the radio. Toronto is one of the few real centres of serious non-commercial drama in the world today and it is because of the high calibre of acting and directing. These actors have to give the effect of being the characters they are portraying and fulfill their relation with the other characters. This is very difficult when one is reading from a script and when one has only a few hours in which to interpret the part and then get that interpretation across to radio listeners in a sincere and convincing manner.

In the past the CBC have had amazing success with such shows as Macbeth, Peer Gynt, The Seven Who Were Hanged and Ghosts. However, it seems to me that there has been a failure somewhere. Perhaps the CBC and the actors it employs have become too sure of their position but their plays have not been of the same high standard and the acting has been very conventional — good but not inspired.

This decline was made very noticeable on the Stage '52 of Oct. 21st when the production of Ibsen's Hedda Gabbler was on a par with anything done two years ago. Esse Llungh, who directed and produced the show, is a Swede and has an understanding of Ibsen that is miles beyond any of the English directors and the story of Hedda Gabbler — apparently mere words and music over the radio — was a horrifying experience. The implications of the various characters laying bare the secrets of their very souls that people always conceal. When we are given this vision of life by Ibsen, we comprehend why these secrets are concealed.

The outstanding actors in this show were Alice Hill (in the title role), John Drainie, Alan King and Budd Knapp. Under Mr. Llungh's brilliant direction they shook off the lethargy that has attended many of their recent performances. Our hope as audience is that next Wednesday, Nov. 7, Mr. Llungh will again pull off the trick on the CBC Wednesday Night.

At that time, we will be treated to a recent play by a Canadian — Lister Sinclair. It is called, with great simplicity, Socrates and is a closely knit few days in the life of the great Greek philosopher taken almost entirely from Plato's Dialogues, but in Mr. Sinclair's dialogue. The only steal is the defence that Socrates made at his trial (Plato's Apology). The play has been given twice before by the CBC which hints that it is very worthwhile and it will be presented on stage for the first time this coming February.

Socrates was written as a stage play and because of the abominable state of our theatre has never had a chance at the plaudits or pannings of a theatre audience. It seems to me that it is eminently a stage play. All five settings are "theatrical" — the forum of Athens, a banquet (symposium), a trial, and a death cell. Though it has been accused of being a "talky" play, it is full enough of wit and wisdom to keep the attention of an audience. If Mr. Llungh can make it live over the wave-lengths of Canada, I am sure that it will be just as successful over the footlights of the Museum Theatre.

Royalty Welcomed At McGill Campus

Montreal (CUP)—An estimated crowd of ten thousand people jammed every available vantage point on the McGill campus to welcome Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh to the campus last Tuesday. The McGill Daily, reporting on the event, described it as the greatest gathering of students, staff members and graduates in the 130-year history of McGill University.

Special bleachers were erected on the main drive of the campus, with seats at a premium, The Daily said, an hour before the procession was to arrive for the fifteen minute visit to the campus.

To pass the time waiting for the Royal couple, the Choral Society led in singing and the college band marched between the row of stands.

All classes were cancelled for the event, with students from Macdonald and Bishop's (Lennoxville) Colleges invading the campus to join in the welcome.

Half way up the drive the Royal car stopped to allow Princess Elizabeth and her consort to sign the student register and be introduced to student leaders. They met Jacques Tetrault, president of the McGill student council; Mary Pickering, president of the Women's Union; William Bokovay, president of Macdonald College student council; Eddy Kingston, editor of the McGill Daily and Eric de Bellaigne, son of a former French tutor to the Princess, present by special request by Her Royal Highness.

Two copies of a special Monday October 29 issue of The McGill Daily on the Royal tour, bound and printed on special paper were presented to the Royal couple by Tetrault.

The Royal procession then proceeded to a reception tendered to dignitaries of the university.

Preparations and publicity for the visit had proceeded on the campus for a full week. Students aided in such things as painting standards and decorating buildings with bunting. Others served as special guards along the campus route.

A campus humorist said last year that the skits about the traffic troubles on Hoskin Ave. would end as soon as enough students were killed. Apparently there haven't been enough students killed yet as "Hoskin" skits are back on the campus again this year. The picture was taken at the stadium show last week when the Scarlet and Gold Revue cast brought back their routine. However, the proper authorities are aware of the problem and took action over the summer holidays. A crew of painters came and put, in long-drawn-out letters, "Slow — School."

Music Review

Pop Concert

Pop Concert programs are a curiously mixed lot — some good, some not so good; some fresh, some hackneyed. Friday night's concert, conducted by Sir Ernest MacMillan, with Gladys Swarthout as guest soloist, was a good example of a program of popular classics that mostly steered away from the too-familiar.

Miss Swarthout is primarily an operatic singer, and it was almost expected of her that she should sing at least one number from Carmen. She obliged with her characteristically forceful rendition of the famous Habenera. Even taken from its context this is wonderfully dramatic music, and no one could do it better justice than did Miss Swarthout. In addition, she sang an aria from Haydn's Orfeo, and a song by Niles composed recently, but in seventeenth-century style.

In her group accompanied by the piano, Miss Swarthout proved herself a more subtle singer than she appeared in her group with the orchestra. Without the necessity of overpowering a large orchestra, she found it possible to display dynamic nuances and to exploit the contrast between the registers of her voice to better advantage. Her best number in this group was a traditional Spanish bolero — a bright dance in rapid tempo, quite different from Ravel's slow and sombre measure.

The orchestral part of the program included Saint-Saens' Ballet Suite from "Henry VIII". This smug set of imitations of exotic dances (including a Scottish one and an Irish one) was given a splendid performance by the orchestra. As we have noted before, the brass section has improved its standard over that of previous years, and this brightly orchestrated music demands good brass playing.

The program concluded with a performance of the familiar Italian Caprice by Tchaikovsky, and Smetana's Dance of the Comedians, played as an encore. As is very frequently the case, the familiarity of the music made it possible for the players to give the conductor their full attention, and the result was a performance of great precision and vivacity. Even very tired music can sound good under such conditions, and for once, it did.

The standard formations that the band has to master are the "T", "UWO" "MCG" and "Q". Then there is a new formation for each week. They started off this year with a snowflake, then a pinwheel and finally a palm tree. At Western, Guthro combined all those into one which he calls "a revolving snowflake which ends in a "T"."

Assisting Guthro is Wally Gulka, associate director of the Band. Gulka, a second year music student, played trombone in the band last year and was chosen from several applicants this year for the position.

Rehearsals are hectic affairs. Everyone sounds off with his own private piece and it takes the director at least five minutes to get them lined up. The whole session is kept lively by the band clown, Don Martin, the cymbal player. Martin has done a lot for the band — it was his idea to use the whole set of drums on a moveable platform, used in the palm tree formation and he is currently agitating for the band to take a trip down to Ann Arbour.

Playing in the band is becoming more and more popular. The turnover in personnel is about 50% each year and at least 20 people who apply are turned down because all the vacancies are filled.

Vern Turner (IV UC) erudite trumpet player, one of the four bandsmen who have been with the band for four years(sums up his opinion of the band in these words, "Band members are shining examples of gentility — especially on a trip — they never borrow their liquor; they always buy it." Other four year men with the band are Don Parr, II Emmanuel, baritone horn; George Tovell, OCE clarinet; and Bob McIntosh, Vic, saxophone.

Helen MacKie, drum majorette, is out for every practice with the band. Helen started her career last year when she was cheerleader for Vic. This year she moved up to drum majorette and is very capably filling this position. Helen makes up her own routines for the different formations.

St. Mike's Win 2-0 Foresters Downed On Slippery Field

By FRANCIS QUINLAN

St. Mike's kept alive its faint hopes of making the Intramural Rugby play-offs by edging Forestry 2-0 last Friday on a snowy back campus. Two third quarter singles provided the margin of victory, as the slippery field and wet ball, along with several timely pass interceptions, impeded the touchdown chances of both teams.

The Double Blue came close in the first quarter when the Woodsmen almost fumbled the ball away on their own 10. They kicked on the next play and St. Mike's took over on the Forestry 35. Jack McDonald drove for 10 yards, and Bull Winters ripped off 10 more to put the Mikemen in scoring position on the 15. Joe Ryan's try for a field goal was short and Waddell of Forestry ran it back to the 13. The Woodchoppers shifted into high and started a march of their own. Crosbie plunged for a first down, and quarter Bill Earle handed the ball off to Waddell who galloped to his own 40. Crosbie went for 10 more before St. Mike's held and took over. Marcus intercepted a Double Blue pass just as the half ended.

The third quarter saw the only scoring in the game. The first point came after Winters ran a poor Forestry boot back to the latter's 25. Two plays later Marcus was rouged on a St. Mike's kick.

The men in blue added another single a few minutes later when a Forestry kick from deep in their own territory was nullified by a penalty, and St. Mike's given the ball. Burns hoofed it over the line to give his team a 2-0 lead.

That ended the scoring in the game but not the action. The Lumbermen came up with the biggest ground-gaining play of the contest when, on their own 25, Whitcombe tossed a short pass to McLellan who lateraled to Marcus, and Eddie tiptoed down the sideline stripe to the Double Blue 40. Two smashes at the line gave the Green a first down on the 29, but the Forestry kicker fumbled trying for a single, and SMC recovered. The Foresters came right back as Crosbie seized an errant pass and lugged it back to the 30. Foxy Clark caught a short pass and burrowed to the 25, but St. Mike's held and gained possession of the ball. The ball changed hands a few more times, as both teams blundered around, unable to get anywhere.

St. Mike's finally escaped from their end of the field when Mark "Monster" Wiant flopped on a Green bobble on the 30. McDonald and Winters carried the pigskin to the centre stripe but were forced to kick. The Timberteam attempted an onside kick but something got fouled up somewhere and SMC took over on the former's 15. A penalty set them back 10 yards and they lost 15 on the next play so they finally got rid of the ball. Forestry tried several passes with time running out but were unsuccessful. The game ended with St. Mike's on the long end of a 2-0 count.

Best for the victorious Mikemen were McDonald, Winters, and Burns, while Monster Wiant was his rip-snorting self. Beaudry and Corcoran stood out on the line. Fleet-footed Eddie Marcus was tops for the losers, with Earle, Clarke, Crosbie, and Waddell also coming up with good games. St. Mike's Jim Coghlan turned in a flawless performance, as he handled the waterboy duties with a skill and dexterity obviously born of long experience.

Soccer Blues

SENIOR

Without drum majorettes, without cheerleaders, without pep rallies, quite often without fans the Intercollegiate Soccer Blues ditto their name every year on the Blackwood Trophy—the emblem of superiority in the Wesern division of the Intercollegiate loop.

The ditto machine was at work again on Friday, as the Big Blues once more added their name to the Blackwood Trophy by defeating the U. of W.O. Mustangs 7-1. The game played under conditions that at best were difficult, presented a fighting Western team, determined to keep the margin of victory at its lowest. The Blues had other ideas; despite the wet, slippery field and freezing rain, the Blues played a fast and bustling game.

Jose Atucha opened the Blues side of the ledger with a well-placed shot which provided no chances for the Mustangs minder. The opener was a shot in the arm. Gil Toppin on a well-received pass wormed his way through a determined half back line and with none but the keeper to beat took a shot on goal that paid dividends. Walter Eze, the sure-footed, hard-kicking left back, discovering that lobbing a heavy, wet ball was out of the question and decided to tackle, dribble and clear as far down the forward as he could sneak and avoid the anger of a hard-working and anxious forward line.

The pace of the game slowed up

INTERMEDIATE

Playing like a determined team, and with the sole exception of unnecessary passing in front of the goal, the Intermediate Soccer team turned in another of their stellar performances on Friday afternoon, as they drubbed the University of Western Ontario Colts.

Howard Asbourne and Al Bowles were the successful forwards and between them booted three goals past a trying and game defence. The game, characterized by improved standards, started on a wet and extremely hard field. The Little Blues, after having handed out a shut-out a week or so ago, were extremely confident and soon settled down to a spirited and vigorous attack on the Mustangs' defence.

Play for the greater part of the game was centred in Western's side of the field, and quite often had the appearance of an extremely one-sided affair. Only the overdoing of their extremely machine-like precisioned passing, the lack of finishing and poor shooting on the part of the forward line prevented the Blues from adding several more goals to the tally sheet.

With two games against McMaster to go, and with an unbroken string of wins, the team looks powerful and able enough to take the Intermediate Loop.

Defeat Western Colts 12 to 1
Fawcett Runs 105 Yards For T

By BRUCE NORTH

The Intermediate football Blues defeated the Western Colts 12-1 last Friday afternoon at Varsity Stadium to win their first Intercollegiate championship since 1933. The game was closer than the score indicates as the Blues didn't score their second touchdown until the final minutes of the game via Don Fawcett's 105 yard gallop.

Western came close to tying it up early in the second half when Colt end Ross Bo picked up Ed Ksiazec's fumble and waddled 65 yards to the Varsity 21. Beck had at le a 10-yard lead at the outset, but three Toronto tacklers caught up to him. The Baby Blu broke up the game when Burley intercepted Thompson's pass and lateralled to Fawcett wh went all the way from the Blue 5-yard line for the score.

Guard Al George was easily the standout on the Varsity wingline. He made more tackles than any other man on the field, time after time breaking up Western's off-tackle smashes. Middle Alex Macklin also came up with a good defensive effort. Bob Digby blocked two Western kicks in a row although it wasn't entirely his fault. Both times the ball went off Thompson's toe straight into the Varsity line and hit Digby. Western recovered each time although they lost the ball on the latter play.

The Baby Blues had a big edge in passing. Quarterbacks Al Geekie and Gerry Fitzhenry completed 9 out of 19 while Western clicked for only 3 out of 18. It was end "Nobby" Milne who caught the majority of the Varsity tosses. He and Dan Nelson also bottled up the Western backs time and again before they could make any decent runbacks of Burley's kicks.

The first Blue touchdown was set up early in the first quarter when Moslak fumbled Buley's kick on his own eight yard line and Dan Nelson recovered. Burley was stopp or no gain and then Fitzhe threw a pro pass to Ksiazek do to the Western three. Burley to the ball again and this time ca ried over but fumbled and Nel fell on it for a rather cheap ma jor. Ford converted.

Western failed to capitalize a after Swan made a sensational le ing catch of Getty's pass, for gain of forty yards to the Toron 15. But the Colts made only se yards in three downs and lost t ball. A little while later a Ge pass from the Varsity 47 was ca complete by the referee at the yard line. After gaining one down, Western was held by Blue line and Thompson's field attempt was wide but went the dead ball line for one point.

The Baby Blues' ball handli was atrocious. They fumbled the b ten times and lost it on six of the bobbles. However the Colts weren't able to take advantage the breaks that came their way. was this fact more than anythi else that defeated them. Weste fumbled four times and lost the b three times. The Blues made ele first downs to Western's ten.

Besides his great touchdown r near the end, Toronto half D

Backed by the good fielding of a steady team, Mary Crowe pitched UC I's to a solid 14-2 victory over St. Mike's in the first game of a best-of-three finals Friday. Though UC lacked real power-hitters, they kept up a steady barrage of singles topped by good base running to batter St. Mike's. The Saints' spirits were somewhat dampened right at the outset, when their first three batters went down in order in the bottom of the first frame, and then found themselves on the wrong end of a disputed put-out in the second.

It wasn't until the fifth inning that St. Mike's showed some of their usual drive by handing UC three straight outs. In the same inning, however, Edie Bogomolny robbed the St. Mike's pitcher of a beautiful hit with a sensational catch deep in left field. Heather Chipman played a good game at short for UC, pulling in several tricky flies, while Ruth Allor and Nancy Primeau played well for the losers.

Both pitchers had off innings in which they filled the bases and walked the fourth batter, but on the whole, Betty Jane Fraser's swift balls and excellent timing couldn't be beaten. The big difference in the teams lay in St. Mike's inability to connect at bat. Usually a hard-hitting team, Mary Crowe's pitches were too much for them — eventually they were swinging at anything. Joanne Smith, SMC, was the only one to connect with a solid hit for either team. The second game will be played at 1:10 today in the Trinity backfield.

Pitching Sportshoes

There was very little action in Intramural sports last Friday with only one soccer game and a couple of volleyball matches carded.

SPS and Trinity B battled to a 1-all draw in the soccer game. John Barton was the Trinity marksman while Erder counted for the Engineers.

In the volleyball games Vic IV downed Emmanuel B's 15-9, 15-4, and St. Mike's C won over SPS V 15-5, 15-12.

Speaking Of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

Until this year, the Blues had gone winless in Lond for 15 years, and while they came away from the Litt Memorial Stadium with a well-earned tie last Saturday, was only by the grace of God and some poor quarterback on the part of the Mustangs that they did not lose the ga

With only four minutes of play remaining in the gam and the score tied at 13 all, quarterback Truant of t Metrasmen called for a pass and Bobby Dale rose to th occasion with an interception that saved the day for Varsit Had Truant not gambled on the pass and lost possession, th Mustangs would have been able to kick the game-winni point from the Blue 25-yard line and put the game on ic A lot of Mustang supporters stood up and tore their hair Bobby gathered in that pass.

A crucial fumble by the Blues deep in their own ter tory and a blocked kick that was picked up by Beatty the Mustangs and run for a major were breaks that ma the Mustangs' scoring possible. The Western team rea played their hearts out for that tie, with the running Henderson and Obal and the outstanding performance big Doug McNichol at end as the highlights of the Musta effort.

The second Varsity touchdown was almost a repli of their march from one end of the field to the other wh they played the Mustangs here in Toronto earlier in t season. Starting deep in their own territory, the Blues m a series of plays behind almost perfect blocking that, m scoring touchdowns look like pretty simple business, t they seemed unable to come up with a repeat performan for the rest of the game.

The game was a tough one, with the Mustangs ra ing in for tackles as if their lives depended on each d As a result, quite a few Blues limped to the sidelines d ing the game with a variety of ailments. Steve Onesch who saw very little action in the second half, Al Dancy, B Bewley, Bob Rumball, Tony Adams and Murray Hadlow left the field in a bruised condition during the game. No of the injuries appear serious enough to weaken the team for their all-important meeting with the McGill Re men this coming weekend.

There were some wonderful things about Stan Kenton's Concert. Kenton has the best brass section in the world, and he used it to wonderful advantage in all his Latin-American works. His "Peanut Vendor", containing some of the most necessary brass discords in musical history, and a Latinized version of "Love for Sale" were masterpieces of effect: forceful rhythms building up to an almost unbearable fever pitch of emotion. When he wants to, Kenton shows that he is a skilled interpreter and arranger. His arrangement of "September Song" was breath-taking in its effect, the whole band singing pianissimo against a rhythmic background of piano, drums and string bass, then the gradual emergence and introduction of muted brass figures. Very relaxing, very pleasant, very beautiful.

The highlight of the evening was the appearance of June Christy who dropped her engagements in night clubs to help Kenton out in the vocal department during his tour.

Aside from a certain hoarseness and overabundance of Sarah Vaughanishness in her voice, June proved herself to be her usual self in such numbers as "I'll Remember April" and "Willow". Kenton on the piano and the rest of his assemblage provided an excellent accompaniment. If they would only stick to their kind of stuff . . .

...e Health Service also provides ...University Infirmary for minor illnesses and operates on a less-than-cost basis. Added to this there is a Clinic and a Hart House Surgery division (for athletic accidents).

Another feature of the Health Service is the X-Ray Chest Survey for T.B. All new and final year students and Dental students in their first and last two years must have an X-ray examination. Medical students, students of the School of Nursing, and those whose domicile is not in Canada must have one annually. In cooperation with the Health Service, the Gage Institute offers these free. "X-rays are an excellent idea," said Dr. Wodehouse, "and should be taken periodically."

This year the Service has organized a series of monthly lectures to help students become acquainted with university life. The first of these lectures begins today in the lecture hall of the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital, Surrey Place. Warden Ignatieff of Hart House will speak at eight o'clock tonight on "The University and the Community."

"We welcome anyone at any time, with any problem, physical or mental," Dr. Wodehouse said. "We don't guarantee a solution," he added "but we'll try." Dr. Wodehouse urged everyone (in all years) to get an X-ray and to make use of the Health Service.

SCIENCE NOTES

The Fly & Heredity

Behold the humble fruit-fly. It toils not neither does it spin, yet every gene in its chromosomes is numbered. From study of this insect's cells has come much of our knowledge of heredity and genetics.

Chromosome granules in the cells are organized to form thread or rod-like bodies called chromosomes. These units are divided into hypothetical particles called genes, many of which have been correlated with certain features of the organism. Thus, if gene A is not present in the germ cell, character A does not appear in the adult.

Two factors for each character are present in each gene, a dominant and a recessive one. The dominant factor is the one which appears in the adult, and the recessive one though not appearing may be transmitted through the germ cell to the offspring. In forming the sex cell, the chromosomes are paired and divide into two halves. The dominant factor forms the gene of one cell and the recessive becomes incorporated into the other. Thus only one of a pair of contrasting characters can be represented in a single germ cell.

Sex determination may be used as an example of the operation of genes. Male body cells contain two sex factors, X and Y. Female body cells contain two X factors. Male germ cells are thus of two types, those containing X and those containing Y factors. All female germ cells contain X factors. A male germ cell containing the X factor uniting with a female cell therefore results in a female organism. A male cell containing the Y factor uniting with a female cell results in a male organism. This disgustingly scientific explanation of it all reminds me of a poem.

"Breathes there a man with hide so tough
Who says two sexes aren't enough?"

Today

4:00 p.m.: POLITICAL COMMISSION OF SCM: Representatives of NFCUS and CCCYG willl lead an open discussion on the "Difficulties and Possibilities of Student and Youth Exchanges with the Soviet Union" in the Rhodes Room of Trinity College.

4:15 p.m.: RED FEATHER FAIR: Last meeting before Fair. Would all representatives please come or send a substitute to 7 Queen's Park.

6:00 p.m.: STUDENT CHRISTIAN MOVEMENT: Ato Bandoh, anthropology student from the Gold Coast, will speak on "Political Independence for African Colonies", at 143 Bloor W.

7:00 p.m.: SPS: Skule Nite rehearsal in Room 5 of the OT Huts.

8:00 p.m.: HILLEL: Organization meeting of drama group at 186 St. George St.

8:00 p.m.: ALL-VARSITY MIXED CHORUS: Rehearsal at the Women's Union.

MODERN HISTORY CLUB: Mr. Escott Reid, Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, will speak on "A New Look At the United Nations", at Wymilwood.

Gala Weekend For Carabins

On the Carabin Weekend, (Dec. 6, 7, 8, 9) the French-Canadian visitors from the University of Montreal and their hosts will not have much time to sit on their hands.

Thursday evening: (Dec. 6) The Carabins will arrive on the evening train, and will be greeted at a sherry party in the Buttery of Trinity College.

Friday: (Dec. 7) In the morning the visitors will go with their hosts to casses, if they wish, or else simply explore the campus, the subway, or other points of mutual interest. After lunch, eaten at their hosts' habitual haunts, there will be a discussion, arranged in a sort of seminar style, on the aims and methods of education here and in Québec. All interested students and faculty are invited, in fact urged, to come to this. It is always perhaps the most interesting and valuable part of the weekend, where all sorts of differences in outook come to the fore and are discussed in a friendly and illuminating way.

Afterwards, there will be cocktails and dinner; then in the evening party of the kind usually described as a Big Smash. It is expected to go on rather a long time . . .

Saturday: (Dec. 8) In the morning the Carabins and their hosts, dressed in their oldest jeans and slacks, will be taken in buses to a lodge near Caledon Hills Farm. They will spend the morning and early afternoon in various healthful pursuits, (including eating), and then will take part in another discussion, even more informal than the one on Friday. The evening will be occupied with singing, square-dancing, and mild rowdiness.

Sunday (Dec. 9) The visitors will go to Mass, have dinner at the homes of their hosts, and then go to a farewell tea at Wymilwood. This function also is open to the entire university, and the same open-armed invitation is extended.

Finally, visitors and hosts will go to the station, and the Carabins will be seen off with much noise and shouting.

Baby Blues

Fawcett played a good all around offensive game. Once his spectacular over-the -shoulder circus catch of Thompson's punt kept the ball from bouncing over the Blues' goal line.

The Baby Blues still have one more league game before the end of the season, but this victory over Western erased any mathemtical chance of their being tied for first place. Head coach John Kennedy and line coach Fraser Mustard are to be congratulated for guiding the Intermediates to their first title in 18 years.

Radio Coughs

Once again the Radio Committee, adopted child of the Students' Administrative Council, has been causing its foster parents a great deal of trouble. Ever since the Radio Workshop became part of the SAC family, confusion as to its activities and plans has reigned in the minds of the Council.

Although the adoption was a magnanimous gesture and undoubtedly saved the child from financial starvation, the SAC assumed a greater problem than it knew how to handle.

In the past, the Radio Committee has simply been a club where interested people worked at writing, acting and radio production. They were luckier than most clubs for finances (however inadequate) came from the SAC and the SAC-appointed Chairman tended to be a figurehead who was out of touch with the actual work done by the Committee.

This year, Radio Chairman Doug Waite has been given carte blanche by the SAC to reorganize the whole Committee on a broader basis.

In bursts of rhetorical fire at last Wednesday's Council meeting, it was decided that every attempt should be made to make the SAC chairman leader in fact as well as in name. All previous appointments and plans were thrown overboard and a completely new attempt at organization was begun. There was much justification for this action.

Yet the old problems still remain. SAC representatives who are chosen to fill the position of Radio Chairman year after year, do not have the specialized knowledge and experience necessary.

It has been suggested that the Radio Committee ought to be formed hierarchically as are most clubs on the campus, and have an ex-officio representation on the SAC as do The Varsity and Torontonensis.

This would be one way of bringing roses back into the Radio Committee's hollow cheeks — if we want to.

But is there any reason for keeping the Radio Committee alive, or SAC-sponsored (which amounts to the same thing)? Possibly an organization which affects such a small minority of students should not be singled out for special favoritism by the SAC.

On the basis that radio is a mass communication medium, therefore, in the interests of a vast number of student listeners, the existence of a Radio Committee might be justified. Yet the more easily available and often used FM broadcasting is surely a minority communication medium. In short, few students have FM sets.

Potentially the Radio Committee could reach a far wider number of students, both as participators and listeners. Chairman Waite is in the process of doing just this. By attempting to get in touch with all those interested in radio work and by carrying programs over CKEY (as was done last year), the narrowness and cliquishness characteristic of previous years may be avoided.

Yet the whole principle of SAC Chairmanship of a Committee which requires such specialized knowledge is a shaky one. Even if this year's chairman is a smashing success there is no assurance that we will have such luck next year.

What horrible midsummer sickness must any club suffer if they have to wait till the autumn to be told who their chairman will be. Some hierarchical succession would be necessary to ensure any continuity of development to club interests.

Possibly we should hope that the racking organizational coughts of the Radio Committee indicate galloping consumption. Perhaps death can best relieve the pain. But surely, it is not the only

Democracy's Lab

This article was endorsed by the Political Science Club, the political co-ordinating committee at the University of Toronto.

By DON FEATHERSTONE and JOHN MEDCOF

Political parties are the backbone of effective Canadian democracy and free elections are an essential of that democracy. Parliaments and elections go together. For years Varsity has had Mock Parliaments; now, at last, we get Mock Parliament elections too. Political activity has, so far, been restricted to debates and Mock Parliaments, with their relatively small number of participants. Now everyone will have a chance to express his preference.

It is ridiculous to say that elections have no place in university. Any person old enough and intelligent enough to enter college should have some political ideas and preferences. If our students, our future leaders, are not interested enough in the working of our democracy to participate, then the future of democratic government is in jeopardy. It is likewise preposterous to declare that elections and noisy campaigns are out of keeping with university dignity. The goal-post fights, lavish display of bottled hospitality and general hell-raising in the student section at football games should dispel that notion once and for all. Political campaigns are one of the few occasions on which our elders let their hair down and put on a show. Surely they do not have a monopoly on this.

True, these elections are not as important as the real thing; neither is a lab experiment in the preparation of hydrogen as momentous as the original discovery. Elections are nothing new in Canada, but students can make mistakes and learn here in a campus laboratory of democracy. We have training for medicine, dentistry, the business world and theology; why not for democracy?

On the campus the various parties compete in placing their program before the students. They hold meetings, introduce speakers, participate in elections, discuss and develop party platforms, and hold Mock Parliaments; but the student body has never had a chance to pass judgment on these groups. Now they will get that chance. Mock Parliament elections have been called, the use of the legislature has been promised and the campaign is under way.

These clubs have fought their battles without clear-cut student decision. They claim Mock Parliament victories as representative of campus thought while in effect they are really a measure of the most efficient packing organization. Now comes a change. Instead of machine-style politics the campus clubs are making an appeal to their constituents, i.e., the people.

Simply because the majority of students do not belong to political clubs does not mean that they are uninterested nor does it destroy the value of an election. In a typical city riding of 50,000 voters each party there may have a hard core of 50 to 100 active party workers. Beyond this there is another group of occasional party workers, but combining the totals for all parties such people do not comprise more than 1% of total electorate, although the various parties may claim much higher numbers.

Then there comes a gradual loosening of party ties from inactive party members, to party adherents, to party voters, then floating voters and finally those who don't vote at all.

On this campus political and allied clubs comprise about 2% of the student population. There are many, many adherents and even more who have tendencies toward one party or the other. These people who are politically interested and inclined will now have a chance to express their views without becoming active partisans. While this reluctance to participate in active politics is not too desirable, it does correspond to actual elections. There the electorate pass judgment on two or more men put up by relatively small groups and the vote is taken to represent the will of the people and of the people as a whole.

At present campus party politics spill over into Hart House and college debates. The logical place for this is the Mock Parliament. The ideal manner of decision is not packing competitions but a campus vote.

Finally, these elections are held with success in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, UBC, St. Francis Xavier, UNB and many other Canadian universities. Surely Toronto, Canada's biggest university, will not lag behind!

The election date is set. Let's go!

OUR READERS WRITE

Undeserved Criticism

Editor, The Varsity

In view of the fact that there are so many groups and individuals connected with the campus that so much deserve a good blasting criticism, I fail to understand why you should single out a group who have been so efficient in carrying out their duties at the school for unjustified criticism.

Your article re: the police on duty passing grad cars was entirely unjustified. Had your reporter bothered to check with the police and ask why the cars were waved on without asking for proof of graduateship, the article would never have been printed. Where the man on duty knows the driver of the car, is there any need to ask for further proof?

In the years I spent at the University, I never had opportunity to find any group who were as careful, courteous, and efficient as the police; unless it was the tuck shop staff. And if you think this is any easy [job] you think wrong. Certainly [The] Varsity's intimation (intended or not) that the policeman on duty was derelict in duty deserves a direct apology. Recognition better than any identification

Bob Dnieper,

Ed. note: No criticism of the university police was intended in [the] story on the admission of [grad] cars to the campus. Obviously [the] University police were only following orders, but the relaxation of parking restrictions had not been disclosed. University officials were remiss, it was felt, in not revealing this change of regulations.

Peace Projects?

Editor, The Varsity:

I would like to know why the University Peace Council, dedicated to such an important cause as the preservation of peace, has not called a membership meeting long before the middle of November. It is puzzling to me why such an important organization has done so little up to now in promoting peace.

Perhaps the executive would like to account for its lack of action in such crucial times as these?

Ralph Brooks,
I UC.

Why, Indeed?

Editor, The Varsity:
re: "Storm to Miss", Wednesday, October 31.

Thank you! Your editorial is a much needed word of common sense. I believe that foolish articles in such popular magazines as Collier's often prepare us for storms that we could have missed. The best defence against talking ourselves into another international massacre is lots of reflective judgment. Some storms seem inevitable; but why pray for good weather while turning the crank of a rain-making device?

Gordon Winch,
III Emmanuel.

UBC INVITES RUSSIANS

THE VARSITY

VOL. LXXI NO. 28 THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO Tuesday, November 6, 1951

Introduce Year-long Visit Into "Russian Question"

The "Russian question" came up again yesterday on the University campus. The entire issue of inviting Russian students to Canada was discussed at a meeting of Political Commission of the Student Christian Movement yesterday afternoon at Trinity College.

The main difficulties implicit in the invitation issued by Denis Lazure on behalf of the Canadian student body were summarized as follows: (1) a tour would not develop understanding because it would be of too short duration, (2) the expense involved would ultimately hit the student who can so ill afford it, (3) political implications must be considered, (4) personal danger that if the tour took place NFCUS would split.

Possibility of a Russian-Canadian student exchange was not considered at the annual conference of National Federation of Canadian University Students held at London in September. At an Ontario region NFCUS conference held over the weekend Joan Presant, III UC, local NFCUS chairman, was questioned about a proposed exchange. This is the first time any mention of a student exchange had been made, she said.

A tour along the lines indicated at the conference this fall would last for only four weeks, Miss Presant said. It was expected that the students coming to Canada would be leaders who could be expected to have fixed ideas. We would be able to give them an idea of Canadian student life, but it would be impossible to furnish any understanding of thoughts, aims and ideals, she explained.

Shirley Endicott, IV Vic, felt that it might be more difficult to arrange such an exchange with the USSR government. It is already known that the Russian government will permit a tour as was outlined at the conference. A tour would permit more students to come than an exchange year she said.

Such a tour would contribute to friendship rather than to understanding. It would be a beginning. After this start towards better international co-operation was made it would be easier to evaluate the potentialities of a student exchange plan, she continued.

An observer at the NFCUS conference, Peter Alley, IV Trinity, gave his impressions of why the invitation extended to Russian students was withdrawn: (1) personal animosity towards Denis Lazure, last year's chairman of the International activities Commission of NFCUS who issued the invitation; (2) fear of public relations difficulties in both general public reaction to such an invitation; (3) fear of disapproval by university authorities; (4) financial difficulties, (even though the motion proposed specifically said that NFCUS would not become financially involved Alley said that NFCUS time and effort would be expended in arranging the tour; (5) NFCUS would be overextending itself; it is too young an organization to undertake this tour.

Male Haven

This building has caused more controversy than any other on the campus (except the potential Student Union Building). All the men on the campus know Hart House inside and out, but to most of the coeds only the above view is familiar. But the banning of women in Hart House has been a boon to reporters every time an unwary Frosh or designing vamp has dared to enter the sacred precincts.

Wire Sent To Soviets Is Ignored

Vancouver (CUP)—At least one Canadian university is doing something to bring Russian students over to Canada.

The University of British Columbia has sent a telegram to the Soviet Minister of Higheer Education, inviting him to send four Russian students to UBS for a year, in exchange for four Canadians studying in the Soviet Union.

The proposal has the support of the UBC administration, the student council, and the International Student Service.

The university is still awaiting an answer to the wire, sent by the editor of The Ubyssey, to Soviet Minister S. V. Kaftonov. The wire was sent nine days ago in answer to a request from the Moscow Journal News, which requested constructive suggestions to ease world tension.

Under the proposed terms, UBC will pay the expenses of the Russians. The Soviet government would provide tuition, room and board, and travelling expenses for the Canadians.

UBC President, Dr. N. A. MacKenzie says the administration will give all possible support to the plan, provides the Soviet students are able to meet the necessary academic standards.

The Student Council says it cannot guarantee financial support, but that it will do everything possible to make the scheme a success.

UBC has a $9000 annual fund for foreign exchange scholarships. This fund, built up through a one-dollar per student levy on fees, is now being used in an exchange system with Hamburg University, and a DP-student self-help program.

A LAD ALAS

Almost A Saint

By DAVID ROTENBERG

Last night I almost became a saint. Not the kind of saint that is dead and canonized, but the kind that dwells in the red brick building opposite Varsity Stadium. After spending four years as a student at University College and a loyal member of the UC Literary and Athletic Society, I decided that it was time to see how the other half lives. So disguised as a freshie I entered Saint Hilda's College and offered myself for initiation into that institution. I was not accepted.

It all began yesterday afternoon when I discovered that the initiation was to take place at 7:30. Tapping my many and varied sources of information I was informed that the event was to take place in Cartwright Hall and that all freshies were to come in costumes. Each first year student could come as a prospector, a nurse, or a bartender. I chose to be a bartender as I thought it would be the easiest. So attired in a pair of slacks, a lab coat, and an oversized hat I entered the hallowed halls of St. Hilda's.

I took my place in the line of freshies in the main hall, and when ordered to do so I put a blindfold over my eyes (I used a kerchief brought along for the purpose) and let it fall over my face. I thought that the less of me that showed, the better. I was soon taken by the arm and led down a hall.

"Down on your knees", said the officious soph, so I got down on the floor, surrounded by countless females. Soon the ritual began.

A slightly nervous soph read a short speech on the faults of her inferiors. I was informed that I hadn't opened doors for the students of upper years, I hadn't served them at the table, and I hadn't acknowledged their superiority For these and countless other sins I was informed that I would be punished. I was, but not for any of the sins mentioned.

Then came my downfall. Roll was called. When they came to my assumed name, I said "Here" in my best falsetto. But my best was not good enough and my obviously masculine voice caused a ripple of laughter from the assembled freshies and hurried whispered consultations among the sophs. I heard such comments as "let him stay", "who is he?" "what will we do?", etc. Then to make sure one of the second year girls lifted the kerchief from my face and lovingly stroked my cheek. I had shaved just an hour before but it didn't help. I was discovered.

I was hastily escorted from the room, and bodily thrown out of the back door into the cold. I removed my blindfold and turned to see a group of laughing sophs. It's all right girls, I had fun too. With a pleasant goodnight to the slightly bewildered girls, I fled into the night.

I had remained with the freshie group long enough to find out that each one was required to compose an original limerick before she could be admitted as a full-fledged Saint. I didn't get to recite mine so I submit it now for the approval of the sophs.

When I decided to become a Saint
The idea seemed quite quaint
But my sex was found out
The sophs raised a shout
So now as a Saint, I just ain't.

Boiler Failure Forces Students To Restaurant

Economics students discussed their theoretical problems in the eyes of the cold, cruel world yesterday afternoon, when a discussion group moved from the Economics Building on Bloor Street to a restaurant across the road.

Diners in the back room at Diana Sweets saw about 25 students, accompanied by their tutor, walk in, pull a number of tables together, and begin the discussion group. The scholars were part of the first year pass economics class.

The discussion, over coffee and milkshakes, seemed to proceed quite satisfactorily, in spite of noise from other tables, and one student's manipulation of sugar-cube "dice".

The group was forced out of the Economics Building when the heat failed there. The University Superintendent's Office blamed the cold on a faulty motor in the heating plant. The motor, which went out of commission about 9:00 a.m., was replaced by 4 p.m.

Icy Roads Hospitalize 7 Students

The poor visibility and icy roads Friday night caused two serious accidents which sent seven persons to hospital at Woodstock. Most seriously injured was Robert Prendergast who suffered severe back injuries and is paralysed from the chest down. Prendergast was riding in a car driven by Ward Day when it went into a soft shoulder and then swerved in front of another car.

His cousin, John Prendergast, received minor injuries including a small bone broken in his foot, Ward Day was treated for severe shock, bruises and lacerations; Clare McMollin had head injuries while Mary Wilkinson suffered a broken left foot with head abrasions. John Prendergast and Mary Wilkinson were the only university students involved in the accident.

On Sunday Robert Prendergast was removed from Woodstock General Hospital to the Toronto General Hospital, where his condition is reported to be serious.

Four Trinity students were involved in another accident near Woodstock when the car they were riding in swerved across the road after trying to give a passing car more room on the road. Ian Thomas, Tiny Thompson, Peter Crabtree, and Rod Whitehead escaped uninjured and made it to the game in London after spending the night in Woodstock.

The driver of the car, Mary Gledhill, a nurse, suffered cuts which required several stitches while a passenger, Nancy Ogle, had two fractured ribs. Thomas, Thompson and Crabtree were sleep in the back of the car at the time of the accident.

SAC Radio Committee Chairman Retracts Previous Statements

The following statement has been released to The Varsity by Douglas Waite, SAC Radio Committee Chairman. This statement refers to remarks made at the SAC meeting of October 31st, at which time the Radio Committee came under severe criticism.

"As chairman of the Radio Committee it is my duty to make radio on the Varsity campus open to all students who are interested:

(1) In learning the mechanics of radio production.

(2) In taking part in student radio productions.

The Drama Group under the direction of Mr. Harry Giles and the Round Table Group under the direction of Mr. Rocky Martino were already in operation and doing an excellent piece of work. However I felt that I was not getting to the ground floor in operations and that many interested groups were not represented on the committee. Therefore I asked that the committee be re-organized to give representation to Glee Clubs, Musicales, and "Special Events".

Due to unfortunate happenings of the last year, radio on the campus has been generally poorly supported. This unhappy circumstance, and its many misunderstandings, were bequeathed to me by the SAC. More unhappy misunderstandings have led to statements which involve the good faith of Mr. Giles and Mr. Martino who themselves admit to misunderstandings on their part.

Therefore I hereby retract the statements,

(1) . . . "these two gentlemen are running the Radio Committee by themselves. When he calls meetings of the Radio Committee, they either don't bother showing up, or spend the time telling him what they have done already, without previously consulting him."

(2) Wax further charged that the Martino and Giles were committing the SAC without authority, and were using the Radio Committee to settle private feuds.

Mr. Wax acted on the basis of the reports which were made to the Executive Committee of the SAC and therefore I feel responsible for the statements he made.

W. Douglas Waite,
Chairman of the Radio C...mittee

Show Tickets Moving

Three campus shows are selling tickets this week, and all three report "satisfactory" ticket sales.

The Vic Bob-Revue, which opened last night, expects to have sell-outs tonight and tomorrow. Last night there were about 25 or 30 empty seats. However, this was a larger ticket sale than last year's, according to Bob Director Terry Lawson.

The "Traditional first-week drag" in buying UC Follies tickets ended yesterday, Dave Rose, President of the University College Literary and Athletic Society, said yesterday. Although few tickets were sold last week, he said, a couple of hundred went yesterday. There has been a good response to letters sent out to alumni, he added.

Skule Nite, which plays Nov. 16 and 17, has already sold 1,300 of the 3,000 tickets it needs, Publicity Director Frank Yamada said yesterday.

Rathbone Speaker At Temple

Tickets go on sale at a special reduced student price tomorrow for a series of four lectures, sponsored by Holy Blossom Temple.

Speakers in the series will include Will Durant, "Maggie" Higgins, Owen Lattimore, and Basil Rathbone. The tickets are being sold at the Students' Administrative Office at Hart House for $2.00 a book.

First speaker, scheduled for next Monday, is Will Durant, who will speak on "Marriage in Transition." Durant is the author of "The Story of Philosophy", "Our Oriental Heritage", "The Life of Greece", "Caesar and Cleopatra", and "The Age of Faith".

A well-known woman war correspondent, Marguerite Higgins, is the next lecturer. The subject of her speech will be "On the Rim of the Iron Curtain." Hiss Higgins has covered the Korean war, arriving there two days after war broke out.

"Roots of the Conflict in Asia" will be the subject of Owen Lattimore, speaking January 14. Lattimore, often called "the best-informed American on Asiatic affairs living today", has written eleven books and many articles on Asia.

Final speaker of the series will be Basil Rathbone, speaking on "The Magic of the Theatre". He plans to tell the audience anecdotes of life on the stage to give them, in his words, "an inkling of what it is to be part of the greatest of all entertainment forms."

Sex Again...

Skule Nite is open to the rest of the campus this year for the first time. Some of the girls from the chorus are seen in this picture. Clockwise starting from the left hand corner they are: Alice Strand, Carol McKinley, Jane Phillips, Audrey Koehler, Noreen Pye and Margie Sewell. Skule Nite will be at Hart House Theatre Nov. 16 and 17. Friday night sales are particularly good, Publicity Director Frank Yamada said yesterday, due to the dance that night.

Record Hour

Do you tire easily in dull lectures? Are you the typical student whose nerves are frayed after a long, hard day filled with lectures? Your problems are solved.

Recently, I decided to track down the rumors and went to hear the Carnegie Record Collection.

Climbing three flights of stairs in the Mechanical Building takes a little effort but when I reached the Faculty Common Room I was more than rewarded. It wasn't only the two-toned walls of soothing green, the modern furnishings, the friendly chatter around me or the comfortable lounging chairs; you can even smoke there.

Best of all is the music. Students of all years who enjoy and love good music gather together to hear well-loved favorites. For some reason it was found that last year an average of 20 students came to the all-Beethoven hours while the average audience for other record hours usually consists of about 15 students.

In the large selection given by the 640 records there is a wide range of music to suit all tastes. To hear your personal favorites you need only to sign the request book. If your request is not in the collection, providing there are enough requests for it, the selection will be bought out of the yearly grant of fifty dollars.

Although many people expect to find students from the Music course to predominate in the audience, actually students from many different faculties attend the concerts including Psychology, Anthropology, and Physical and Occupational Therapy.

A grant is given each year by the Carnegie Foundation, which donated the collection, and out of this money additions are made to the collection and to the equipment used to play the records. Last year a long-playing attachment was bought for the record player in addition to two long-playing records.

The curator of the collection, Mary Gemmell II UC, said that most of this your's grant will be spent on long-playing records which are unbreakable and easily stacked in a small space. The record collection grows year by year as new records are added to the collection.

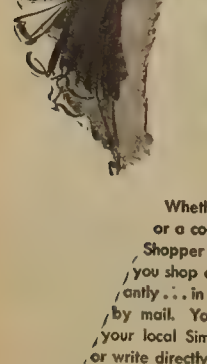
Occasionally a student wishes to have his own records played to the Music Club. The guest speaker, Professor E. A. Alcutt, at the opening program illustrated his talk on Musical Parodies with records from his private collection which rivals the Carnegie Collection in numbers.

Present plans call for the record hours to be held three times weekly. If you wish to end a hectic day in a relaxing atmosphere drop in to the Faculty Common Room, Mechanical Building at 5 o'clock on Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday.

Tri-Service Graduation Saturday

The Tri Service Graduation Ceremony will take place Saturday, November 10, at 9:30 a.m. on the front campus of the University of Toronto.

Cadets and newly commissioned officers in the three services (navy, army and air force) will parade on the front campus. The cadets will hear addresses from the heads of the Navy, the Army and the Air Force.



Representative presentations of certificates of qualifications of Commissioned rank will be made.

A Memorial Day Service is scheduled to take place at 10:45 in front of Memorial Tower, Hart House, after the Graduation Ceremony is over.

The Canadian Officers Training Corps is recruiting men to the end of December. The COTC has had a fair turnout. So far 75 applications have been received and the Corps expects to have 100 applications by the end of December.

"Childish" Is Students' Verdict On Cancellation Of Pep Rally

The cancelling of the pep rally originally scheduled for this Friday night, received support from only two University College co-eds in a poll taken of 29 students by The Varsity on Monday afternoon. The poll was started after several letters were received condemning the action of the executive committee of the Students' Administrative Council in cancelling the pep rally because of the vandalism on Hallowe'en Eve.

Every man polled from the professional faculties was against the cancellation although some of them had not been to a pep rally in three or four years at the university. The strongest opinion expressed came from an engineer in third mechanical who said that it was about time for an election to change the members of the SAC as they hadn't done anything but cause trouble so far. Most of the men from engineering, meds and forestry thought that the action was "silly", "childish" or "ridiculous." The word "childish" was used by seven men and one co-ed.

Many could not understand how the pep rally and vandalism could be connected and felt that the SAC should not punish the student body for the actions of "one or two". One engineer said that if he wanted to paint a building he wouldn't wait for a pep rally, while a Vic man said that it was unfair to the co-eds, who make up the majority of the pep rally audience, as the girls didn't do any of the painting.

Support for the cancellation was divided with one girl saying that it should be cancelled because it would interfere with the UC Follies, and another saying that she thought all pep rallies should be cancelled and recommended that pep rallies should be held at 4:30 in the morning, presumably so that they would not interfere with other activities and would attract real enthusiasts.

Members of the cast of the UC Follies disagreed with the timing of the pep rally but thought that the cancellation was a "childish treatment for adults" or a stopping of a safety valve for student enthusiasm.

The surprising aspect about the poll was the difference in the answers between the co-eds and the men. The ladies tended to have a wider range of opinion—when they did have an opinion, but a much smaller percentage had heard about the cancellation. Of the 29 persons polled, 11 did not know anything about the executive committee's decision, two supported the cancelling of the pep rally, and 16 opposed the move.

Tories Agree On Later Date For Elections

Mock Parliament elections have definitely been postponed till after the Provincial election of November 22. This was the decision of the Mock Parliament Committee of the Political Science Club last Friday when the Macdonald-Cartier Club decided to go into the elections in spite of the fact that last week they voted against holding them. However, they stipulated that they be postponed till after the main election.

A week ago the Macdonald-Cartier Club voted against holding the elections at all. In the meantime several students interested in seeing that the Mock Parliament elections be held banded together and decided to form an independent conservative club that could fight the election. These students included Vern Turner, IV UC, and Andy Watson, IV Trin.

The night before the meeting of the Mock Parliament Committee, these students presented their alternatives to Dave Fry, President of the MacDonald-Cartier Club and told him that if he did not participate in the Campus elections, they would.

As a result, the MacDonald-Cartier Club voted for the elections on Friday and specified their postponement in case of embarrassment on the part of one or another of the campus parties over the election results.

The elections had definitely been set for the 15th of this month. As a result of the postponement the date is not definite now, but notice of the new date will be made public. Other activities such as the forums for the debate of the party platform are also cancelled for the time being.

Campus Show

Vic Bob Revue

By JACK GRAY

It's difficult to know just what to say about this year's Vic Bob Revue. It is a well-organized, fast-paced show. It has good sets which make a pleasant background and set a good atmosphere, obviously a lot of work has gone into parts of it and those who present it are enjoying themselves.

But as a show, and even bringing it down a level and saying, as a college show, it doesn't hang together.

While it is well paced, time after time it hits the boards with a resounding thump. Too often skits fade quietly out leaving a bewildered audience. And while some of the old traditional numbers (solo piano, a chorus line) brought heavy applause, I looked in vain for anything new, or different, or with that pleasant twist that college shows so often produce. Most of the gags never really lost the frost that cold storage produces. The dances, while well planned, were executed, and the two-piano musical accompaniment, particularly in the Overture, wafted me off to regions that I usually associate with beautiful ladies, heavy drapes, soft lighting, and the Ontario Licensing Act.

This is the 79th annual production of the Vic Bob, which for the first year has been combined with the now defunct Scarlet and Gold Revue. It is not all a vale of tears. What is good is not very much above average, but does provide pleasant entertainment.

John Baylis' choreography for Murray's Flurries may owe something to other, more famous, routines, but it was well planned. Unfortunately the dancing didn't give it a chance. Phelps Bell and Walt Stewart (lyrics) combined in a Solemn Search For Knowledge to give a lighthearted treatment of four years at college, with a marvellous punch line about "not letting your studies interfere with your education." It was well sung by Jack Burnett and Bom Loudon, even though they seemed a bit nervous on opening night.

I liked Shakespearean Sketches, and would have enjoyed it twice as much if it were half as long. Arthur Pennington and Debora Turnbull were outstanding here. Judy McGill's rendition of The Farmer's Daughter was fun, but I didn't get the point of the number at all.

In a class by itself was Way Back Home, done by the Bob Revue Chorus, directed by Fran Macdonald. The song is a good one, the lyrics are bright, and the singing gave the song a chance, even though it would be nice to see a few more male voices coming out of it.

The Joshua part of The Evolution of Music I enjoyed, but the rest of that number just never managed to climb out of the pit.

The costumes were simple for the most part, colorful and effective. The sets were very good, particularly in Murray's Flurries, Cannibal Cut-Ups, and in The Downfall of Dirty Dan.

There were two or three individual performances that we didn't sneal in above that deserve mention: Lillian Mitchell as Ambrosia in Dirty Dan, Bob Jackson who made it through a deal on eating in Hart House, and an unscheduled (and very old) Smiling Jack by George McCowan.

The skits were quite unhappy. Ricky Arnold should learn to write up to his climax, not down from it as he did in Doorstep Technique. Writers of skits for college shows might look for humorous situations which (a) lie outside college life and (b) do not intimately involve liquor, food and the slinky college gal (sex).

Producer Terry Lawson and the large number of undergraduates who have presented the Vic Bob Revue have done a good job, within the very serious limitations of mediocre material and as yet undeveloped talent. If it's any consolation I would remind them that yesterday's newspapers are used tomorrow for wrapping fish. This newspaper, and the reviews it carries, are no exception.

VIC'S CORNER

Well, peoples, here we are again and have we ever brung some hockey weather with us. We'll have ice at Little Vic before Xmas at this rate.

We saw the dress rehearsal of the BOB REVUE Sunday night and was it tremendous . . . the kids are really putting their hearts into it . . . by the time you read this, opening night will have come and gone but if there is one among us who has not procured tickets for any night then he should dash down to Hart House to see if there are any tickets left for Tuesday's or Wednesday's show . . . if he doesn't, he'll miss THE chance to see VIC at its best.

Glee Club—full rehearsal (that means all you men too) Wednesday night . . . watch this column for announcement of the Joint Opera and Glee Club Party—coming soon! . . . P.S.—they still need MEN.

Last Sunday's chapel service wasn't too well attended due to the BOB REVUE rehearsal and the Western week-end but for the mid-monthly do at Wymilwood we are hoping to have what they call a controversial speaker and are expecting a good turnout . . . watch the boards for more info.

At noon on Wed.—tomorrow—be sure to see Vic's booth at the Red Feather Fair on the front campus . . . rumour has it that the attraction will be well worth your contribution . . . the cheerleaders will be there and we might even see SGLIRPB.

GATHLETICS: Vic II's went down valiantly in softball last week so it's up to the basketball and hockey teams . . . hockey practices start next week and word has it that they have quite the coaches this year . . . we hear that one of the Freshie basketball teams has been practising like mad and don't know that they are the only team in their loop.

MATHLETICS: Vic footballers take on the second-place UC team tonight at 3:30 on the back campus . . . a Vic win will clinch first place in Group I . . . should be a real battle for both teams.

On the soccer front—Sr. Vic meets Trinity A on Thursday at 4:00 on the front campus. . . . In lacrosse Vic I's play Med I at 1:00 Wed. in Hart House gym . . . all Vic volleyball teams see action this week . . . hockey practices have started at Varsity Arena—watch the bulletin board for times, etc. Vic will have four teams this year again so let's have a big turnout.

In place of Miss Murray's column this morning we have been asked to announce that a club is being organized by Miss JOYCE BINGLEMAN known as the We Don't Like What Effy Writes Club—anyone interested sign the list provided on the Girls' Bulletin Board.

Need we say more —

effy.

P.S.—Don't forget, peoples, that there are only three weeks left to get your date for the Dance of Romance—The VIC INFORMAL Fri., Nov. 30.

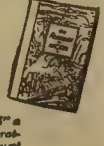
Nickel helps save lives too

Hundreds of everyday uses for Nickel have been developed by the Nickel industry through a planned program of research. Today a large share of Canada's Nickel production is being diverted from peacetime uses into channels for preparedness. So the Nickel mine facilities, greatly expanded over the past decade, are again being operated at peak capacity. There is actually more Nickel now being delivered by Canada to the free world than in any peacetime year.



Today important parts of sterilizers and instruments in hospitals are being made of nickel alloys because these alloys provide strength, corrosion resistance, long wear, and a surface that is bright, non-porous and sanitary. For the same reasons, kitchen working surfaces are made of nickel alloys.

Laundry equipment in hospitals and commercial hotels is made of nickel alloys because these alloys are rust-proof and extremely durable.

Water Fowl Country Figures In Roy Novel

abrielle Roy. McClelland & tewart, 1951, $3.00.

With the instant success of her t novel, The Tin Flute in , Gabrielle Roy was hailed as writer of promise. In her sec- novel she leaves the poverty- icken Saint-Henri quarter of ontreal for a new locale. Where sts the Water Hen is set in sparsely settled north of s Roy's native Manitoba.

The Tousignant family — other, father and eight chil- n — live on an island in the tle Water Hen River. The only on who does any travelling Mama Tousignant, who, al- st every year leaves for an portant excursion, only to re- rn in a few days with a special t — a new member of the mily.

As the family increases, Mama s with concern the problem educating her children. By a oke of genius she decides to ite to the Government of nitoba for a teacher, and prisingly enough, they comply h her request provided that a oolhouse is built to accom- date the new teacher.

The senior Tousignant pro- ceeds to build a lo gedifice and make all the furniture needed. Mama joyously prepares for the arrival of the new teacher, and for three summers different teachers successively sow the seeds of a desire for learning in the minds of the young Tousig- nants, who grasp eagerly for all the information that is offered.

An eagerly awaited visitor to the wilderness is the Capuchin priest, Father Joseph-Marie, who has mastered twenty languages in order to communicate with his two or three hundred parishion- ers of various races and creeds. Guided by the light of his under- standing we see these people, in spite of their racial and re- ligious difference and personal weaknesses, working toward the Christian ideal of brotherly love.

Where Nests The Water Hen has very little plot; it is rather a chronicle of everyday events. Characterization is good, and Miss Roy handles Mama Tousig- nant with the same skill that she used in portraying Rosa in The Tin Flute. Mama is completely wrapped up in her family and all her actions stem from her love for her children. She has an ever-cheerful outlook which sometimes seems a little forced, when she bursts out in laughter over incidents which are not really amusing at all. It is as if Miss Roy was trying to appease her critics by infusing her char- acters with the gaiety and hap- piness — an element lacking in the sombre fabric of The Tin Flute.

Again, in her portrayal of chil- dren Miss Roy exhibits the same sensitive understanding which won her an audience in The Tin Flute. How reluctant and tremu- lous are the good-byes of the Tousignant children as their mother leaves for her yearly trip! How urgent are their shouts asking her to remember to bring back some crayons!

Probably the most enjoyable section of the novel deals with Father Joseph-Marie. The author skilfully opens his heart and mind to us so that we share the secret satisfactions, hopes and schemes of this hardy and kindly priest. How he manages to get a harmonium for his church pro- vides one of the most delightful episodes in the novel.

In descriptive passages Miss Roy's eye seems to pass with loving familiarity over the nor- thern landscape, capturing on paper the atmosphere of the water fowl country. Most im- portant of all, there breathes in Where Nests The Water Hen that fine pioneering spirit of the French-Canadian and relates Miss Roy's novel to the tradition whose roots are found in Maria Chapdelaine.

Jean Cuta

Ave Atque Vale

J. Middleton Murry has been busy for the past thirty years in- voking the ghost of his deceased wife, Katherine Mansfield. The publication this fall of a ten dollar tome of letters from the late Miss Mansfield to Mr. Murry marks the issue of just one more invitation on the part of Murry for us to par- take of her unpublished remains.

The presence of such a sensitive soul undressed in public is em- barrassing, yet we do not deny that the critics as well as the curious will be gratified by the publication of these letters. If it is possible for the critic to trace the influence of the life-experience of a writer on the work he creates, then he should be able to put his finger on the reason why Kather- ine Mansfield felt that her writ- ing was too removed from her life. She felt that her stories were cramped birds in golden cages. She held out for herself the highest standards o ftechnical perfection, but tortured herself with questions which betray her awareness that there was something missing, even when that kind of perfection was realized.

If we believe in the reality of the spiritual struggle of her last years and in the thought that she was well on her way to making her life and her art one, then these letters are of immense interest to the critic. For it was Katherine Mansfield's close miss on the side of life which makes her a lesser artist and accounts for the 'maliciousness' which so many people object to in her short stories.

Rich Satisfying Novel 4th In Series by Snow

"THE MASTERS", by C. P. Snow. MacMillans, 1951, $2.75.

Satisfying novels, books with an equal complement of intellectual ior and story sense, are hard come by in an era when man's search for mate truth is debilitated by a lack of general moral energy. North erican writers often seem so revolted with that lax creature, man, t they throw up their values in disgust and waste their talent in illiant but unconstructive description of the social weaknesses they, nselves, are victims of. English writers have more individuality in ir approach to present-day problems. One of their number has ently published a fine and refreshing novel bearing out the English m to individuality of expression and which, for sheer soundness of roach shames the American prophets of degeneracy. "The Masters" hronologically the fourth in a projected series of eleven novels based the life of "Lewis Eliot," a barrister whose varied life brings him into tact with many characters and personalities in whom he is passion- ly interested as people. Like the three books already published and seven to come, "The Masters" is complete in itself.

The situation of the novel is simplicity itself: the Master of a Cam- ge college, though he doesn't know it himself, is dying of cancer. The llows of the college, realizing they will soon have to elect a new one, gin to form themselves into factions. During the year the master takes die, the fellows feud over the endlessly impending election. Votes pass k and forth. Each party tries to win over the members of the other. endships become strained and rivalries more intense. Lewis Eliot is allow of the college, and we see the strained events through his eyes.

In his way Lewis is a kind of chorus — his sketches of the thirteen ellows are remarkably unclogged by personal views, and his intelligent, searching mind presents them to us in their own dignity as scholars and n of taste, perception, and sensitivity. He is merciless with their faults, t in brotherly affection mindful of their little greatnesses. This is not suggest the characters are all men of genius — some of them are not distinguished scholars. Yet their innate sense of what is right and good pervades the book like the scent of a good cigar.

"The Masters" is many things — political, peaceful, rich, yet full of tension. Its author has a terrific sense of climactic structure and the apt ulation. For instance, in one superbly written scene Colvert and Eliot count off the other side's supporters as they cross the courtyard to their first meeting, and discover who is not on their side. This apparently commonplace action is invested with extraordinary charm and fitness, as are many other bits, notably the claret party.

Despite academic setting, "The Masters" is not a heavy novel. The characterizations are too searching and the political moves too swift for boredom. It makes use of no obviously modern techniques, and is devoid of the lust of Joyce Cary's novels or the intensity of Graham Greene's. Its own atmosphere, however, is so immensely compelling, its solution so staggeringly right, that one hardly notices a lack of qualities one would demand as a matter of course in the average modern novel. It may be said that "The Masters" is essentially unmodern. Its style is traditional and it makes not the slightest pretense at artiness or intellectualism. At any rate it succeeds admirably in showing a group of intelligent, human men in their own habitat, and in developing their story well.

Twentieth Century Limited

20th Century Unlimited, ed. Bruce Byevin. Longman's Green. 1951, $4.25.

Under the guidance of Bruce Blevin, the editorial writer of the New Republic, a book of es- says on the problems of our time has been compiled. The aim of this book, according to Mr. Blevin, is to show that al- though we are living in trouble- some times, all is not dark. To prove his point, the editor pre- sents articles by experts on the socio - economic - politico - an- thropological aspects of Amer- ican life from 1900-50.

Elmer Davis, Leon Svirsky, Robert Nathan, Phillip Murray, and Clyde Kluckhohm give their considered opinions on such topics as world politics, the atom, trade unionism and the manners and morals of Americans. These eminent spokesmen make a sincere attempt to analyze the many factors which make Amer- ica what it is today—what ever that implies.

Mr. Blevin is a liberal who be- lieves that the problems that be- set the U.S. can be solved by intelligent compromise. The dis- appointment which the reader experiences while reading 20th Century Unlimited can be trac- ed to the same cause which un- derlies the immaturity of Amer- ica today. That is, as usual, while being earnest and honest, these eminent writers have for- gotten to scrutinize themselves and have got lost with their 'problems'.

These problems are real prob- lems, the solutions are real, but only on the assumption that America is basically faultless, and has only a few minor diffi- culties which can easily be solv- ed. What these writers fail to realize is that U.S.A. is a coun- try of contradictions and para- doxes in the American philos- ophy of life. (e.g. a good man can get ahead—only if white, twenty-one and Protestant Anglo- Saxon.) And that these para- doxes must be solved if Ameri- ca's future is to be truly un- limited.

Strange New World Of Science Fiction

The House of Many Worlds' by Sam Merwin, Jr. Doubleday, 1951, $2.75.

In his first science-fiction nov- el, "The House of Many Worlds", Sam Merwin, Jr. has turned out as well-written a story as his earlier mystery thrillers. The plot angle is rather a trite one in STF (scientific-technological fic- tion)—that of skipping lightly from our world to other possible "worlds" where historical events take a different course, but Mer- win treats it with skill and imag- ination.

The story concerns a poetess- journalist and photographer who is an ex-pugilist and what hap- pens when they visit a lonely Florida key which is a transi- tion spot from one to the other of these co-existing possible "worlds". Here they are enlisted as trouble-shooters to resolve the difficulties in a world where the South has gained the ascendant in the United States and formed a Columbian Republican—an oli- garchy where manufacturing in- dustries are suppressed and in- ventive ability thwarted. They also reach another "world" where the onrush of science and medi- cine has created a population pressure whose only solution is space travel, and this is only made possible by bringing the knowledge from another possible world which has it.

The plot as sketched above is pretty standard fantasy but the author's imaginative treatment keeps it from degenerating to the "space opera" of the dime thrill- ers. The science fantasy, like the whodunit, is a specialised type of fiction read in the past by only a small and rather fanatic group but lately, as recent films such as "The Thing", "The Man From Planet X", and "The Day the Sun Stood Still" have shown, it is a genre that is appealing to more and more people. The field is one that could make a con- siderable contribution to our pres- ent technology-conscious civili- zation and it is heartening to see a novel like Merwin's—not a cla- sic like some of the early Brad- bury or Heinlein, but one which, if taken as indicative of the aver- age quality of STF writing today should presage a steady flow of good reading for the fantasy fan.

New Poems About East By Bruce

The Mulgrave Road by Charles Bruce. MacMillans, 1951, $2.50.

Readers interested in the thin but persistent stream of Canad- ian poetry that trickles into the bookstores and libraries will be familiar with the poetry of Charles Bruce, and need no introduction to his latest sheaf, The Mulgrave Road. To those readers whose interests lie in other directions, a casual glance at this group of poems will only re-assure them that they were better off when they left Cana- dian Poetry where it is generally left — on the shelf. Nor do we have any justification in this in- stance for challenging their de- cision. The Mulgrave Road, un- fortunately, is just one more book of poems which just nearly has something to say but not quite. The usual criticisms can be levelled against it — the poet leans too heavily on local color (the provincial background is Nova Scotia) and trite universals which meet on the fair-weather ground of adequate but unin- spired words.

Granted, we too, are just as uninspired in our appraisal of these poems. We don't say that they should never have been published, because they do emanate an atmosphere of sea air and deadwood which many will enjoy re-living who are fa- miliar with the east coast. We can recommend them only on the strength of this appeal coupled with the hope that they will serve as a reminder to those who do care about Canadian Poetry, that it still exists, but is a long way off from attaining any standard of excellence.

Skule Shoots

The bit of action above occurred during an interfaculty football game on the front campus yesterday afternoon. The Mikemen emerged victors, 4-1, over Junior Skule. Shorts were hardly the most comfortable apparel on the snow-covered field that made good ball-handling difficult.

Pitching Sportshoes

In lacrosse activity at noon yesterday, Meds II defeated the SPS II team by a 6-1 count. Brunton and Sproule led the Meds attack with two tallies apiece, while Harper of Skule spoiled Barrington's shutout with a second quarter score.

In the afternoon boxla tilt Vic II edged St. Mike's B 4-1. The Irish took a one goal lead in the first frame and held it to the half. But the Vicsters tied it up in the third and sewed up the game in the fourth with three more. Hulbert led the Vic attack with three tallies.

On the soccer front, St. Mike's shutout Jr. SPS by a 4-1 score. Salamon led the attack with two tallies. In the other scheduled soccer tilt, Pre-Meds defaulted to Architecture, as the Medsmen were unable to field a team.

On the volleyball floor, Jr. UC had little trouble as they defeated Jr. SPS two straight, 15-5 and 15-7. In the other contest, St. Mike's D took Vic III 15-12 and 15-9.

McGill Liquidates Queen's 19-2 Can Force Playoff Saturday

By defeating the Queen's Gaels 19-2 last Saturday afternoon in oMntreal, the McGill Redmen strengthened their position as contenders for the top place in the Intercollegiate football picture for the 1591 season. Played on a field covered with more than three inches of snow and in a blizzard that raged all through the contest, the game was the fourth victory in a row for the Redmen.

Dawson Tilley was the leading point-getter for the winners with two majors, while Lionell Quinn scored the remaining McGill touchdown. Other McGill scoring came on a convert of the first touchdown by Dave Tomlinson and three rouges.

Queen's picked up their two points when Geoff Crain was rouged behind the McGill line and when Ross McKelvey kicked to the deadline for the Tricolor.

Only 8,000 shivering fans braved the driving snow and the subfreezing temperatures to cheer on their respective teams. Playing conditions made the attack of both teams ragged in spots, with both quarterbacks sticking pretty well to the ground. The field was so covered with snow that it took the head linesman three minutes to find the Queen's 15 yard line when they requested a measure on a contested McGill first down.

The win gave McGill a record of 4 wins and a loss in league play this season, their only defeat coming at the hands of the Blues in their first scheduled game of the year. A win over the Blues this coming weekend would put them in first place by one point (the Blues only get one point from their tie game with the Mustangs this weekend) and necessitate a playoff with the Blues. If, however, McGill fails to beat the Blues this weekend, any title hopes will be gone as far as the Redmen are concerned.

The hapless Gaels have yet to win a league game this fall, and get their last chance when they meet the Mustangs this Saturday in the other Intercollegiate league fixture of the weekend.

Karpuk Incident

Coaches went into a frenzy, fans threw snowballs and there ensued one of the grandest rhubarbs in the history of Canadian football when Pete Karpuk of the Ottawa Roughriders leaped off the bench last Saturday afternoon to tackle Ulysses Curtis of the Argos as he raced toward an important touchdown in the fourth quarter of the crucial game after intercepting one of O'Malley's passes.

But Karpuk was not the first one to pull a fool stunt (looking at the incident now, it seems as if there was a lot of horse sense in what Karpuk did) that was not specifically covered by the rules. Years ago in the States, a college team came onto the field at half time with a leather patch sewn to the sweaters of all the backfielders that was the color and size of a regulation football. Simply by crooking their arms as if they were cradling a ball, that team managed to thoroughly confuse the opposition. The situation is now adequately covered in Canadian rules.

The old helmet-under-the-sweater trick has been pulled so often during the history of the game as to be almost common-place. All the backfielders take off their helmets and put them under their sweaters. After the ball is snapped, one of them exchanges his helmet for the pigskin and it is up to the other team to figure out just who actually has the ball. This one is dealt with in the rule book today.

Of course, the rules commission will soon look after this latest problem and see that it never occurs again, but the brave ref who handed down the on-the-spot decision in last Saturday's game will probably go unheralded. In a lot of ways he is a lucky stiff, for had the Argos not made that touchdown, and had they lost the game on account of the ruling, he would undoubtedly have been the most unpopular individual that football circles have been graced with for many a moon.

He had a tough decision to make. Had he given the Argos an automatic touchdown, the Riders would probably have walked off the field, even though, in our estimation they would have been far from justified in doing so. A technical touchdown would seem a fair penalty for such an infraction of the moral rules of the game, but the final decision is a matter for the law-making body of the league.

Karpuk seems to have an almost uncanny intuition for getting himself in the spotlight, even if the circumstances are rather unusual (his famous boob in the Grey Cup final against the Calgary Stamps three years ago) and last weekend was certainly no exception.

Sportswoman

Yesterday's game between UC and St. Mike's was cancelled due to weather conditions. Notice will appear in The Varsity when the schedule is resumed.

The following are on the women's Intercollegiate swimming team and will represent Varsity against Humberside Collegiate on Monday, November 12 at 5:30 p.m. in the U.T.S. pool and in the Intercollegiate meet at Western on December 1: Lois Cossar, Mary Crowther, Barbara Ferris, Beryl Lewis, Claire McMullen, Pamela Perrin, Peggy Rowntree, Louise Willrd and Francis Wood.

Carrol Top Back In Western Game MacFarlane Close

Top ground gainer in the Western-Varsity game Saturday was Western's Jim Carrol. Carrol, a slim six-footer of 170 pounds, who has missed most of the season due to an injury, racked up a total of 81 yards in only ten tries. Varsity's Bill MacFarlane had the next best total, 78 yards in 13 tries, but Bob Dale had the best average, carrying the ball ten yards per crack on only four attempts.

	Yards Gained (net)	Average
Carrol (W)	81	8.1
MacFarlane (T)	78	6.0
Fracas (W)	73	4.9
Oneschuk (T)	71	8.9
Bewley (T)	47	5.9
Henderson (W)	44	3.7
Rumball (T)	41
Dale (T)	40	10.0

MEETING

There will be an important meeting of The Varsity Sports Staff today, Tuesday, November 6 at 1:00 p.m. in The Varsity office. The following are urged to attend: John Gray, Bruce North, Bob Godson, Frank Quinlan, Barry Thomas, Jack Sturman, Al Boger, Irwin Guttman, Gerry Hollyer, Mike Callahan, Bill Corcoran, Jim Proudfoot, Bill Wilson, David Rotenberg, Mal Crawford, Carolyn Schmidt, Shirley Lane, Kay Schenk, Carol Logan, Joan Haggart.

One disappointing thing was the unaccountable cutting of the film at the end. The original film ended with orphan girl having drowned herself in the creek nearby. We see a torturing closeup of her dead face with her again-blind eyes staring at nothing. Then the minister picks up the body of his ward and walks back to the house.

But in Friday's version, the "Fin" came upon us as soon as we saw the footsteps in the snow leading away from her window towards the creek. The symbolism, the final touch, was obliterated.

SYMPHONIE PASTORALE is a picture to see. Still unless you are able to catch quick French speech, wait till you find it revived in a commercial house. Subtitles help.

The big opening this week is of course the latest Alec Guinness picture about which more soon. THE LAVENDER HILL MOB has taken the place of NO HIGHWAY IN THE SKY at the Odeon-Hyland. A tremendous and perhaps even overpowering double bill is the one at the Metro now with SUNSET BOULEVARD and BORN YESTERDAY. The Gloria Swanson deal is in itself a heavy program. But these are top pictures of the past year, and you will also catch Bill Holden playing quite different roles in the two films.

Another good double bill is THE BROWNING VERSION and HE RAN ALL THE WAY at the Birchcliffe, a coupling of opposites. And WORDS AND MUSIC, that MGM music-spectacle is revived at the Guild theatre. The Slaughter on Tenth Avenue ballet with Gene Kelly and Vera-Ellen is among the most exciting filmusical memments of the last few years.

It is also a good hint of what to expect when Gene Kelly turns up in AN AMERICAN IN PARIS which will open at Loew's this Thursday in a pre-release engagement. This last must be euphemistic for advanced prices. But from all reports, the upp... is justified for this musical.

Scots Here In New Year

London, Ontario (CUP) — Four Eastern colleges, Western, Varsity, Queen's and McGill will be hosts to a Scottish debating team early next year in competition for the Brading's Brewery International Debating Competition Trophy. The Scottish team will be in Canada early next year.

The Brading Trophy for the best team includes $1500 a year with the money to be used in financing the winning team's trip. Next year a Canadian debating team will fly to Scotland to compete with the Universities of Edinburgh, Aberdeen, Glasgow and St. Andrews for the trophy.

Grads Return To Help Haunt "UC Follies"

Back to haunt the Follies! That is the response of U.C. graduates to the ticket sale for the annual college show. Even as the undergrads were urged to buy their tickets, the U.C. Alumni was co-operating with the "Lit" and the WUA to bring out the graduates.

Irwin Pasternack, a graduate of U.C. and at present a student at Osgoode Hall, stepped in when director Victor Beube came down with apendicitis, and is directing the "Bitter Bulrushes" skit. Ben Wise, last AVR director, and Billy Freedman, last year's Follies Director, are both working for the show.

As rehearsals reach the final stages, last minute touches are being given to the dance routine in which fifty girls are taking part. Dress rehearsal is Thursday night.

On the McGill week-end a large crowd is expected to fill Hart House and consequently sale of tickets will be restricted. Those with tickets for the Blue and White Dance may pass directly from the Saturday night show into the Hart House dance floors.

Seoul Student In Journalism

Morgantown, W. Va., (Exchange) — A Korean student is being sponsored by the University of West Virginia here through the contributions of thirty-five campus organizations. The student, from Seoul, is studying journalism. After two years, in which he will complete his course, he intends to proceed to the Columbia School of Journalism, The Daily Athenaeum, campus paper, said.

Each year the All-Campus Student Committee sponsors a foreign student. The Korean student plans to establish a "typical American newspaper," on his return to Seoul, he said.

Mother Knows Best

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Now, Children

Alarmed by several instances of "mob violence," and especially worked up by the artist's delight job of All Saints' Eve, the Executive Committee of the Students' Administrative Council has taken a positive step in cancelling Friday night's pep rally.

The question the campus is asking is "Why was the pep rally cancelled?"

The Council's answer is that vandalism has occurred to an unprecedented degree on the campus this year. Spectators at the Queen's game booed the cheerleaders when, following unpublicized instructions from the Blue and White Society, they failed to cheer an injured player when he was carried from the field. At the Blue and White dance that evening, over $250 worth of decorations was torn down and removed by exhilarated dance patrons.

The painting episode represented the climax to this series of events, and it moved the SAC to positive action. They decided that rather than leave the matter entirely up to the Caput to settle, they would show that the student body of the University was concerned over the vandalism that had occurred. They wanted to guide their own flock when it strayed from the fold.

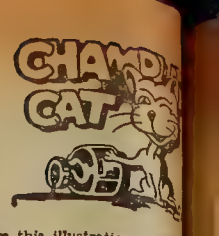
But is it not a rather slight thread of reasoning that connects the recent episodes of vandalism and a pep rally? We are beginning to feel that we are little children. We have been naughty and refused to eat our vegetables, and so we cannot have our ice cream.

As the last meeting of the Students' Council, a motion was made that the pep rally not be held. The reason, because University College was holding the Follies on the proposed night, and would suffer financially if anything as popular as a pep rally were to offer competition. The Co-ordinating Committee of the Council had already cleared the night for the Follies.

But a discussion and vote at the last Council meeting showed a majority in favor of holding a pep rally. The Council did this for well-considered reasons.

But the Executive Committee of the Council said nay. Are its members not being a little dictatorial in this step? A pep rally would rouse spirits and direct them in a way that would end, not in destruction, but in the healthy college enthusiasm whose passing old-timers so much regret.

The Council has got itself concerned over "mob violence" and "hooliganism," and is brushing up on its mob psychology. But we feel that this year's events indicate no special cause for alarm.



The booing of the cheerleaders was, under the circumstances, the perfectly natural action of a football audience, whose only intention in attending football games is to make itself heard. The football audience boos the team when it fails to measure up to standards; it boos the referees when it disagrees with their decisions; if a dog is running up the field and trips, man's best friend gets booed. Then why not boo the cheerleaders when they don't live up to expectations.

The removal of decorations from Hart House dances is something so common in practice that it is almost a tradition. Whatever is removable will be removed. Dance decorations are regarded more in the light of souvenirs than as private property, and this sort of stealth is almost sanctioned by society.

We feel that in its eagerness to act, the Executive Committee of the Council has made a tempest in a tea pot.

There is a tired old platitude that says, if you treat people like children, they will act like children. Perhaps the reason the saying is so tired is because it has often been tried, and found true

Getting Down To Business

We know it's there, but we wish campus humor would come out and show its head. Good Champus Cats have been almost non-existent this year. We are reprinting a Cat from The Varsity, October 31, 1947. to show you what we want.

Sometimes I think that it was easier in the old days. "Gosh! How easy it was then," I ponder. Then I decide that in a few years, perhaps, the surge of life will settle down to a pleasant little backwater where we can all fish, sleep, drink, or die as we see fit. But try as I may, I can't justify my carelessness in allowing myself to be lured away from that quiet haven whence all little boys and girls are lured (quiet, junior), into this particular section of history. (Circa 1925 - 19??)

Perhaps things are just moving a little too fast for me. As amatter of fact, anything over 80 seconds to the minute leaves me gasping for breath. I hold seven National Championships in passing time slowly, and am known throughout several counties as a man who never quite gets where he wants. (What or who may also be substituted in place of where.) Whenever something has to be done, the first thing you hear is, "Don't let old Jotay do it!" As a matter of fact, this does have its blessings, you see?

I think, perhaps, the thing which makes it more difficult to get along than the tendency of modern man to sleep only 10 seconds out of the minute, is the insatiable desire of our employers for efficiency and ability in the employee. In the old days, any child who could tramp ten miles to school every day, and chop a cord of wood before breakfast, was assured of success, as long as he managed to sneak into the city without a cent in his pocket. The roads, however, were crowded with big, fat capitalists all struggling to cram a dollar or two into the grimy mitt of the embryo Horatio Alger, and it became a battle of wits to pass their defenses and into the big town. Then, if there happened to be a spare corner around, and an old newspaper or two blowing along the gutter, why your fortune was made, provided you didn't try to fight the thing too much.

Now, however, it's no use just to stand on the sidewalk, dressed in rags, waiting for someone to offer you a railroad to run, or a chance to be governor. I tried it and nothing happened. Actually, it's just as well, since I doubt if I'd know what to do with a railroad, even if somebody did offer me one.

You can see from this illustration, though, what capitalism and free enterprise have done for us. They've filled all those big buildings you see when you go downtown (well, you should see them). Perhaps you're living in the country and don't know it.) With efficiency and work, the mere size of one of these bee-hives is enough to make any God-fearing young hopeful just turn in Smorth's Corners. I went down myself to see how things were going (hoping that somebody would get tired of the whole thing and present him with business to me) and I was appalled to see the amount of work done per minute.

The day started at 9 a.m., and by 12:30 p.m. hours' work had been covered. By 5 p.m. the morning's mistakes had been corrected and still no one was ready to go home. This went on for some time.

Luckily, I was able to keep myself from being swept into this whirl of business acumen by the simple expedient of disappearing out an open window. I had convinced myself, however, that I was asked to operate one of these affairs, I would turn the offer down.

Unfortunately though, the problem remains that man must work to live. By work, I mean any sort of random activity short of sleeping which involves doing something, regardless of sex. Work, I have often claimed, was originally given by God as an alternative to thinking, and has since overcome its master. Perhaps I have the machine in mind — in that case, substitute the word "machine." (But I'm pretty sure that I really did mean "work.")

Let us state the case this way: "A man must live to work." This seems more logical, and does not involve much philosophy, placing more importance on mere living. After all, nothing is more important than life, except perhaps death; neither of which involves much work on the part of the individual unless one happens to take things seriously.

This disposes of business rather easily, as far as I am concerned. If I had written this sooner, you wouldn't have been any need to see how the other half lives. Are there any questions?

OUR READERS WRITE

Plain Language

Editor, The Varsity:

We, the undersigned, strongly protest the cancelling of the Pep Rally scheduled for Friday night before the all-important McGill game.

We would question whether the Pep Rally would have been cancelled if the Bob Revue, a Trinity play, or a St. Mike's musicale had been in Hart House Friday night rather than the U.C. Follies.

The Varsity reported that neither UC president took part in the discussion at the executive meeting, but we wonder if there was an understanding before the meeting which "fixed" the vote. We thought it rather significant that no representatives were present from the other three Arts colleges.

We feel that, if the Pep Rally is being cancelled because of the "vandalism episode" it is unfair of the executive to punish the entire student body. But we also believe that the true reason for the cancellation may be that it conflicts with the Follies.

If the executive feels that it is reasonable to cancel an All-Varsity function which 11,000 may enjoy, in order that perhaps one hundred more tickets may be sold to the UC Follies, an affair which concerns only U.C. why don't they say so directly and in plain language?

If the exective does not believe that university students can have like adults and accept responsibility for their own actions, then the executive should not pretend to represent the student body.

There are bound to be some individuals in a community of 11,000 who cannot control themselves, but the whole community should not be punished for their actions.

We are reminded of the old one teacher who promises the class that if they behave like good little boys and girls, they will have a Hallowe'en party. But if mean little Johnnie Smith does not stop talking, the party is off.

Blackboard Macbeth

Editor, The Varsity:

When Macbeth cried, "Naught's had, all's spent" he was merely pleading the case of the poor Varsity students who pay exhorbitant fees for the privilege of having their eyes ruined by blackboards, white and shiny with the chalk dust of ages. Are those dirty blackboards in U.C. going to be left till they disintegrate or until they become pure white so that black chalk can be used?

I am referring, in particular, to a room in the UC tower, where, any Monday morning, two dozen myopic students can be seen straining four dozen (approximately) eyes, to read the world's worst writing on the world's worst blackboard.

It is too bad that the ill-famed idiots who ruined the front of UC did not apply their paint, instead, to some UC slates. Then perhaps something would be done.

Even the misguided infants who infest the south part of the campus deserve better than this!

And again Macbeth says, re installation of new slates:

If 'twere done when 'tis done,
Then 'twere better it were done quickly.

Dixieland Dinners at "Doodle"

Free chicken dinners, dixieland records, a chorus line and the Ec-ho's octet will highlight the Dixie Doodle, annual coed ball, to be held on Saturday, Nov. 10.

"We promise top-flight entertainment, wonderful prizes, and terrific music, all for only $1.25 a couple," stated Sybil Heft, W.A. publicity chairman.

MAMMY! Yes, together with all her little pickaninnies, she'll be at the Dixie Doodle, University of Manitoba Women's Association annual dance, being held Saturday, Nov. 10, at the civic auditorium. As you can well imagine, the affair will have a Dixieland theme.

And don't forget your Sho'tnin' Bread.

The corsage judged the most original and most novel, will win southern fried chicken dinners for two couples at Oden's Barbeque, and two long-playing Dixieland records featuring Tommy Dorsey and Bugsie Spanier, donated by the T. Eaton Co. Ltd.

The entertainment will be provided by a high-kicking chorus line, as well as selections by the eight Ec-ho's. Rita Corrigal will be guest vocalist. Emceeing the show will be two southern belles, Ruth Hambley and Marge ("Moe") Olsen.

Patrons for the dance will be Premier and Mrs. D. L. Campbell, Mr. Justice J. J. Kelly and Mrs. Kelly, Dr. and Mrs. A. H. S. Gillson, and Miss M. MacKay, dean of women.

Broadway florists will offer special Sadie Hawkins Day corsages for university students at cut rates upon presentation of UMSU student cards.

Ferg and Mittleman To Be Guest Soloists at Concert

Barbara Ferg and Norm Mittleman have been selected as guest soloists for the forthcoming choral-orchestral concert to be held Jan. 9, at the Playhouse theatre.

Miss Ferg, a student in Social Work, will perform a work for piano solo and string orchestra. Her musical career began 12 years ago and for the past eight years, she has studied under Phyllis Holtby. Last year, besides graduating from Arts, she was the gold medalist in music and received her A.M.M. degree, and won the Carolyn Harris memorial scholarship and the Wednesday Morning musical scholarship.

The complete program will be released within a few weeks. Tickets priced at $1.75 cents and $1 will go on sale in the third or fourth week of this month.

Montreal (CUP) — Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip toured the McGill University campus.

Faculty Representatives To Register Volunteers

All University of Manitoba students between the ages of 18 and 65 are eligible to register in the current campaign for blood donors being conducted by the University of Manitoba students' union public relations committee.

Information and registration forms are already in the hands of the various faculty representatives, who have been urged to ensure that their faculty has a large representation among those registering.

Films will be shown by the faculties this week explaining some of the aspects of the blood donor service.

A medical check up is made before the student is called upon to donate blood, Bob Jackson, public relations chairman, said. The Red Cross has arranged that the donations will be made at such time as not to conflict with examinations.

No pain is involved in the process. The average healthy individual replaces the blood lost within 48 hours, Jackson said.

The campaign is now in full swing. The Red Cross mobile unit will be set up in the residence auditorium on Tuesday, Nov. 6, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Education Dean Speaks Thursday

They left out the first line, so will we—the topic of Dean Neville Scarfe, newly appointed head of the department of Education, when he speaks to students Thursday at 12:30 noon in the second theatre, Arts Building.

Dean Scarfe's talk will be the first of a series on international affairs sponsored by the international student service. Other speakers include Reuben Bellan, of the department of Economics, Nov. 9; W. C. Coventry, United Kingdom trade commissioner, Nov. 15; E. W. Queen-Hughes, secretary of the Canadian institute of international relations, Nov. 22.

Commerce Stag Next Wednesday

Tickets for the annual commerce stag will be available today from Jack Masterman, Commerce social chairman. The stag will be held at the Highwayman, Wednesday, Nov. 7 at 8:30 p.m.

"The usual refreshments in great quantity will be served, and nips and chips will be solid nutrients," said Jim Speight, senior stick of Commerce.

"Entertainment will be of high calibre again," he added.

Pharmacy Debaters Win Over Architects

Taking the negative of the topic "Resolved that Communism and capitalism are compatible in modern society," Pharmacy won a split decision over Architecture last Tuesday.

Carl Prister of Architecture argued that Russia, a communistic territory, had allied with the western democracies (capitalists) in the last war, and was doubtlessly compatible. George Atwell, as second speaker for the affirmative, used British government as an example of compatibility.

Arguing for Pharmacy, Cliff Klan claimed Russia's aid in the last war was simply "political strategy." "There are at least a dozen countries allied against communistic forces to the north of Korea. This is not harmony!" Klan said. Peter Yacempki, the negative's second speaker introduced the religious factor, claiming religion to be an integral part of modern society and said it was not compatible with communism.

Judges for the debate were Mesh Silverman, Pat Reid and professor Hiscocks of the Political Science department.

Engineers Hear Landon On Early Days of Faculty

The initial meeting of the 1951-52 season of the student section of the Engineering institute of Canada was held Wednesday noon in the Engineering building. C. Landon, registrar of the association of professional engineers of Manitoba, told the gathering about the early days of the faculty of Engineering.

He said that in 1907 the first faculty of the university was formed, "and that was the faculty of Engineering." He also said that the student council that was formed at that time became the "basis for the present UMSU."

"Manitoba Engineers have also shone academically and have won recognition both locally and in wider fields," he said.

Executive members of the student section are Don McLeod (chairman), Bill Johnson, Norm Hanks, Les Cosman, Bob Briggs, Don Penrose, Jack Iliffe, and Don Young.

Art Exhibition Is Now on Display

Calligraphic and Geometric, an exhibition of two linear tendencies in recent American painting, will be on view at the University of Manitoba, room 210, Arts building, from Nov. 4 to 24, daily from 2 to 5 p.m.

This exhibition, prepared by the Museum of Modern Arts in New York for a tour of museums and galleries throughout the country, includes canvases by twenty-two outstanding young American artists.

Special Issue

This issue of The Manitoban, Canada's Other Great, is devoted to news on other campi, particularly that of the University of Toronto. We feel that this is a reciprocal act of friendship, considering the amount of our copy they have used in the past.

Architects to Hold Open House Sunday

The students' Architectural society will hold its annual Open house and reception in the Arts building, this Sunday from 2:30 to 6 p.m.

To facilitate transportation special buses will operate between the corner of Corydon and Osborne and the campus.

Arrangements have been made to have baby sitters on hand to give those with children the opportunity of seeing the exhibition.

The Open house will feature an exhibition of the work of students in Architecture, Interior Design and Community Planning which has been done during the past year. It will be arranged in the corridors and fourth floor drafting rooms of the Arts building by a committee of students under the direction of Mr. Vayden McMorris.

Provision has also been made in the main library for the serving of refreshments to all visitors.

CCF to Meet Today at 4

The CCF campus party will hold its last organizational meeting before elections today at 4 p.m., in room 101, Arts building.

Donovan Swailes, M.L.A., will highlight the meeting with an address to the students.

Following the talk, the election of the remaining executive will be held. Joe Slogan was elected club president at the last meeting.

The CCF platform will also be presented for ratification by the members of the club. Further business will be the discussion of the campaign, and the seating of members.

FEATHER FAIR ON TODAY

Sister Campus

This is a picture of our sister campus, the University of Toronto, whose news we are featuring this issue. The campus, which is only partly shown here, has a national reputation as being an architectural hodge-podge of Victorian, Gothic, Georgian, Norman and modern styles. Convocation Hall (the dome at the left) has been compared to a "squat, over-grown turtle." The building in the left foreground is the new Wallberg Chemical Engineering Building, one of the most recent additions to Varsity, while at the top can be seen the ancient towers of University College, the University's nucleus.

Toronto (CUP)—Come hell or high water or drifts of snow the Red Feather Fair goes on today. From their stands carved of ice barkers, clowns, and pranksters will defy the elements and lure would-be gamblers on to further outlays . . . all in the good name of the Community Chest.

As in previous years the fair will feature booths from all the faculties, games of chance, shooting galleries, roulette wheels, dart games and even the Skule cannon. POTS are busy making candy and fudge for the occasion and hot dogs, sandwiches, cider and coffee will be on hand to warm the crowd.

Among the attractions last year was the mysterious Engineering tent labelled the "House of Horrors" in which many strange sights were seen including a little noise-maker that "speakes for itself." Equally popular was the Medical Society's "outdoor Health Clinic" where everyone, especially beautiful co-eds, could obtain complete physical check-ups by experts. Needless to say there were many interested observers at the clinic, from which the Medsmen chose likely patients. If anyone objected, they were carried away bodily by white-coated internes wielding laquered femur bones. The School of Law taught undergraduates how to "beat the races" and Trinity made money hand over fist with a large roulette wheel.

It was decided last year to move the location of the Fair to the "Island" behind the Bookstore so as to make it more compact. Unless weather conditions force the merry-makers inside Hart House this will be the scene of festivities again this year.

In the words of the Fair Chairman, Denis Dos Santos, IV SPS, the weatherman has made things "pretty grim" this year. Ingenious minds at Vic had devised a game whereby the player threw some wet sponges at mermaids. However, zero weather has dictated a somewhat tamer plan of action: tossing rings at coins. (if you win you get the money) Another problem is that the old jalopy in which President Smith was to be escorted to his duties at the opening ceremony refuses to work in an Arctic climate.

A new attraction this year is to be a Cheerleading Contest between the different colleges and faculties. The team that manages to convince its supporters to contribute the most money to the Red Feather gets the prize. It sounds like a good way to keep warm, girls.

Further details about the booths are unavailable although it has leaked out that Skule's contribution may be identified by an Army marquee donated by the COTC.

The Fair officially opens at 1 p.m., although the booths will be operating at 12, and tagging begins in the morning. Last year the Fair netted $1,167.12 and it is hoped to duplicate this figure this time. As in previous years the many events and surprises should provide loads of fun for all.

TELEVISE OLYMPICS

Helsinki, Finland (Special) — Plans are being laid to televise the Olympic Games to be held in Helsinki next summer. It is expected that the Bank of Finland will release the necessary foreign currency required to purchase the equipment. The Finnish Technological Student's Foundation has been asked to investigate possibilities.

Night Editors

Toronto (CUP)—There will be a meeting for night editors in room 60, basement of University College tomorrow at one p.m.. This will not be in the form of a lecture so bring your lunch. ALL editors (including those) who have been filling in) are asked to attend.

THE DIG

Garbage Dump

Toronto (CUP)—"I don't see why any Indian would build his village so far from Toronto—or why he'd choose this Godforsaken hilltop!" This and other bitter comments typified the reaction of the student archaeologist facing his first dig.

The sixth annual Student Archaeological Expedition, better known as Dig, took place last weekend. Friday's grey dawn saw an estimated hundred undergrads, grads and faculty, boarding buses for the Barker farm north of Woodbridge. Upon arrival each digger, armed with shovel and trowel, wound his way up a steep (and later extremely slippery) slope onto a windy plateau.

This plateau was the site of an Iroquois village of about 1570. To the digger it looked like any other cow-pasture, until he found, beneath the topsoil, evidence to the contrary. The site was laid out in a grid of five-foot squares along the brow of the hill. The slope of the hill presumably constituted the village refuse-dump—refuse consisting of bones, pieces of pottery, broken flint and bone tools, flint chips, pipes, beads and other Iroquoian discards.

From these artifacts the trained archaeologist is able to date the site and identify its former inhabitants. Material is brought to light by a process of carefully scraping with trowels through the black ash of the dump. Finds are put in bags on which square number and level are recorded, and the washers and cataloguers deal with the material as soon as it is unearthed.

Below the ash layer yellow sub-soil appeared, revealing circular discolorations in many of the squares. These discolorations, known as post-moulds, indicate places where stakes had been driven into the ground and subsequently burnt or removed, whereupon the holes have become filled with ash. When a number of these post-moulds have been charted, it is possible to see the outline of a house-wall or palisade.

Mr. J. N. Emerson of the Department of Anthropology has been the organizer of these large student digs, the first of their kind in North America. The object of these expeditions is two-fold—to gain a knowledge of Indian prehistory in Ontario and to give students first-hand experience in the technique of archaeological field-work. These digs have created considerable interest in archaeological circles. Observers have come from various Canadian and American universities and museums. This fall McMaster held its first student dig.

An unfortunate precedent seems to have been established. Last year's expedition was carried out under extremely snowy conditions. This year not only was there snow, but a howling gale added to the general discomfort. But in spite of nature another group of students was invited to the refined art of prehistoric garbage-collecting.

Milk Maid

At the University of Toronto, every college and faculty puts on its own musical revue. This is a scene from the Victoria College Bob-Revue, in which Judy McGill tells the audience that she is "Judy, the Farmer's Daughter" and then goes on, amidst many comments about cows, to tell of her decision to go to Victoria. What happens to her there she doesn't say, but the implication is that she's a changed woman.

Insurance Plan Still A Problem

Toronto (CUP)—In the coming months, this year's Student Council will be faced with the problem of a university-wide student insurance plan. The question of such a program was willed to them at the final meeting of last year's Executive Committee of the Students' Administrative Council.

At that time all insurance companies were asked to send in plans for an accident and sickness insurance program covering the entire student body. Only two companies replied.

The most suitable of these provides for an insurance plan with paid benefits for both hospitalization or home care. It would be effective only during the school term, not in the summer or Christmas vacations.

Maximum value of the policy would be $830. The total includes $420 for hospital room, and the rest for X-rays, surgery, and doctor's fees.

The only Canadian university with such a scheme is the University of Western Ontario. The figures seem to indicate that a very large majority of payments are being made for injuries suffered in athletics. These injuries are already covered here by the University Health Service fee every Toronto student pays.

Last spring the SAC Executive Committee decided that there was merit in the proposal but that it should have the approval of the entire student body. It referred the matter to this year's Council for action.

Major reason for the deferment was the high cost of the premium, which would amount to $12.00 per student. It was felt that this was too much money, in consideration of the fee rise last summer. It was also felt that most of the students were already covered by Blue Cross, or some other such accident insurance program.

No Pep Rally After Train From McGill Comes Friday

Toronto (CUP) — It was decided at the Blue and White Society's Open Meeting yesterday to give the cheerleaders specific instructions to disband after meeting the McGill train Friday evening. This decision was designed to prevent an impromptu Pep Rally, which the meeting felt would be going against the order of the Students' Administrative Council.

Dave Rose, President of the University College Literary and Athletic Association, felt that the cheerleaders should lead the students someplace, although not through the Union Station or to the Royal York Hotel, "in view of recent developments on the campus." Jim Dooley, Head Blue and White Cheerleader, said that it was very difficult for the cheerleaders to arouse enthusiasm at the game in students who had spent the previous six days in peaceful lecture halls, but that he would not recommend leading excited students anywhere where no organized activities had been planned, as they would "find something to do."

Dooley suggested that the SAC take over direct control of Blue and White activities "since they seem to know more about it." He said he was not surprised that the students were annoyed at the cancellation of the Pep Rally.

Rose requested permission to clarify the position of the Lit executive on the matter of the cancellation. He said that the executive feels that it was unfortunate that the cancellation happened at this time, since everyone realizes that the Lit had done its best on an SAC level, to see that there would be no Pep Rally.

However, he said that once the motion had passed, the Lit had dropped its objections to the Rally, and had started planning a publicity campaign to take advantage of the Rally so that "it would have been to their advantage if the Rally had been held."

Rose said that the Lit had approached no one to engineer the cancellation of the Rally, and had "expressed its official disappointment" when it was cancelled. He denied that the decision had been "fixed," and said that there had been no pressure on the SAC to reverse their decision. He added that, because University College was in an extremely prejudiced position, it had taken no part in the discussion or voting on the question at the SAC meeting last Friday.

Gord Marshall, Dents, proposed that future Blue and White advertising for the week end program not include the U.C. Follies. He said that the verbal agreement made between the Blue and White Society and University College to co-operate on publicity had been fulfilled. Rose said he was satisfied with the publicity to date, and would abide by any decision of the Blue and White Society on the matter.

Al Strauss, IV U.C., said that he felt that the onus of the decision of whether or not the Society had fulfilled their obligation should rest entirely with the Blue and White. The Lit, he said, would be satisfied with their decision. The meeting decided to concentrate on publicity for the Rochester Glee Club, an attraction of the Saturday Night Dance, and leave further Follies publicity to U.C.

Marshall told disgruntled students that the reserved section in the student section of the Varsity Stadium stands was not held for members of the Blue and White Society but for the Marshals (ushers) and girls selling regalia before the game, so that they would have an opportunity to see the game.

It was agreed to put the proposal of Peter Alley, IV Trin, that the Blue and White Society aid the campaign of the External Affairs Commission, on the agenda of the next Blue and White meeting.

Rugby Ball To Feature Glee Club

Toronto (CUP)—Due to a mix-up regarding dates in Hart House, the Blue and White Dance Saturday will highlight a concert by the Rochester University Glee Club.

Some time ago the Hart House Glee Club invited its Rochester counterpart to visit this weekend. However, the Blue and White had already reserved the entire House for its rugby dance. This left the glee clubs stranded. So a compromise was reached.

As a result, the Rochester Club will present a program in the Great Hall during the evening, and its members will receive free dance tickets.

Tickets to the dance are being sold in Hart House lobby every day from noon to 2 p.m. at $2.00 per couple.

The Rochester University Men's Glee Club is comprised of 45 "carefully-selected voices" chosen from a number of applicants.

Their program is varied to satisfy every taste. In one recent program they sang music of the early Christian period, Bach, madrigals, and Broadway material. Folk songs, college medleys and popular music balanced the program.

Six orchestras will provide the music for Saturday's dance. The Women's Interfaculty Swimming meet will be held in the pool as an added feature. Sports enthusiasts are warned, however, that the meet starts at 7:30, before the dance proper.

LET'S FACE IT.

Expert's Advice Collects Dust Student Union Is Debate Topic

Toronto (CUP) — Four debaters will try to decide Thursday whether the University of Toronto needs a student union as soon as possible when they speak at the debate being sponsored by the University of Toronto Debating Union in the Wallberg Auditorium (Room. 1035) at 1 p.m.

Dave Rose, IV UC, and Al Strauss, IV UC, will oppose the motion, while Mrs. Lois De Groot, IV SPS, and Cliff Wilson, V Arch., will speak for the affirmative.

Strauss feels that it is "an inappropriate time for such a white elephant," while Rose does not believe that the students would support the union if they realized how the union is to be paid for and how it is to be financed. The answer to this, from Wilson, was that the students will cross their bridges when they come to them.

The proposed student union has been a favorite topic of debate for a long time. Letters have been sent to the editor of The Varsity for over 40 years on the subject. However it was not until February, 1948, that the Students' Administrative Council unanimously approved "the principle of a plan presented to it for the building of a co-educational students' building as a university war memorial." A student union committee was formed in 1949 and is still an SAC committee. At one time the committee went so far as to have a definite plan of administration and to have submitted what was considered to be the minimum requirements for a building. When the '49 committee left office they expressed hope that the 1950-51 committee would have as its sole object the formulation of a plan to get the money.

Edgar Whiting, an expert brought from the United States to consider the problem, decided that the Union should be built alongside Hart House and that it was the responsibility of the administration "to provide adequate facilities for extra-curricular activities for all students". A sharp motion from the University College Literary and Athletic Society opposed the report as it believed that university money had been spent to provide information which has been given repeatedly by The Varsity for the past few years.

Red China Topic At Joint Meeting

Toronto (CUP) — The United Nations Club meets again tomorrow at Wymilwood in a joint session with the International Students' Organization.

The problem of the admission of Communist China to the U.N. will be the topic for discussion. At last Thursday's meeting Mr. Ali Tayeb from Karachi India, outlined the entire problem. Members have indicated their desire to study the position of India, Egypt, Yugoslavia, Canada, Norway, and Israel as well as the big five who are permanent members. Greatest interest has been shown in India and the U.S.S.R. Almost one third of the students have indicated their intention to study these countries.

Of the countries elected to be studied the U.K., Egypt, India, U.S.S.R., and Yugoslavia are all on record as approving the admission of Communist China, though some do so on de facto basis. Nationalist China, in the past, has exercised her veto power on this issue but it is expected that no veto power will be allowed at the U.N. Club's model Security Council to be held on December 6.

Tomorrow's meeting will commence with a social hour at 3.45. At 4.45 the group will proceed to U.C. where rooms have been reserved for each country being studied. A list of these rooms will be published in tomorrow's Varsity.

ECOLE NUIT

By Harold Buchwald

ad lib

One of the ordeals which comes with being in your senior year at college is having your graduation picture taken for the yearbook. The advent of this final-year-phenomenon is approached by most grads as something akin to having a cavity filled—it's one of those things you've got to do, but you put it off as long as you can.

Because you usually only graduate once in your life from a particular faculty, you resign yourself to the fact that ou would like to have a grad picture taken. But it is still necessary to put up a mild protest and avoid the incident as long as possible.

First you see an item in The Manitoban saying that Mr. Paul Hunter of the Hudson's Bay Company will be photographing graduates, and this is usually accompanied by a schedule of sittings by faculties. This information you proceed to ignore, your attitude being "If the Brown and Gold wants my picture they'll have to come and get it—humph!" Actually, the Brown and Gold probably does not care very much whether you include your picture or not; they just want to get it over with as soon as possible, because they know that you really want it in the book, but modesty or laziness forbids you to proceed too rapidly.

The next step is a telephone call from somebody on the yearbook staff or an announcement in class that your faculty's pictures will be taken the next day, so please shave and comb your hair and be there. Well, if everybody else in the class is doing it you might just as well, too.

You get there and you primp and fuss in front of the mirror, flattening down that stray hair or seeing that your lipstick is on straight. Then you are posed in front of the camera, under bright, hot lights, in the most uncomfortable possible position. Directly in front of you is a massive eye, centred in a box, out of which seems to grow an enormous black hood. Protruding from beneath the enormous black hood are a pair of chubby legs.

From somewhere within the hood comes a muffled, but disgustingly cheerful voice which says: "Now come on, wet your lips and smile . . . that's right."

"I don't want to smile," you say to yourself. "I want to look intelligent and serious, because after all this is my graduation picture."

But you wet your lips, and you smile, and you envision the wonderful impression you are making on the film.

Within a week the great day arrives. With the same paradoxical combination of eagerness and hesitation with which you open your examination results you pick up your proofs. This is the moment of great expectations. Beyond a doubt the printing paper will reveal an hitherto unheralded Adonis or a ravishing Venus. But who is that on the other side of the fur and bow tie, or under the mortarboard? Damnitall, nobody but YOU.

You're just about to mention to the young lady behind the desk that there must be some mistake, when you realize the futility of this approach. Pesignedly, you leave to make the final choice in the solace of your own room behind closed doors.

But of course you must show the proofs to a few trusted friends—for sympathy only, of course. There is something disconcerting about the way they say: "They're very good", especially when their Adam's apples are doing strange things as they say this. The less diplomatic come out with: "They look just like you."

Mother, of course, has to make her choice, and she insists Mr. Hunter did not show your dimple to advantage, and "Why did he give you a double chin?"

Finally the selection is made, and off you go to haggle with the photographer. ("Are you sure you can't touch up my nose, Mr. Hunter?") You order a handful—one for Aunt Sophie, another for the relatives in Plum Coulee, and of course the one for the girl friend. You're still not satisfied and are ready to make all kinds of explanations to the recipients ("crazy lighting," "bad pose," "you should have seen the others," "I don't know why he took my profile anyway").

Naturally, you'll forget the only real one: the man under the hood is only a photographer, not a plastic surgeon.

MUSIC ...

Boris Roubakine

Toronto (CUP) — Boris Roubakine, pianist, was the guest artist Sunday evening in Hart House. A large audience turned out in spite the cold weather — a tribute to popularity of a great artist.

The program appropriately began with a transcription of J. S. Bach's Chorale Prelude "Sleepers Wake". This music was written for the Sunday before Advent, which year fell on Nov. 4. Although sometimes wonders why pianists prefer transcriptions of organ works to Bach's genuine clavier or piano music, the choice was well justified in this case. The transcription is an excellent one by Busoni, and Mr. Roubakine succeeded in compressing the three-part lines — bass, chorale melody, and figuration — onto a single keyboard, and yet keeping them quite distinct. The result was almost organ-like in its clarity.

Mr. Roubakine then performed Sonata in D minor, Op. 31 No. 3 by Beethoven. This mighty work is charged with a depth of emotion seldom reached even in Beethoven's later compositions. Mr. Roubakine played it with the sustained forcefulness and vigor it demands, and even in the outwardly tranquil slow movement, during the rhythm moving inexorably. The curiously eloquent instrumental recitative in the first movement was also performed energetically, and without the sentimentality which sometimes tempts lesser artists.

The remainder of the music on the program was all by French composers. The Prelude, Chorale and Fugue by César Franck, which is sometimes heard in an orchestral transcription, turned out to be a quite pianistic work, with little of the organ idiom often characteristic of this composer's work. Playing a fugue clearly on the piano, so that all the voices can be heard, is something of an achievement, particularly if there are extra notes present besides those properly belonging to the fugue. Mr. Roubakine kept us constantly in mind of the fugue going one, in spite of passages of formidable technical difficulty superimposed on the basic structure.

The program concluded with a nocturne and a barcarolle by Faure, and "L'Isle Joyeuse" by Debussy. One has a curious feeling about this work that boogie-woogie has adopted some of its phaseology and spirit. It has an exuberance seldom evident in Debussy's music. Mr. Roubakine played it with the same vitality as he did the other works on the program, and made a sparkling finish for the concert.

Unfortunately, no review of this concert would be complete without mentioning the unpleasant fact that the piano was out of tune. Annoying as this was for the audience, it must have been doubly so for the performer. No one should be required to struggle against this frustrating sort of handicap, and the Hart House Music Committee should see to it that this never occurs again. A sudden cold snap is no excuse: the instrument must be in tune for the concert.

Christopher Helleiner.

REVIEWS

Quentin MacLean

Toronto (CUP) — I have heard organists who are as liberally endowed with such powers of imagination and interpretation as Quentin MacLean. Monday afternoon in Convocation Hall he upheld his reputation before a small audience, playing a program that seemed well designed to display his genius as an organ virtuoso.

Mr. MacLean opened the recital with Drummond Wolff's brilliant Festival Fanfare (dedicated to Dr. Healey Willan). Shining forth in all its heady glory, it serves as a good opener on any program. But perhaps the artist's skill of interpretation played its cards a little too early in some parts of the Bach Toccata, Adagio and Fugue in C which followed; some portions did not come as well in technical accuracy and tempo, notably the pedal cadenza in the toccata. Parts of the adagio, too, suffered from a mild case of exaggeration, but the fugue moved Bach right to the end.

To represent the 19th century French school, Mr. MacLean played Boellman's charming "Second Gothic Suite, which was particularly appealing. It is divided into five movements of diverse character, and Mr. MacLean wove each into a scholarly portrayed unity. The last piece was a product of his own genius, Prelude and Fugue on "Laying on the Scale", an interesting and clever study inspired by the technique of British organ builders.

We know many a sceptic who is inclined to doubt Quentin MacLean's ability to effectively render the great organ classics, considering his forte as a theatre organist. But whenever I have heard Mr. MacLean in "serious" concert, I have always remarked the MacLean colors flying proudly from the top of the classical mast — and kept there. At all times a clear, crisp performer, he imparts a character hitherto undiscovered to any piece he plays. No average musician this, but a practically unrivalled genius who revels in the all-too-rare art of virtuosity, and gives a startling performance to the very last.

NFCUS Expense Too High: Queen's

Kingston (CUP)—Queen's has officially dropped completely out of the National Federation of Canadian University Students on a motion presented to the Alma Mater Society (Queen's student council) by the budget and finance committee at its last meeting.

High cost of membership and a slim budget were the reasons given by George Ainslee, chairman of the committee, who introduced the motion.

He added that the campus had enough outside affiliation through affiliation with the International Student Service and the International Relations Club.

There has been no evidence to show that NFCUS has been sufficiently useful to justify a twenty-cent-per-student levy, he said.

Last year Queen's was not officially a member of NFCUS because of a short budget. At the annual NFCUS conference in London in September, it was decided to give Queen's an associate membership on the condition, assured by their observer at the conference, that it would be able to pay the six-cents-per-student fee, levied two years ago on all universities.

Man's Oneness Is Baha'i Topic

Toronto (CUP)—Dr. Michael Ikwuemsi, B.Sc. D. Bact., will speak at the open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group today at 1:10 p.m. in Room 64, U.C., on the subject, "The Oneness of Mankind".

A medical science student from Nigeria, West Africa, and a graduate of Dalhousie University, the speaker is presently taking post-graduate studies in the Department of Pathology and Bacteriology at this university.

When interviewed yesterday, he said, "I uphold the oneness of mankind embodying spiritually East and West because I believe that association, harmony, and union are the source of life, whilst differences and division are the cause of ultimate destruction. And above all I believe in the unity of God which includes the principle of the oneness and wholeness of the entire human race. It is through transmitting the spirit of God and manifesting His light and love through the unity of the political realm of thoughts, of world undertakings, of freedom, of religion, of nations, of races and of language that this oneness can ultimately be brought about".

PARTY

All staffers are reminded of the first Varsity party of the year, to be held this Friday night. Details as to place and time may be found at the office. Everyone who works on the paper is invited to the party, which gives you a chance to meet your co-workers. The McGill delegation promises to lend extra (red) color to the do.

Cat Photo Contest

Toronto (CUP) — Entries for The Varsity Cat Photo Contest are pouring in at a slightly less than spectacular rate. The contest is being held in the interests of the National Cat Week, being run this week to reinstate the Cat to his rightful position in contemporary civilization.

Deadline for the contest is Friday, November 8, at 2:00 p.m. Entries may be submitted to The Varsity News Office, Room 78 in the University College basement. They must be accompanied by Admit to Lectures card.

As announced previously prizes of one tin of cat food will be given for the cutest and most repulsive photos. Members of The Varsity staff may not submit entries.

The men of The Varsity masthead will act as judges for the contest.

Vic Illiteracy To Be Polled For Magazine

Toronto (CUP) — The state of extra-curricular illiteracy at Victoria College will be reported in ACTA's Victoriana's December issue, Olga Bruchovsky, III Vic, Book Editor announced yesterday. ACTA is the Victoria College literary magazine. A survey is being held to ascertain whether or not Vic students do any reading outside of their course.

The 'What Vic Reads' poll is being conducted this week through the medium of questionnaires. They will be given out with the first issue of ACTA, which is expected to appear on Wednesday. There will be a box located opposite the telephone booth in Vic for the answers.

This year's ACTA will present something new in the way of make-up, and will have a new cover. It has a tradition of 76 years of regular appearances on the campus, commented Editor-in-Chief John Finlay.

And what kind of business does a modern college president conduct in his free hours? . . . come and find out! This will give you a slight idea of what to expect from a few of the skits—and we've just begun.

Also among the script writers are Jack Robson and Pat Watson who teamed up for dialogues and patter-songs as well as for entre-acts. Paul Break also contributed, and if you liked last year's Red Skulehouse skit, you'll be back for more of Paul's jokes this Friday and Saturday. Benny Wise and other old-timers describe this skit this year as a return to the same sort of fast, satirical dialogue that has been lacking in most campus shows during the past two years.

Among the acting crew, Verne Turner's name stands out. What with AVR's, FOLLIES, STADIUM SHOWS, and entertainment generally, Verne's face will be familiar and welcomed by most people on the campus.

For those who look forward to original music, there is the musical score written by Milt Carman over the summer and intended originally for the AVR. When Wise and McGowan refused to take the director or producer's jobs, Milt came back to the FOLLIES and brought his music and lyrics with him. His music for the dance production numbers must have been written with the present twenty-girl choruses in mind.

So, undergrads, if you intend to go to the FOLLIES, you know what to expect. Since tickets this year are also being sold to the Alumni, you'd better hurry down to the UC Rotunda while they last and get your tickets for either of the two shows on Friday and Saturday nights of this week. Some shows are selling faster than others, so if you want your choice, make it fast. Those with B and W dance tickets can pass directly from the first show on Saturday through the House to the Hart House dance floors.

This is going to be a big week-end . . . with the gang of the year, and the show of the year!

It's been a long time since you heard from UC IT'S THIS WAY, but there's a good reason for breaking silence! Last night we saw a full rehearsal of what promises to be the fastest FOLLIES in years . . . a FOLLIES to beat 1948! Senior students will remember that show, written by Mike Hornyanski, with such familiar names as Benny Wise, Irwin Pasternack, and Suzy Davidson on the programme. These three last named are back again, Benny acting and directing, Irwin (stolen from Osgoode) directing, Suzy (fresh from Paris and about to start her own show) advising, and Billy Freedman (director of last year's FOLLIES) "pushing" the whole show. Without a doubt, UC is going to have a show to top all college revues of the past four years!

Directors of this year's FOLLIES are Barb Cornes and Joe Goldenberg of the WUA and "Lit" executives. Barb has been in the FOLLIES and All-Varsity Revues of the past two years, and this is Joe's fourth in the same game. The lyrics, music and scripts were written mostly over the summer, and the FOLLIES have been in rehearsal since the opening of term. Both Barb and Joe guarantee a good show, and Joe promises enough laughs for the rest of the year from the Royal Visit skit alone!

This skit, written by a newcomer to the FOLLIES, Bert Stone, has been described by Irwin Pasternack as one of the cleverest pieces of satirical comedy he's seen from any undergraduate. The Stadium Show tried to cash in on the Royal Visit two weeks ago, but wait till you see this!

Then there's the Simpleton's and Cretin's comedy number (a satire on Canadian big-business methods) in the FOLLIES tradition of college lampoon. For the . . . er . . . more sporty in the audienec ,there's Bitter lampoon. For the . . . er . . . more sporty in the audience, there's Bitter adult entertainment!

VIC TIES UC IN LAST QUARTER

Interfac Schedule Changed

Toronto (CUP) — The Meds II intramural football team has been withdrawn from competition for the rest of the season. This was announced yesterday after a special meeting of the Football Standing Committee. The Medsmen have played three games so far this season and lost them all by big scores. It was decided to withdraw the team in order to allow the injury riddled senior squad to use the players as substitutes, and also to facilitate the completion of the schedule by the end of next week.

As Monday's two games were postponed, the Standing Committee also passed on a schedule revision. Yesterday's Vic vs. UC tilt went as scheduled and Monday's SPS vs. Meds game will be played this afternoon. Each team in Group I will play twice next week to round out the schedule.

The Group II game between Forestry and Trinity will be played Friday, and the Trinity vs. St. Mike's contest originally scheduled for Thursday will not be played until next week. If the Buttery Boys win this one they will clinch the group title, and there is a possibility that the schedule will not be played out because of lack of time.

The withdrawal of Meds II in Group III means that Jr. Skule have clinched the championship and now await the playoff with the first place team in Group I. There is one more game to be played between the little Engineers and Dentistry and this will be played if time and weather permit.

Interfaculty Soccer Standing

Toronto (CUP) — With the season more than half way complete, the Intramural Soccer competition presents an interesting picture.

Senior S.P.S. must show a complete reversal of form if they hope to retain the championship they earned last year. U.C.'s squad on their current form apepars as the greater challenger though Knox has a team that cannot be too highly overrated, and the Buttery Boys are a potentially dangerous squad. Senior Meds and Architecture are not entirely out of the picture, and should make the playoffs an extremely interesting affair.

Group three has been reduced to four teams as Victoria College's second squad were forced to withdraw having lost two games via the default route.

Senior S.P.S., Senior Meds, Vic and U.C. have been severely weakened this year as a result of their contribution to the Intercollegiate squads. Trinity "A" is a potentially strong team and should be around for a couple of years as quite a few of their players are in their early years.

The standard of soccer played this year in the intramural games is appreciably below that of last year, while the Blues and the Intermediates are playing better ball than they did a year or so ago. A little coaching from members of both squads and if possible from their coaches would help.

Pass, Blocked Kick Give Vic 12-12 Tie

Toronto (CUP) — The Victoria Scarlet and Gold t completely golden in the last quarter yesterday after and the Vicsters managed to salvage a 12-all tie with UC Redmen. Cries of "lucky" were mumbled among th half frozen spectators along the sidelines, but a touch pass and a blocked kick are not lucky.

It was a far different game however from the first encounter between these two teams when neither squad looked like they could scare a good high school bantam club. For the first three quarters of the game the Redmen played like they were going to be the next Mulock cup champions. Then Victoria suddently caught fire and scored two quick majors.

Quarterback Lorne Lodge finally found his passing arm, and it was possibly this fact more than anything else that aided Victoria. He threw only three but two of these resulted in six important Victoria points.

Victoria opened the scoring in the second quarter when Lodge tossed a 25 yard pass to Doug Moat who carried to the UC 10. After Goodfellow had carried to the fi next play was smeared for yard loss. George Hevenor's goal attempt was wide but over the dead ball line for 1

University college came back Richardson and Brown carri a total of 21 yards in three and then Richardson smash left tackle for the major. P converted.

In the third quarter Vic qua back John Fowler had either of the jitters or cold hand fumbled three times in a row third bobble was recovered b on the Vic 25 yard line. Richa went around the left end to t Then Brown took a pitchout quarterback Peebles and o several Vic tacklers around th end for the second UC touch Peebles converted.

Victoria took over on their 25 and marched right down field to the UC 35. Then Lodge ed back and pitched a long to George Hevenor on the UC line for a major. The UC line broke through and blocked the vert.

With only a couple of minute go UC still seemed to have t under control when the roof c in. UC were kicking from their ten when Jim Wooton and tw linemen blocked it and the bounced over the UC goal line. Williams well on it and then ped back to make good the all portant convert.

Victoria lost a couple of potential majors. In the first Goodfellow scampered 75 yar pay dirt but it was called back cause the referee claimed the block had been made over ten past the line of scrimmage. After first Vic touchdown, Hevenor's kickoff bounced off the UC post right in front of two Vi who let it lie there. They lapse of memory and thought had to give the receiver five The tie gave Victoria a sure in the playoffs.

SPORTS PROFILE

Al Brown

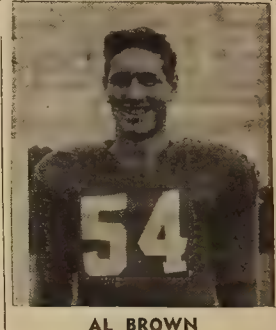
Toronto (CUP)—Have you ever met an intercollegiate football player? Well, I've met a few. Everyone who watches the big teams in action has wondered what those men of iron are like.

They come in all shapes, all sizes, and all kinds of natures, but you'd like Al. That's big Al Brown, 195 lbs. and 6'3", but you wouldn't want to meet a milder guy to talk to. Nevertheless Al has been a big sensation at end this year.

He was eating dinner when I went around to see him, and when I told him I wanted to talk about Al, he got embarrassed at once. But we went over to the corner and he began to tell me some of the little things he thought were important.

"How long have you played football, Al?"

"Seven years, I played for North Toronto in high school."



Al worked his way up and in his last year he played senior for them. He played flying wing then. He told me that he has never been on a championship team, but that he thought he would be soon. Looking back on those days, he said that the game he liked best was a junior game against Oakwood. North Toronto lost 7-6 on a blocked kick, but it could have been anybody's game. In those days Al Dancy and Eric Jones played for the team.

Then Al came to the U. of T. He tried out for end on the intermediates, but he never played a game for them. Jack Gray got hurt and Al went up. From then on he was Gray's understudy. I asked him how come he got moved to end and he told me, "Well, I looked over the back field and they looked pretty good to me, so I went out for end". Last year, as a first-string end, he played an in and out year. He got a bruised kidney, and was out for a while. This year he has been an outstanding end in the league. In the last game he blocked a convert, deflected another, caught two important passes for a total of 15 yards, and it was Al that picked up that short kick-off and ran for twenty yards.

"You've really had quite a year this year", I told him.

"Well . . . I guess so."

Al got married at the end of his first year. He's a big blond, amiable-looking guy, and I guess it was inevitable that he's 21 and been married for three years. He has a daughter, two, and his family lives with his wife's people. I asked him how he got along with his mother-in-law, and he told me, "Oh, I get along okay." That's Al.

Right now he is at O.C.E. He graduated last year in P.H.E. When I asked him what he would like to do, he said he would like to get a high school somewhere and coach, especially football. He has played every sport, but he says he likes football best. When he says I like football better than any sport, you see a sincerity in his eyes that makes you know how much more those players feel on the field, than any spectator can ever feel. I asked him if he would like to go on and play some more, I might, he said. But football is in his blood.

"What was the moment you enjoyed most, in football, Al?"

"Beating Western."

"Why Western?"

"They're smug, too sure of themselves. I guess they were on top too long."

"What did you think of the last game? What happened?"

"I thought we played a good game. I think we should have won."

"How come "

"We've got a better team."

"How about McGill?"

"That was our toughest game. They have a big team and a couple of fast backs."

Al says all this in a mild reserved voice. When he says something it's short and direct, and rather than having him tell you, you feel things about him. You feel he's a fellow you'd like to meet more often, you feel how straightforward he is, and how hard he'd play a game. You feel how mild he could be and how hard he could hit, all at once.

This year will be his last year with Blues, and he would like to be on a championship team.

"Will we beat McGill this weekend, Al?"

"I think we will. We beat them before."

And one thing about Al—he's honest.

Toronto (CUP)—The Senior and Intermediate Intercollegiate track teams are to meet today at 1 o'clock in Hart House Athletic wing for team photographs.

Directorate Elects Evans Vice-President

Toronto (CUP)—In its meeting last week, the Athletic Directorate elected John Evans, IV Meds, as Vice President of the Directorate for 1951-1952. Evans, also captain of the football team, was one of the student members of the directorate elected to it last spring.

Also approved was an increase of free practice hours at Varsity Arena for Interfaculty hockey teams to six hours. Previously they could have only three hours free time, though they could have more if they wanted to purchase it and if it was available.

The entry of the Intermediate basketball team into the Senior "Y" Basketball league was put through as well. The home games are to be played as part of doubleheaders in Hart House Gymnasium on Thursday nights. The Blues will provide the final part of the doubleheaders.

The appointment of Bill Wade as coach of the hockey Blues was approved, as was the appointment of Jack Kennedy as mentor of the Intermediate pucksters.

By DAVID PEDIR

Toronto (CUP)—In watching DARKNESS AT NOON one had the feeling that here was no ordinary Broadway play. There seemed to be a certain restraint on the part of the audience; everyone eralized that here was a clever play well staged, but one must not listen too carefully to what was being said.

Rubashov, ex-commissar of the Soviets, is in jail on trumped-up charges because he thinks too much of the old revolution days and not of present interests of the state. A new generation is growing up—not thinking leaders but military men who know only how to obey The Leader men without individuality who are products of Marxism and early communist discipline. But, though Rubashov takes his stand against the ways of the party, this does not make him a sympathizer with democracy. He is insulted with that charge. The trouble with Rubashov is that he went to Germany for a while and on returning saw what had before opped him—that the aims of the party were no longer the aims of those led the revolution.

In arguing with himself on the proper Hegelian lines, however, Rubashov sees that this is justified because the State is greater than the individual. He is guilty of intellectual pride because he knows that this reasoning of his is beyond the minds of his jailors.

In jail he realizes this; he accepts his situation; humbles himself. He is ready to confess. Gletkin, the young commandant of the prison, insists however on his confessing to the trumped-up charges of the party, not one of which Rubashov feels himself guilty. The old intellectual sees his pride was justified. In the course of communist regime in Russia the slogan—"The end justifies the means," has changed. The means have become the end. Rubashov's work for the party has come to this. He is guilty in his own eyes now and death will be the best way out.

The setting for this play is remarkable. It remains basically the same in Rubashov's cell in the centre. At one side three other cells rising above the other can be seen through the walls when lit up. At the other side is the corridor in front of the cell which changes to scenes of Rubashov's past; it also becomes the commandant's office where Rubashov is interrogated and found guilty. Thus the play moves quickly from scene to scene.

Though all the actors have a tendency to talk too fast at times so that they are unintelligible, generally speaking they are all good. Edward G. Robinson is best in the reminiscences, as the cold, intellectual master of men. Occasionally he is rather too casual, for resignation does not mean relaxation, but htere is no doubt that he is Rubashov who has lived and known a great deal. He feels all the responsibility of a leader and he can be very tolerant of others' vices.

Lois Nettleton as Luba, the young girl who loves Rubashov the man opposed to the commissar is warm and very human. The old prison commandant, Ivanoff, is excellently played by Guy Arbury. His scenes are almost telling in the play. He plays Rubashov's old friend to the hilt to get the confession he needs to satisfy his superiors, and one never quite knows whether he is really doing it for Rubashov or for the party. The outstanding were John Morny as No. 202, Allan Rich as the Italian jailor Luigi, and Leo Gordon as Gletkin, the young Communist jailor.

DARKNESS AT NOON, adapted by Sidney Kingsley from a novel of the same name by Arthur Koestler, is a play that should be seen. It is thoughtful, cleverly written and stands completely outside the propagandizing of both the United States and Russia.

Long Grind

Social Work

Toronto (CUP) — Way up at the North end of the campus, on the second and third floors of the Economics Building, is the haunt of the School of Social Work of the University of Toronto.

Social Work is a two year set-up. At the end of the first year, the successful student gets a BSW degree, at the end of the second, an MSW. In order to gain admission to proceed to a degree at the School, one must have a Bachelor's Degree, so that it is actually a Graduate School. But because the first year student is proceeding to a Bachelor of Social Work Degree, the University considers him an undergraduate. It isn't till second year that the Social Work student becomes a member of Varsity's Graduate School.

It's an accepted fact at most Schools of Social Work that along with lecture courses, a student should do practical field work. Those proceeding to degrees put in 400 hours per year of field work, under an approved supervisor in a Social Agency. Add that to a thorough academic course, plus a great deal of outside reading, and you have a mighty busy Social Work student.

The first year student can choose to "specialize" in one of two basic social work methods — Case Work or Group Work. In second year there is a greater refinement. The aim of the school is to prepare the student for a highly important profession, the functions of which are becoming increasingly central in society.

There are 170 students registered this year at the School—broken down into six categories. There are 71 full-time BSWs and 4 part-time; 42 full-time MSWs and 11 part-time. Then there are students who don't have all the entrance requirements, and until they do, cannot qualify for degrees. These people are granted certificates and are called Special Students, numbering 6 full-time and 36 part-time.

The University of Toronto School of Social Work enjoys a fine reputation. Its students come from right across Canada, from the United States, and even as far away as India and Japan. Many are fresh out of University, and others have had a wealth of experience in Social Agencies.

Because they are graduate students in a professional school, Social Work students are serious about their work. But for all their gravity, they know how to enjoy themselves. The gusto and enthusiasm with which they went to work on their Homecoming Week-end Float, which won an honourable mention, is just one incident.

The students are organized into the Social Work Students' Association which is represented on the Students' Administrative Council. The Association works in close co-operation with the faculty of the School. Last year it sponsored the first National Conference of Canadian Social Work Students. It is also the body that looks after student parties. Irving Mann, a second year student, is the president.

Blonde Wounded By Skule Bomb

Toronto (CUP) — New and serious developments may be arising from the explosion set by Engineers under the School of Law float at Homecoming week-end. Gloria Mae (age uncertain) one of the "girls" on the float is rumored to be in critical condition as a result of internal injuries suffered from the disaster.

From the girl's own lips a Varsity reporter heard the story which discloses the sinister implications of what was first thought to be merely a malicious attack on the School of Law. Secluded in a private hospital to protect her from a repetition of this savage attack, the big blonde sobbed. "He did it! He was jealous when I went out with an Artsman and he tried to kill me. I saw him throw that bomb."

The doctor outside the room said her condition was grave and only time would tell whether she would survive. "Internal wounds complicated by shock," he emphasized. "Very uncertain."

The All-Varsity prosecutor could not be reached for a statement. He had been out all day, reported his secretary. When questioned she did not deny that it might have something to do with the case. Privately it was conceded that there would be a charge laid.

Inside information leaked out to the effect that one of the most famous campus criminal lawyers had been closeted in his office with two men this morning. It was noticed that these men wore working boots and peculiar blue and white striped hats. When approached for a statement they answered "no comment" in a somewhat flustered manner.

Dents and Wycliffe played a scoreless tie game in interfaculty soccer yesterday. The snowy field was not conducive to fast running or good shooting.

In the noon-hour lacrosse game St. Mike's "A" defeated Senior SPS 11-7. Skule led 3-2 at the end of the first quarter, but the Double Blue pulled ahead in the second with four goals, and increased their lead in the second half. Murphy was the big gun, netting five shots; Rope and Grossie sank two apiece as well for the winners. MacKay scored four for Skule, and Dewar got two.

In Volleyball, Senior SPS downed Senior Vic 15-0, 15-3.

Correction: Architecture defeated Premeds 7-0 in a soccer game the day before yesterday. The Medsmen did not default, as was reported yesterday.

Safe Icons

Some pretty damning conclusions are drawn about the younger generation in this week's issue of Time. Not only are we grave and fatalistic, gregarious and conventional, and wanting in faith, but also we appear to lack, in Time's opinion, the spirit of revolt which has characterized youth in the past.

It would be very surprising indeed if a reforming zeal could survive the reactionary forces alive in society. A strong desire for progress and change would testify to the strength and health of our democracy. But Time is right, it does not exist.

And why not? Partially it seems from the feeling of self-satisfaction which permeates the North American continent. We are conscious of the fact that we are living in the best of possible worlds — or could be.

The Great Russian Threat (and militarily it is a real one) has undoubtedly intensified this feeling of satisfaction with the status quo. Indeed, fear of communism has done much to bring it about. Everyone wants to put his finger on Our Way of Life to keep it from getting away; few realize that this is the surest way of letting it escape.

What chance has a reformer, let alone a rebel, in a society which considers itself with satisfaction and which is preoccupied with fears of outside forces? Even a wild and irresponsible younger generation could not tear apart the icons polished daily in the press, in magazines such as Time, and elsewhere.

Today the weary road of the reformer leads only to martyrdom. Few can be expected to be attracted by such consequences. Reform, or even revolt, is usually only successful when there are no external threats to the existence of the country concerned.

The younger generation seems to have adopted the role of reaction, as has everyone else. They are standing firm, straight and still in a world that is always changing and developing.

We may pray for iconoclasts to keep our society healthy, but there is small hope for an answer.

Gardeners ?

Although the University Bookstore carries some fairly incredible books in the non-textual lines, the more obvious choices are often passed by in the search for the unusual, bizarre and unsaleable.

Books on gardening, cooking, electronics for the layman, on feeling happy in insecure times, as well as numerous copies of our Massey's Report grace the slender shelves. But it is still usually hard to find a book which it worth buying.

The Bookstore has one note of courtesy which we had always admired in the past. Copies of books written by professors in the University were always carried, regardless of their saleable qualities.

But the courtesy is a rather restricted one. One-time students of the university are not included, it seems. Even the Newdigate prize poem, "Queen of Sheba", written by Toronto's Rhodes Scholar, Michael Hornyansky, has been refused space by our rather exclusive bookstore.

Of course, the obvious argument, "it won't sell" has been used. Yet at 50c a copy, the retail price, it might have been worth a try.

It is rather odd that university students are so interested in books on gardening that they refuse to delve into poetry. But then, in this case at least, they weren't given a chance to decide.

Official Views

The Following is the Complete Text of a Report on the NFCUS Conference held at London in September and was received by The Varsity Yesterday Afternoon.

This is a report of the Toronto delegation on their stand taken at the recent National Conference of NFCUS on the question of the Russian student delegation. The statement is issued at the request of the editor-in-chief of The Varsity. It would not be necessary had The Varsity fully and fairly reported the Conference and subsequent Commission meetings on the campus.

The Varsity has indicated through its editorials and cartoons that NFCUS is afraid of Russian student visits to Canadian campi. NFCUS IS NOT AGAINST RUSSIAN STUDENTS VISITING CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES. Both NFCUS and the Toronto delegation feel that any contact between Canadian students and students from behind the Iron Curtain is to be welcomed and encouraged.

The question of the Russian student tour is only a small part of the NFCUS international program. The progressive and liberal outlook of this program is to be observed in NFCUS' attempt to prevent the last door closing on East-West student relationships. In the near future Canada's Union of Students will participate in a conference which will attempt to reconcile the IUS with the student unions of the Western World. NFCUS is proceeding actively in many other aspects of world student affairs — among them the establishment of a Pan-American Union and the support of ISS (WUS) international relief programs. A complete report of the activities of the International Affairs Commission of NFCUS will appear in the near future in The Varsity. Also the NFCUS policy will be aired in an open meeting to be held on the campus this Thursday. Anyone who would like to discuss these questions further is cordially invited to attend.

Let us, then, consider the Russian student question in relation to NFCUS activities as a whole. The Varsity has abstracted the refusal of the Russian student invitation from the context of the Conference. Moreover, it has suggested that Toronto's delegates voted against the principle of Russian students visiting Canada. This was not the problem with which we were confronted.

We were faced with the question: Would we, as the representatives of the 45,000 students of Canada sponsor a brief visit of Russian students to the Canadian Campi? Becaue the visit could last only three or four weeks the Russians would not be able to stay at any University more than a couple of days. This type of tour precludes the possibility of developing real friendship or understanding. Neither the Canadians nor the Russians would be able to develop any clear picture of the way of life of the other group; nor would either be able to make an approach toward clarifying differences in ideas and ideals. A trip, which would only give enough time for the two groups to look at each other — as one might look at animals in a zoo — promises little in the development of international unity.

Serious doubts were raised too, as to whether a hand-picked group, either of COMSOMOL student leaders, or of cultural delegates would be able to return to Russia and report through the student and public press, radio and other media a true picture of Canadian life as they saw it.

The second major factor which we had into consideration in deciding whether would sponsor such a tour was that con opposition would arise against the venture would be opposed by certain sections of th dian public and by a number of the administrations — notably in the Mariti Quebec. In the face of this, it seemed u proceed, especially as we were sure we have unanimous student support. Delega smaller universities in particular stat Soviet students would not be permitted campi and that if NFCUS sponsored it might destroy itself at those universi did not feel that NFCUS should take thi It must be understood that NFCUS has deal of work to do in many fields, dom well as international, and that, as a organization, it depends for its effective ing on the co-operation of the administra all universities, as well as the support of student members. We had to weigh the putting the Federation in a position where would be hampered and its effectiveness ed against the doubtful advantage to be from a four-week Russian visit.

Other aspects entered into our decision had to consider the problem of financing visit. We also recognized that the Soviet on this visit primarily as a propaganda This has since been borne out by the att local communists to make political capital our refusal to ratify the invitations. We kn would happen, but we also knew that if we the Russians, communists would be able t more propaganda from the adverse feeling Canadian public, from the opposition of u administrations, and from the certain bac the delegation from some campi. NFCUS have to defend its guests too, and would linked in the public mind with Communis

In the light of all these considerations, we our decision to reject the invitation.

Since the Conference, the possibility has of establishing student exchanges for stu poses. Such exchanges would lack many defects of a brief visit, and might bear consideration on this campus as well as NFCUS and ISS national organizations.

In conclusion we would like to emp NFCUS' willingness and anxiety to extend co ation with all students throughout the Those who decry NFCUS' attitude as pes or reactionary must take this into consid and must face the fact that as evidence will NFCUS is one of the few student actively attempting to bring together East West.

OUR READERS WRITE

From SAC To Us

Editor, The Varsity.

The seriousness with which vandalism on the campus has been viewed by the Caput and university officials concerned was taken as a clear indication that on the recurrance thereof the student body should take decisive action to show that it is a responsible self-governing student body capable of taking its own self discipling action. It was felt by the SAC executive that the entire student body would condemn the foolish actions of those responsible for painting "sandstone" buildings with oil paints.

Lately there have been several instances of destructive and thoughtless action by students. A few weeks ago $250.00 worth of decorations donated by the T. Eaton Company were destroyed or stolen at the Homecoming dance in Hart House. Also students were found merrily dancing atop the tables in Great Hall seriously damaging the surfaces. Then came the painting episode where enamel paints were used to paint five different university buildings. The expense entailed in all these acts of vandalism may well run to over $500.00.

At some point a halt must be called to such destruction. In some way it must be brought to the attention of the students that such acts cannot be continued endlessly and with impunity. The methods available to the SAC for taking strong action are limited. Self-discipline is invariably difficult and unpopular. Cancelling the Pep Rally is one of the few channels which would bring the seriousness of these acts to the attention of the entire student body. Obviously the cancelling was not done to 'punish' the student body but on behalf of the student body to show that we do not countenance or condone such actions on the part of a minority. If we are not capable of controlling our own affairs, as adults, then it must be left to the Caput to rule us as children.

In addition, there was at the time this matter was considered a possibility that all these acts were those of a destructive 'gang' operating on the campus which might take the opportunity of operating under cover of the Pep Rally to carry out further acts of thoughtless damage, not only to university, but also to outside property. In the light of all these reasons, it was felt that no other course of action open to the SAC Executive than to cancel the Pep Rally and investigate cumstances of the immedi age. A second aim of t mittee was to investigate lation between the publ struction and theft of Hom decorations and damage ment in Hart House.

If students can be found willing to contribute to tion and explanation of the Committee will be ab fill its function. If the feel these incidents are portant manifestations of away from student respo ity, then the Committee will be done.

McGill Approves Exchange In Almost Unanimous Vote

Montreal (Special) — The Students' Society of McGill University voiced its overwhelming support of the proposed reciprocal visits between Canadian and Soviet Students yesterday. It called on the National Federation of Canadian University Students to reconsider its negative decision on the exchange, at the same time reaffirming its "total opposition to the aims and methods of Soviet Communism."

Of the more than five hundred students who jammed the McGill Union for the special meeting of the Students' Society, only 12 people voted against the motion. All classes were cancelled so students of McGill could attend the special meeting which also dealt with proposed changes in the ISS constitution and the recent edict banning coeds from using the front entrance to the Arts building.

The Society also declared in its motion "that the present tension between nations cannot be alleviated unless a realistic attempt to achieve mutual understanding is made by all people, particularly students." The motion continued: "We believe that an exchange of student visits between Canada and the Soviet Union would contribute to this end (the relaxing of international tension both in itself and as an indication to the students of the world of our faith in democratic ideals and practise)."

John Scott, last year's editor of the McGill Daily presented the motion to the meeting. He said that the NFCUS should reconsider the proposal because delegates who voted against the proposal had now forsaken the reasons they gave then for doing so.

Open Meeting Today At 4

The international activities of NFCUS (National Federation of Canadian University Students) will come under fire this afternoon at an open meeting to be held at 4 p.m. in Room 6, University College. All students have been asked to attend.

Highlight of the meeting is expected to be a discussion of the NFCUS withdrawal of an invitation extended by Denis Lazure to a group of Soviet students to visit Canada. This invitation was originally made by Lazure (for NFCUS) at the annual conference of the International Union of Students in Warsaw this summer. It was not ratified when the Canadian student union met at its annual conference in London this fall.

The Story: Warsaw To London

The whole question of Soviet student visits to Canada started off as a side-issue of one of the many reports presented at the annual NFCUS conference in London last September. But since then, it has turned into a "cause celebre" which is rocking many a campus right across the country.

The whole thing started in Warsaw, when Denis Lazure, on behalf of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, invited a group of Russian students to visit Canada. A couple of days later, the Russians extended a similar invitation to a group of Canadian students to tour the Soviet Union.

However, when Lazure flew back to Canada to make his report, he found that NFCUS wasn't in favor of such a visit. The annual conference defeated his motion of invitation 12-6.

Lazure was in Warsaw attending the meeting of the International Union of Students (IUS), as the Canadian student union observer. He was not there with the approval of the NFCUS executive, but only with that of the President, Art Mauro of Manitoba. His job, since he was not accredited to the meeting, was simply to report back to the Canadian body.

The ideas of a Soviet student visit originally came to Lazure from John Thomson, President of the British National Union of Students. The BNUS conducted such an exchange of students earlier this year, an exchange which has been reported as quite successful.

Lazure said that he wrote Mauro about the possibilities of such a plan being carried out in Canada. When he received no answer, he decided to act on his own.

Over lunch one day during the Warsaw meeting, Lazure presented his idea to one of the Soviet delegation. The next step was a meeting with IUS President Joseph Grohman, who received the plan enthusiastically, and urged another meeting with the Soviet delegation.

That meeting was held. Three days later the Russians not only said they would be happy to come, but extended a similar invitation to a Canadian delegation to visit the Soviet Union.

It is expected that the proposal was first cleared with the Soviet Government through the Moscow headquarters of the Soviet Anti-Fascist Youth Committee (Russia's national student union).

Under the proposed plan, the Soviet delegation would tour Canadian universities for three or four weeks. Part of the group would be cultural representatives, part would be student leaders.

The Russians agreed to pay their own way to and from Canada by air. Travelling expenses across the country would be covered by receipts from their cultural performances in music and ballet. In addition, the Russian student union agreed to make up any deficit.

"It was agreed that there were to be no public speeches of a political nature," Lazure said. "Everything was to be strictly on a student basis."

The Case—Pro and Con

These are the basic arguments which have come up time and time again whenever discussion arises on a decision to withdraw Lazure's invitation to the Soviet students.

In their report (published yesterday) the Toronto delegates to the NFCUS conference in London emphasized the fact that NFCUS is not against Soviet students visiting Canadian universities. Therefore the problem does not seem to be the principle of Soviet visits, but merely whether or not NFCUS acted rightly in its decision.

The motion which was defeated in London, and for which NFCUS must be judged, is:

Resolved: (a) That NFCUS, in co-operation with interested groups, attempt to bring a delegation of Soviet students on the basis of international student cultural relations to Canada,

(b) That no financial obligation be borne by NFCUS in connection with this project.

These are the points supporting the NFCUS decision. The first [illegible] were stated in the official report of Toronto's delegates to the London conference. The others have appeared in discussions on this and other campi.

1. DURATION: The proposed tour will last only three or four weeks. This means that the Soviet students will be able to stay only one or two days on each campus, which will not be enough time for Canadians and Russians to get to know each other and settle problems.

2. PARTICIPANTS: The Soviet students would be a hand-picked group. They would not be able to report a true picture of Canadian life to their fellow Russians, because of censorship.

3. CANADIAN OPINION: Wide-spread opposition was expected from the administration of many universities. The Soviet students would not be allowed on some campi. There was no unanimous support for the proposal among students.

4. REPERCUSSIONS: Such a plan might destroy NFCUS on some campi, because of administrative opposition. It might do more damage than the possible good accomplished by a four-week visit.

5. FINANCES: The problems of a return visit. (At another time Wax mentioned the cost of the Soviet tour of Canada.)

6. PROPAGANDA: The Communists would find good propaganda material in the opposition which would be offered the tour in the Canadian press, and on the various campi. NFCUS, as host, would have to defend the position of the Soviet students, and would receive a "red tag."

7. OFFICIAL DIPLOMATIC REASON: The official NFCUS letter notifying the Soviet students of the invitation's withdrawal read: "It was felt that at the present time it would be impossible to arrange such a visit. A number of difficulties were raised (at the conference) in conjunction with the financing of such a project and the technical arrangements for conducting such a tour across Canada."

8. FEAR: The Canadian student isn't ready to face hand-picked Russian propagandists; he may even be converted.

9. LAZURE: Lazure had no authority from NFCUS to extend the invitation.

These are the points presented by those who feel NFCUS should have ratified Lazure's invitation.

1. GOODWILL: This is the crux of the matter. NFCUS is constantly speaking about its desire to co-operate with students around the world. It is even sending a delegation to Europe next month to confer with the Communist-dominated International Union of Students (IUS). But it has missed this big chance to show, in practice, that it wants to meet Russian students. And it may be an embarrassing decision, when the NFCUS delegates tell the IUS of their interest in Iron Curtain scholars.

2. PRINCIPLE: The motion which was defeated was one of principle, since the (b) clause removed all financial obligation from NFCUS. This means the NFCUS really doesn't want the Soviet students to visit Caanda.

3. PRACTICABILITY: Such a plan has already been put into operation with English and Russian students this summer.

4. PROPAGANDA: Canadians have visited Russia, but no Russian student delegation has ever come to Canada. This decision gives the Communists a chance to say Canada has no interest in seeing Russian students.

5. FINANCES: The Soviet students offered to pay their own transportation costs to Canada, and (if necessary) half the cost of their stay in Canada. The rest could be made up from admission charges for their cultural entertainment program.

6. RESULTS: Aid to South-East Asia has been considered more efective. However, the aid Canadian students can send is so small that its only real worth is in goodwill. Therefore, it is not reasonable to say that the Soviet exchange visit would be less effective, since it too, creates goodwill.

7. STUDENT OPINION: Controversy with Communists might be good for the isolationism Canadian students have exhibited in the past five years.

8. REPRESENTATION: Although the NFCUS conference claims to be representative of Canadian student opinion, there is no guarantee that it is infallible. In this case it may have made its own fears those of the Canadian student.

Debating Club Hold 100th Meet

October 10, 1951, marked the end of an era. At 10:30 p.m. on the day the hundredth session of the Hart House Debates Club was adjourned. In the course of one hundred debates, the House acquired not only its honorable tradition, but also the various accoutrements which make debating today what it is.

Today it would be difficult to imagine a debate room containing only chairs between its blank walls, yet for the first five years, the Debates Room was not even graced by the Speaker's Chair, which, according to its donors, "embodies the authority of the Speaker, and adds the necessary dignity to this already dignified hall."

The story of the chair is the story of Henry Maurice Cody, one of the founders of the club. He was one of the main speakers at the second debate held in Hart House, and in 1927 he had the distinction of being the first member of the House to oppose a Prime Minister. At that time, Maurice Cody was also president of the University College Literary and Athletic Society, and a member of the Osgoode Hall debating team which won the intercollegiate shield.

His drowning in July 1927 unfortunately brought an end to a promising career. In his memory, his parents donated the Speaker's Chair. In doing so they were "carrying out what they knew would be his greatest wish for he believed that in a democratic country public speaking must play a large part."

"Yet Maurice Cody is not dead," said Warden Ignatieff of Hart House. "This later generation may miss his stirring rhetoric, but he lives on in the glorious tradition he helped to build. The outward appearance of the Debates Room has changed, but the spirit of debating is still the same—the eternal search for truth, pursued in the face of all difficulties."

The chair, presented by the Rev. Dr. H. J. Cody, then chairman of the Board of Governors of the University, was designed by Mr. Henry Sproatt, one of the architects of Hart House. It was patterned after the architectural design of the Debates Room, and carved from mature and sturdy oak, an object of beauty whose avowed purpose was to connect the name of Maurice Cody for all time with the debates of Hart House. Over the years, much has been added to the Debates Room, but the Speaker's Chair is still the symbol and centre of authority.

This term, two more debates will be held in its shadow. On November 21, the resolution will be "That this House regards the modern press as a monument to human folly", and on December 12 the House will debate on the subject of Canada's immigration policy.

LPPs Want Peac Declares MacLeo

"The central issue in this coming election is the issue of peace," stated A. A. MacLeod, MPP for Bellwoods, today in the second of a series of lectures on "This Election and the Christian." Speaking to the Hart House Chapel group in the debates room, MacLeod, representing the Labor Progressive Party, added that although he and his audience had "not too much in common politically or ideally" he felt that there were a few basic thoughts that could be agreed upon.

"Christians must pass judgment on the economic and social injustices," Mr. MacLeod, mentioning specially the deplorable state of mental health institutions in Ontario and the sad way in which aged were treated. On the national situation MacLeod that "Every Canadian soldier Korea should be taken out mand that all other countries the same." He described "pro-war policy of the States Government" and atrocities caused by the war on in Korea.

"Christians should be ed at the hypocrisy of the parties. Their conduct is repr sible," he added. "There not be a wall between the fe provincial and municipal ment in regard to interna policies."

MacLeod, who is 49 years was born in Black Rock, Scotia, and received his e tary education in Sydney. He later moved to Halifax he attended the Maritime B College before coming Ontario. He was married and has three daughters.

With his colleague J. B. berg, MacLeod was first to the Ontario Legislature as a member of the LPP and been the leader of his party the provincial House since date. Although they have unsuccessful in increasing party's representation in P ment, they have been cessful in two provincial since entering the legislature.

The lecture was well and a spirited discussion fol Next week, Mr. C. H. MPP will give the CCF point view.

Special Sundaes seem to be a coming fad for good publicity. Past years we had the special AVR Sundae and a sundae for The Enchanted, and this year we have the UC Follies' Sundae shown here. The originator of all of them, Louis Londos is shown centre with Barb Cornes, III U.C., co-director of the Follies, left, and Cathy Haddow, III U.C., one of the dancers. Londos has been thinking up new sundaes for years. As a bartender after the first World War he couldn't get the thought of them out of his mind and in 1933 he started serving his "Louis Specials" because according to him, "When you like one thing, you always come back."

NOTICE

The Varsity is going to have a party Friday night. There will be no punch, champagne, lobster sandwiches, or other vulgar refreshments of this sort. Rather we look upon this party as an occasion to discuss the philosophy of modern journalism.

All those who failed to attend the news, makeup and reviewing lectures, are especially urged to attend. Even the enthusiasts who did will be tolerated on Friday night. However, this time there will be a nominal charge for the stimulating discussion which is expected.

Because we do not wish to have any of the tutorials overcrowded, those planning on attending are requested to sign their names on the list in The Varsity news office. In this way, we will be able to arrange a sufficient number of group leaders.

Manske Tells Orchid Story On Saturday

On Saturday, November 10, a lecture will be given before the Royal Canadian Institute in Convocation Hall at 8.15 p.m. on "The Lure of Orchids". The speaker, Dr. R. H. Manske has made a special study of the hybridization and cultivation of orchids as a hobby.

Following a brief introduction of the botany of the Orchidaceae, Dr. Manske will give a short resume of the history of their introduction and cultivation. Hybridization and the artificial propagation from seeds has become an important source of new and valuable plants and methods of attaining this end are described in some detail.

Dr. Manske was associate research chemist with the National Research Council of Canada from 1930 to 1943 and was appointed to his present post as Director of Research of the Dominion Rubber Company Limited in 1943. Dr. Manske will illustrate his lecture with living specimens and lantern slides in natural color.

Mock Parliament Upholds Freedom

London (CUP) — An overwhelming majority among the members of the Liberal and Independent opposition defeated a Progressive Conservative motion that all pro-Communist acts be declared an indictable offence at a mock parliament held last week at the University of Western Ontario.

In introducing his bill, the government leader drew attention to the seditious literature published by the Labour Progressive Party which was receiving criticism in the House of Commons. He urged that the Communist party was a menace to the country and should be outlawed.

Such action would take an impossibly large police force and would in effect entail the setting up o fa totalitarian state in Canada, the speaker of the Liberal opposition said.

The leader of the CCF party told the parliament that people should not be condemned for exercising a right that is in direct accord with our heritage.

"It is getting so anything remotely connected with freedom means Communism," the Independent party leader remarked.

Feather Fair

ther Fair, scheduled to take yesterday, has been postponed until Wednesday, November 14. Fair was cancelled yesterbecause of the sleet, snow and that fell Tuesday night and ued over into Wednesday, the University of Toronto ing wet and slushy.

was to have been held 'Island' in front of Hart behind the Bookstore. It be held there Wednesday.

all the Faculties who were to icipate in the affair, only the ical and Occupational Therapy went ahead with the schedul- ns. According to Sheila Neff, OT, who is in charge of the Physical and Occupational Therapy contribution to the Fair, that course was not informed that the fair had been postponed. The girls therefore sold their fudge in front of Hart House during the noon hour and collected more than 36 dollars from their sales, approximately ten dollars more than they collected last year.

Also braving the weather were the taggers. They were on the job selling tags from 9:00 Wednesday morning until after two o'clock in the afternoon. Their efforts netted $683.75, an increase of $296.40 over last year's tag day total of $389.35.

All proceeds go to the Red Feather Community Chest Campaign.

Place For Women In Meds Debaters Defeat Resolution

The resolution that "Women have no place in the Faculty of Medicine" was defeated by a majority of eighteen yesterday, in a debate sponsored by the Medical Debates Society.

The speaker for the affirmative was John Macdonald, III Meds, who stated at the beginning of his speech that he did not necessarily hold the views which he was forwarding, but that he was being dogmatic merely for the sake of the debate. He then listed women's motives for entering the Faculty of Medicine, among them the desire to compete with the males. He stated that many women get married after completing their course, and never use their knowledge; whereas the men whose places they took might have been able to make a living in medicine. He also said that the role of the woman is housekeeping and reproduction, and that a woman doctor lacks feminine qualities.

Hugh MacNeil, I Pre-Meds, speaking for the opposition, argued that women doctors have saved lives and advanced the cause of medicine, and that anyone possessing the necessary qualities has a right to be a doctor, whether that person is male or female. He said that women have always practised medicine, and have never completely disappeared from the medical field.

In the discussion which followed the debate, Mae Lipman, I Meds, stated that women doctors give up their practice when they marry, because men do not think a woman can be a mother and a doctor at the same time. "A medical practice lasts twenty-four hours a day, and is not possible for a mother," said Rod Box, IV Meds.

Shirley Kyle, II Meds concluded the discussion with the statement that men could get along without women, in the medical profession, just as people could get along without electricity. "But," she added, "who wants to?"

Are we going to have a student Union now or ever? This is going to be the subject of a debate at 1 p.m. today of the University of Toronto Debating Union with the Engineering Debates Club as hosts. They will present an open forum in room 1035 of the Wallberg Building on the resolution, "That the University of Toronto needs a Student Union as soon as possible". Speaking for the affirmative are Lois de Groot, IV SPS, and Cliff Wilson, V Arch. Opposing them are Al Strauss IV UC, and Dave Rose, IV UC. At left is an architect's plan of a possible union that could be built here.

Take Steps To Curtail Misconduct

Kingston (CUP — An appeal for student co-operation in curtailing drinking and disorderly conduct at football games was made by Principal Mackintosh of Queen's at a special session of Queen's student council executive.

Principal Mackintosh, attending the meeting at the request of the Alma Mater Society's president Bobbie Bartlett, warned that disciplinary action would be taken by the university itself if student behavior at the games did not improve.

"Drinking at the games is against the law," Dr. Mackintosh said, "and students have no claim for exemption from the law."

"I am concerned that the students should respect the university property. I have no sympathy with carrying on in ways contrary to the ordinary laws we are all subject to.

"If the pressure of public opinion is in favour of improvement, the situation will be improved."

Dr. Mackintosh said he would recommend full faculty support of any steps taken by the AMS to control that situation.

Night Editors

All the night editors of The Varsity are asked to come out to a meeting in Room 60, University College, at 1 p.m. today. The makeup editor will outline and discuss all the problems concerning night editors and anyone who has been listed in that capacity should be in attendance.

Varsity SCM Group To Attend Conference

A North American Student Conference entitled "Christians in a World Struggle' is being planned for the Christmas holidays, December 27 to January 1. Sponsored by the Student Volunteer Movement of the USA, this sixteenth Quadrennial Conference is to take place at the University of Kansas and will be attended by members of the Student Christian Movement of Canada and the US. The sub-title of the conference is "Christ's Kingdom — Man's Hope."

The conference will feature four main speakers. Dr. Charles W. Ranson of Ireland, General Secretary of the International Missionary Council will lead the two thousand students in thinking about the Christian World Mission. Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr of the Union of Theological Seminary in New York will give his analysis of the perils of the modern world, and Dr. Ruth Isabel Seabury of Boston will bring a new picture of Christian Missions at home and abroad. The fourth speaker will be Dr. John S. Badeau, President of the American University at Cairo, who will depict the church at work in the turbulent Near East.

The main study book which will be used at the conference, 'That They May Have Life', was written by Ceylonese Christian, Dr. T. D. Niles who gives a new Oriental point of view. The students at the conference, of whom about 250 will be Canadians, will join in the discussion groups and hear what churches in all parts of the world are doing and can do in the future. The purpose of the conference is to help students decide on their life work with particular emphasis on the Christian Missions.

Plans for the conference as it concerns students on this campus are being handled by the local unit of the Student Christian Movement.

Unity Is Inevitable Baha'i Group Told

"The Baha'i Faith upholds the unity of God, recognizes the unity of His prophets, and includes the principle of the oneness and wholeness of the entire human race. It proclaims the necessity and inevitability of the unification of mankind, asserts that it is gradually approaching, and claims that nothing short of the transmitting spirit of God, working through His Manifestation this day, can ultimately succeed in bringing it about," said Dr. Michael Ikwuemesi, B.Sc., D. Bact., introducing his talk on the "Oneness of Mankind" yesterday at an open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group.

He went on to say, "The Baha'i World Faith tries to unite political and economic institutions without regard to the spirit, and this effort cannot bear fruit. This spiritual unity among men revolves around the Baha'i teachings by uniting mankind in the political realm, promoting unity of thought, unity in freedom, unity of religions, unity of nations, unity of races and unity of languages."

Dr. Ikwuemesi concluded by saying that the principle, the 'Oneness of Mankind' is the pivot around which all the teachings of Baha'u'llah revolve, and it is no mere outburst of ignorant emotionalism or an expression of vague and pious hope. Its implications are deeper, and its claims greater than any which the Prophets of old were allowed to advance. The candles of unity have just started to burn, and world events today point to the inevitability that it will continue to burn and ignite the hearts of all men, and ultimately bind the states and nations as members of one human family, which will represent the consummation of human evolution.

UNTD?

Social Workers

"Battle stations!" "Synchro- your watches!" No, it's not UNTD in action; this is the cry of the staff social workers at the University Settlement, just prior to the 'invasion' of the Junior boys and girls, on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons after school.

These youngsters literally come bursting into the Settlement House at 15 Grange Rd., full of 'vim, vigour and vitality', and they may pounce on some unsuspecting leader who happens to be in their midst.

This is all done in fun, of course; they've been cooped up in stuffy, poorly-lit classrooms most of the day; their living quarters are crowded, often necessitating strict parental control. Consequently, they have to have some place where they can "let loose"; such is the Settlement.

It is the task of the volunteer leaders to help channel that energy into a club activity, or interest groups, such as: model airplanes, arts and crafts, knitting, cooking, dancing and acting.

These are all creative activities, and with the understanding guidance of the staff and volunteers, the children can see their own achievements, the products of their own efforts.

There are various age groups which hold their activities at the Settlement House, both at No. 15 and No. 23. The Junior department age 8-11 years is stressed because they have the greatest need for volunteers, particularly for outdoor games and excursions of all sorts, and certain mass programs.

But the other groups also need volunteers, and some students may prefer working with older groups. These are the Intermediates, boys and girls, 12-15 years. They meet in the evenings for interest groups and dances and frequent jamborees. Then there are the Seniors, 16-18, and the young adults known as 'Club Cosmo', who meet Thursday and Sunday nights. They have their dances and their games and some form of interest groups.

There are often several activi-

Joe & Ivan

We take great pleasure in introducing these two representative Russian exchange students who have been haunting this campus for the past few weeks in hope of recognition. Finally they have been granted an open discussion today before the External Affairs Commission to determine their status.

Just two days ago Joe and Ivan were on their way to Vancouver where the University of British Columbia had already issued an open invitation to them. However they were forced to turn back at Sunnyside due to a heavy blizzard.

They are expected at the open SAC meeting at 4 p.m. this afternoon, in Room 6, University College.

Acadia Questions Hazing Suspension

Wolfeville, N.S. (CUP)—Freshmen at Acadia escaped most of the initiation program planned for them this year. After the activities of the first evening, it was announced by the dean of men that initiation proceedings would be suspended.

The announcement came as a result of violations of initiation rules. Over - enthusiastic upper classmen had departed from the approved initiation plans, and had led the pyjama-clad freshmen out of bounds.

A poll of freshmen opinion, conducted by the college newspaper, showed that 85% disapproved of the suspension. Moreover, several students objected to the manner in which the suspension was carried out. No notification had been given to the Students' Council.

Watson Kirkconell, president of Acadia, explained the University's stand. He pointed out that, while a partial delegation of authority is made to the Students' Council in the realm of student activities, final authority and legal responsibility for all students rests with the Board of Governors. "The limitations placed on initiation at Acadia grow chiefly out of the need for avoiding public liability," he said.

In view of the existing circumstances, an editorial in the college newspaper came out in favor of abolishing initiation altogether. Energy could then be directed toward "a royal welcome for the class of '56."

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Two pictures now on display can almost be called War Pictures. But the action of war is only incidental to the themes of both. In one case, this doesn't matter a bit, in the other, more battle action might have made more satisfying film.

The films are TERESA and THE DESERT FOX. The latter, the biography of Field-Marshal Erwin Rommel, ends its fourth week at the Odeon-Toronto today. TERESA is flitting about the hinterlands of Famous Players neighborhood houses (I saw it at the Runnymede) after a short stay a few months back at the University.

TERESA is much the better of the two. Its failure at the box-office is a comemntary on the unwise booking methods of the movie enterpreneurs. In fact the case of TERESA is very much akin to that of INTRUDER IN THE DUST. This satisfying and mature film version by MGM's Clarence Brown of the William Faulkner novel lasted all of five days at the large Loew's Uptown treatre couple of years ago.

Comment by the more profound of the downtown critics was that this picture should have been shown at a small art house, viz., the Towne Cinema. An audience pretending towards "discrimination" would have received it much better than the Ma and Pa Kettle addicts of the Uptown.

The same sort of thing seems to have happened to TERESA. The University Theatre has had many adult films, but TERESA got the bum's rush there. To see it or INTRUDER IN THE DUST now demands careful watching of the minute listings on the evening movie pages. But in both cases, the films are more than worth the microscopic work.

TERESA is a subtle, searching film. The subtlety and the deep probing is due mainly to director Fred Zinneman's intelligent touch and taste. A weak young boy (John Ericson) has post-army adjustment problems. He has returned to his New York City tenement home after service in Italy, confronting his Hamlet-complex mother (Patricia Collinge) with an Italian war bride, Teresa (Pier Angeli). Young Philip Cass has a hell of a time adjusting, and the film looks back and around to find out why. When informed of her pregnancy, the child-like Teresa says to the doctor, "But Philip is too young to have a baby."

The young Italian actress, Pier Angeli, is a welcome and unique addition to Hollywood's young women. Her sensitive face and alarmingly large and expressive eyes will grip even the hardest of student cynics — Fourth Year men, for instance. What enhances her beauty and personality is a feeling of inherent maturity (perhaps an Old World faculty) which makes what she thinks and does seem significant and real.

John Ericson, a Broadway neophyte, fits the role of Phillippo well, with his likeness to Marlon Brando effectively amended with a weak mouth that Cass would have had. Lending his Puckish face to the proceedings is cartoonist-actor Bill Mauldin.

The outstanding performance, however, is by Broadway veteran Patricia Collinge as a horr... example of Phillip Wylie's M... ism. The Jones Beach scene ... she hosses: "Pssst, pssst ... rets?" is the high point of ... film.

Plays Cultural Bargain

Next Tuesday and Wednesday evening the University of Toronto Drama Committee takes over Hart House Theatre for two evenings of one-act plays. This all-university organization is presenting six one-act plays put on by its six member groups. This will be the first time that the Royal Conservatory Drama group is included in the program and the play will be on Tuesday—Noel Coward's tense drama of middle-class in England — FUMED OAK. On the same evening the Vic Drama Club is producing John Drinkwater's X=0, which deals with the futility of war (in this case the Trojan war) and the resulting waste of youth. St. Michael's College's THE SPARTAN GIRL closes the evening on a light note. It is a comedy which with modern dialogue pokes fun at classical customs and morals.

Wednesday night's program opens with Nursing's production of the farce THE PURPLE DOORKNOB directed by Bob Osborne, U.C. grad of last year. Trinity's play completes the evening with their presentation of Susan Glaspell's TRIFLES and HELENA'S HUSBAND by Moeller which complements the Drinkwater play by spoofing the historic kidnapping of Helen by Paris — thereby causing the Trojan war.

This interesting collection of plays will be on view on Nov. 13 and 14 at the price of 50 cent a ticket. It ofers not only one of the best cultural bargains on the campus but also some fascinating entertainment that deserves your support.

Don Juan

George Bernard Shaw decided to make his MAN AND SUPERMAN a "Don Juan" play, since none had been written for over a century. But Shaw was a writer of social satire and he tried to combine the theme. He tied in the Don Juan theme in a dream sequence in the middle of the play. The four main characters of the social satire reappear as Bone, Elvira and her father, the Statue, from Mozart's Don Giovanni, and a Don Juan and a Devil that are pure Shaw. These carry on what would appear to be an exceedingly boring conversation for the stage, but from all accounts of past performances the audience never loses interest — Robert Gill said that this play was the best portion of a five hour production of MAN AND SUPERMAN in London this summer.

Next week four of the English-speaking world's most distinguished actors will appear at Massey Hall to give this dream play. They are Charles Boyer, Charles Laughton, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Agnes Moorehead, and they will present DON JUAN IN HELL on Monday and Wednesday. This will be an excellent opportunity for people who appreciate good dramatic entertainment.

It might be added here that DON JUAN IN HELL was part of a bill of one-act plays presented by the U.T.D.C. in Hart House Theatre last January.

Louis Armstrong — An Appreciation

Louis Armstrong is the greatest figure in the development of jazz. His Massey Hall concert last Saturday was a real stinker. But this is not so much a review as an Appreciation of King Louis and his two jazz instruments, the cornet/trumpet and voice.

Jazz is still an adolescent art. Despite the current doldrums, both in popular fashion and in bopological development, jazz is more than the passing of a hit tune, or the dead ashes of a cocktail-lounge cigarette.

Unlike our highbrow jazz apostles like Winthrop Sargeant or the Europeans, Hugues Panassie and Robert Goffin, a jazz lover needs no profound theories of jazz development to boost him along. Neither does he have to go along with our jazz radicals like Barry Ulanov and other writers who insist on New Things and Modern Music to maintain jazz's pace. (The Stan Kenton frantic Innovating is one result of this approach.)

Jazz is a motley thing. The snobs among its midst have tried to make cults of different chronological phases. Thus the New Orleans addicts. Or the Chicago early swing fans. Or the big band swing of the Goodman school. The progressive stuff of Kenton, Woody Hermany, Boyd Raeburn, etc. Or the bop of Charlie Parker and Lennie Tristano. Or the "cool" music of Stan Getz. (The newest thing, you understand.)

The place of Armstrong in this set of phases that the cults try to stratify and preserve is an interesting one. His was a pioneering sound, whether it be trumpet or voice. What he says is simple and pure in quality, there are no pyrotechnics in his trumpet or swoops in his voice. And yet when his records are studied (and happily the new Armstrong boom has resulted in re-releasing of scores of historic recordings), the steady change in Armstrong can be studied just in the way that of Coleman Hawkins of the tenor saxophone can be discerned. At all times, Armstrong has been vital to jazz.

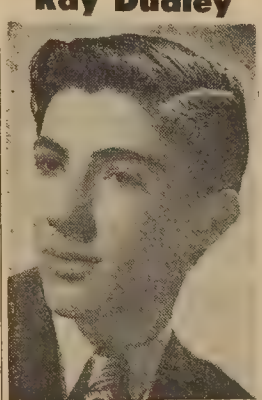
The new Armstrong boom came when he formed his All-Stars, a small manageable group that included pianist Earl Hines, a long-time collaborator in jazz, clarinetist Barney Bigard and trombonist Jack Teagarden. For once in a long while Armstrong was surrounded by kindred spirits and the All-Stars' contribution of old and new tunes in a free-wheeling New Orleans manner plus more modern overtones also proved to be popular.

When the Armstrong All-Stars came along two years ago, there were flashes of the brilliance displayed in the more durable archives of the Town Hall Concert album. Teagarden, too much of an individualist to fit completely into the All-Star music, nevertheless paired with Armstrong on the singing of Rocking Chair to excite and satisfy both addict and bobby-soxer. But it was the Louis art with voice and trumpet on Ain't Misbehaving and Pennies From Heaven that made jazz heaven possible on earth.

The All-Stars were concerned then with jazz standards like Muskrat Ramble and Strutting With Some Barbecue. And the pop tunes singled out for Armstrong treatment still had the enduring qualities of I Surrender Dear or Confessing.

Last Saturday, the Louis Armstrong group came to Toronto again, flushed with commercial success and European accolades. Teagarden had left, so that Armstrong was now the solo star. The audience was a crowd of 30ish couples, many university students, and groups of women. There were very few strides and wolf cuts around.

But the concert was a stinker. The Armstrong voice was fine and his style great in his first vocal, Blueberry Hill. But that trumpet which once sounded as if it were the only way a trumpet should be played sounded tired and old. Not until the group clowned with Twelfth Street Rag did the concert take hold. (But the sight of the dignified professional musician Barney Bigard doing a jitterbug jig was almost as vulgar as the later antics of comedienne Velma Middleton.)



This was an entertaining show: "What showman Louis is!" was a feminine comemnt during intermission. It was not the musical feast that many of us went to receive. The only old-time standard was High Society used solely to show off the Bigard clarinet technique. And most of the Armstrong contributions were ephemeral Hit Parade tunes.

Musically, Earl Hines was impressive despite his use of the same pattern whether of Tea For Two or Honeysuckle Rose. But Louis himself, the jazz great, spent much of his time being the Personality Kid, MCing the show. He should have sung Confessing or I Can't Give You Anything But Love instead.

And yet, after all was over, there is still the beer-glass comment: "There's only one Louis Armstrong."

— Faculty of Music.

Ray Dudley, well-known young Toronto pianist, will be playing for the Wednesday Afternoon Series in Hart House next week. As a member of the staff of the Royal Conservatory of Music, he gives recitals in the Conservatory, and he has also played in the Music Amphitheatre at the Canadian National Exhibition. He is especially noted for his playing of the music of John Beckwith and of other Toronto composers. Besides modern works, his program will include music by Ravel and Schubert next week.

Calculation Capers

— Folke Olke Photos by Bill Assad.

Rumours are flying about the campus about the famous Skule Machine. The freshmen especially are curious to know what all the to-do is about.

When questioned, the creator of this year's machine, Jim Drummond, would only state: "This year, our production will again feature new and astounding machinations created by our top Rube Goldbergian brains."

From the indications gleaned from Skulemen, Paul Hutchison's production of Skule Nite '52 will not only have one machine but several, under the title of "Calculation Capers."

For the benefit of the freshmen, it should be explained that Skule Nite, showing on the 16th and 17th November, traditionally has had a Machine constructed by Skulemen, around which their whole show revolves.

BABY BLUES VS. AGGIES TODAY

Speaking Of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

Unfortunate though it may be, it seems that when the most important football games of the season roll around the weather immediately determines to do its very worst. Any one who saw the Argos and the Tiger-Cats slush their way around Varsity Stadium yesterday will understand just what the Blues and the Redmen will have to put up with this Saturday unless old Sol makes a timely appearance today or tomorrow.

This pre-winter stage of weather usually comes a little too late to affect Intercollegiate footballers, but it sure hit the nail on the head this fall as far as interference is concerned.

The only thing that remains to be considered is how such adverse playing conditions are going to affect the chances of the two teams, for now that the weatherman has lowered the boom, there is nothing to do but accept his verdict.

Although the Blues have been working hard up until a couple of days ago to perfect a neglected pass attack, it would appear that their reliance on a ground offensive will stand them in good stead on a field like the one that will probably be lying in the centre of Varsity Stadium this Saturday. One of McGill's most potent weapons has been a long pass. Even Nobby Wirkowski can't toss that ball well when it weights twice as much as normal and is as slippery as a greased pig.

The Blue did most of their ground-gaining in Montreal on the quick opening plays that have proved so effective for them all season. Even on a wet field, those plays will go if blockers can get enough traction to shove opposing linemen out of the way even momentarily. But the pitchout end runs that Varsity has used to advantage this season will be a pretty dangerous gamble on a field as slushy as the one yesterday.

Of course, if the weather turns warm and sunny there can be a lot of passing even from a comparatively wet field underfoot. According to all reports though, the Redmen have a lot more to offer than a pass attack and are a greatly improved team in the offensive department over what they were at the first of the season.

After watching the Yates Cup slip out of their grasp last fall, the Redmen are in no frame of mind to lose it again this season. The Blues have two chances to turn that trick, but nothing would please us more than to see them do it the first time out.

Quarter

Alex "Lic" Lawson, who played at end on the 1948 championship Blues at the end position, has been converted to a quarter this season and his play calling has been one of the bright features in the unbeaten performance at Varsity this fall.

Last League Game For Football Ints, In Stadium At 2:15

The University of Toronto intermediate football squad will play the final game of the regular schedule at Varsity Stadium at 2:15 this afternoon. The Baby Blues will face the OAC Aggies in a game which means nothing as far as standings are concerned as Varsity has already clinched the title.

The Blue team will be intact for today's tilt with no injuries reported. By an agreement of the two opposing coaches, the rule limiting each team to dress 24 men has been waived and both squads will have 30 players in uniform.

The previous meeting between these two clubs this season resulted in a 19-7 victory for the Blues. As in their other contests this year, the Intermediates won out on the passing arms of quarters Doug Geekie and Gerry Fr... henry, and some good pass in... ception by their defensive squad. The Blues were able to snag s... en Aggie passes and this combined with some stellar line play kept the OAC attack bogged down.

The only department where the Aggies outplayed the Blues in their last outing, and where they will give the home team trouble this afternoon is the kicking. M... Burley, who is up from Jun... Skule, has been turning in a sol... performance in the hoofing d... season, but he is not up to the standard set by Tony Calverly of the Aggies. Calverly has been doing a tremendous job this se... son, averaging 65 yards per boot. This has been the major factor in keeping the OAC squad up to the other two teams in the loop.

This afternoon's encounter is the final of the schedule but there may be another game next week. The Queen's University Comets have won the Ottawa-St. Lawrence Conference, which corresponds to our Intermediate league, and have challenged the Baby Blues to a game next Saturday for the Intermediate Collegiate title. There has been no definite word from the Athletic office of the acceptance of this challenge, but if the Intermediates consent to meet the little Gaels the contest will be held probably in Kingston a week from tomorrow.

The snow and the rain curtailed the Interfaculty sports somewhat yesterday as all three soccer games had to be called off. Games were scheduled between Pre-med and Trin B, St. Mike's and Emmanuel, and Knox and Forestry, but as the front campus was a veritable bog, playing was then out of the question.

Lacrosse, of course, went on as usual, but as far as Vic I was concerned, it would have been better if it hadn't. The uphappy Victsters were on the receiving end of a 10-1 pasting from Meds I as Gear of the winners fired five tallies and Kilty 2. The others went to Sims, Vince, and McMillan. Ham was the lone Vick marksman.

Pharm A walloped Med III 10-5 in another boxla tilt with Robinson, Wolfe, and Pollard dividing 9 goals equally among them. Sasaki scored the other. For the defeated Doctors, Scott was high man with a brace of counters while Hipwell, Billings, and Creighton netted one apiece.

Four volleyball games were scheduled. UC III downed Med I yr. 15-11, 15-10; Emmanuel A took Wycliffe A 15-5, 15-6. Med IV yr. beat Trin A 15-4, 16-14, and SPS III smothered Jr. Vic 15-1, and 15-3.

Injury Free Varsity Team Faces McGill

Coach Bob Masterson of the Senior Blues said last night that his team would go into the all-important game against the McGill Redmen this weekend comparatively free from injury. Although several players suffered minor hurts in the game against the Mustangs last weekend, most of them will be back in playing condition by Saturday.

Steve Oneschuck, who came out of the game with a couple of sore ribs last Saturday afternoon when he ended up on the bottom of a pile of Mustangs, seems to be pretty well recuperated. Bill Bewley, who missed the first game of the season against the Redmen with a sore shoulder, had his wing injured again last weekend, but should be back in action this Saturday.

Jim Butler, freshman inside with Varsity, missed the game against the Mustangs last week with his broken hand in a cast and will most likely have to sit it out this week as well. Ray Yakasovitch's ankle still is not in the best of shape and he is a doubtful starter.

Harry Hyde and John Adams have recovered from minor injuries received during the Mustang game and will see action against the Redmen this Saturday.

Fencing

Coach of the University of Toronto Fencing team, Mr. Jules Alpar, himself an Olympic competitor and coach in the sport, is having a hard time finding enough members to fill his squad for Intercollegiate competition this fall.

With competition for both senior and intermediate teams lined up, the coach is hoping for a turnout of interested students that will put Varsity back in the running for the Charles Walters Trophy. Report to the fencing room on Monday and Friday evenings at 6.00 o'clock for further information.

Football, Soccer Off Until Monday

Old man winter has dealt a crippling blow to the interfaculty schedule. Both the football and soccer games have been called off for the rest of the week because of the conditions of the back and front campus.

It was hoped by officials of the Athletic Association that the back campus could be cleared in time for the scheduled SPS vs. Meds game yesterday afternoon. Arrangements were made with the stadium to borrow the men and equipment being used there to clear the field for the Big Four playoff.

Because the fields were covered with slush the ordinary tractors were useless and a grader with a 16 inch blade was borrowed. This grader arrived late at the stadium because of heavy traffic in the city, and it wasn't finished clearing the field there until after 1:00. But by this time it was apparent that the campus would be useless unless swept with big brooms after being cleared by the grader, but there was no labor available for this job.

It was therefore decided by a committee of the Athletic Association to leave both campi until next Monday and let nature take its course. If it remains cold over the weekend, the snow can be rolled and games will be played on that surface. But if the temperature rises, the fields will drain by themselves leaving a damp but clear surface for play next week.

In either case every effort will be made to complete the schedules in both the soccer and the football. This is the worst weather conditions encountered by the Intramural loop in its sixteen year history, but with a good break next week, everything should get back to normal.

SCIENCE NOTES

The Umbilicus

The umbilicus is a round depressed cicatrix in the midline of the abdomen usually found at the level of the fourth lumbar vertebra. It represents the site at which the umbilical cord entered the embryonic individual. The main structures passing through the cord are the umbilical arteries and veins upon which the unborn depends for sustenance. It was along these vessels that infections of the newborn were so prone to occur in the preaseptic days.

Hamilton Bailey has written: "Every time we examine an abdomen our eyes, almost instinctively, rest momentarily upon the umbilicus. How innumerable are the variations of this structure!" When Cullen was preparing his monumental study of the area, he examined hundreds of patients in search of a normal navel. So varied were they that he eventually printed photographs of sixty types which he had seen. In the infant, the umbilicus is much larger in proportion to body weight than in the adult. There is no relation between the size of the umbilicus and the size of the adult.

The function of the umbilicus in prenatal life is obvious: postnatally its function is contemplative.

O iam satis est, O Varsitate
Iam pervenimus usque ad umbilicos.

Queen's Budget Can't Manage NFCUS Cost

"Like all student councils, Queen's are trying to reduce expenditures and I feel the recent cut in student council budgets is the reason for this step," said Joan Presant, III Anthropology, NFCUS Chairman, in a statement to The Varsity yesterday regarding Queen's withdrawal from NFCUS.

"Speaking as an ordinary member of NFCUS," she continued, "I feel like any other student that it is a shame. Generally Queen's stands for Canadian Student opinion and Queen's now has no voice in this opinion as it is reflected nationally and internationally. NFCUS' work of attempting to improve student welfare and act as a unified voice on diversified campi is a difficult task and needs Queen's help," she said.

She does not feel it is fair that Queen's students should derive some of the benefits of NFCUT without paying the cost. An example of this is the NFCUS mandate to reduce the high cost of royalties on student plays and the like. However, Queen's will miss out of the NFCUS-arranged exchange scholarships and travel schemes, she said.

Statue of Liberty Holds Coke Bottle

London, England (UPress — On November 5th the students of London University nominated Great Britain the forty-ninth state of the union in honour of the celebration of Guy Fawkes Day.

A number of floats were included in the parade of over six thousand students for the occasion. A series of good-natured jibes were depicted in the floats, one of which was a modern version of the State of Liberty showing Liberty holding a bottle of coca-cola on high. She had one foot placed on the Globe and another on the Union Jack.

Guy Fawkes Day is an annual celebration in England, usually constituting an evening parade and ending with fireworks and the burning of the effigy of Guy Fawkes.

Fawkes was the man who attempted to blow up the British Parliament in the Gunpowder Plot, Nov. 5th, 1605, because he did not agree with their policy. Since that date the parliament has been very closely guarded when it is in session and not even the king is allowed admittance without permission from the speaker.

Among the few basic requirements are: a sense of humor, a degree of patience, a good imagination, ingenuity, and some fondness for children, or whatever age group he works with. The time requirement is about three hours a week after school. Experience is not essential, as long as there is a willingness to work with the staff, who try to give personal supervision and consultation to the volunteers.

New Policy Discussed

Fredericton N.B. (CUP) — The third annual meeting of the Maritime Regional Canadian University Press took place recently at St. Francis Xavier University in Antigonish, N.S. Representatives from Mt. Allison, Acadia and U.N.B. met with those from St. Francis Xavier. Among the topics discussed was the policy to be pursued regarding national and international student bodies. It was unanimously decided that the delegates that all student organizations including a number of campi in their scope should be given adequate publicity. At the same time editors were granted the right to criticize or promote these organizations as they might see fit.

Corpse Reviewed

Sometimes it is almost impossible to bury a corpse, but that is because the body isn't as dead as could be hoped. And this is the case with the question of the Russian student exchange. There are many eager gravediggers, yet their success at the present has not been great.

Curiously enough, this is not because anybody really cares about the Russians themselves, or the potential success of an exchange visit. Rather we are more concerned with our own attitude towards it.

Possibly this is why yesterday's report on the stand taken by Toronto's delegation to the NFCUS is so unsatisfactory. While it began quite bravely by stating that the whole effect was spoiled by suggesting that the invitation was refused because:

> "NFCUS would be opposed to certain sections of the Canadian public and by some of the university administrations, notably in the Maritimes and Quebec."

It is rather hard to swallow both statements in one gulp without suffering from indigestion.

The one and only point behind the whole issue (which the official report fails to recognize) is not whether or not a handful of Russians and Canadians are exchanged for an indefinite length of time. Rather, we are concerned with the reasoning which resulted in the NFCUS decision.

The statement quoted above indicates not only a spirit of reaction in the minds of the delegates themselves, but also a fear of public opinion. They were afraid of what people might think and of what might happen to NFCUS as an organization. Yet a cowardly act can hardly make any group stronger.

The report seems to believe, and it is very probably true, that little would be accomplished by such a visit. The Russians, being a picked group, would be hardly likely to respond favorably to the democratic ideas with which they were confronted.

But this is hardly the point. It would be about as difficult to convert Russian students to our viewpoint as to equip Asian universities by our contributions. In the latter case, however, we are willing to make an effort.

Last year's All Varsity Aid from the University of Toronto indicated our interest in the welfare of Asian universities. It hardly exhausted the need nor was it meant to.

Similarly, an exchange visit with Russian students should not be expected to bridge the gap between East and West. It would, however, indicate more forcibly than any conference could possibly do, our willingness to give the Russians every opportunity to co-operate.

And such exchange visit would show that we, at least, were willing to support the democratic convictions which we purportedly have.

The representatives of 45,000 students at the NFCUS conference decided that they would not receive unanimous support from their universities. Yet, already the Universities of British Columbia and McGill have indicated that at least part of the students disagreed with the NFCUS decision.

The whole issue is to be re-opened; an autopsy will be performed on the corpse. Maybe the causes of death will be found insufficient and in this case, the corpse could be brought back to life. But that is up to the universities of Canada to decide — among them, prominently displayed, will be the opinion of the University of Toronto.

OUR READERS WRITE

Peace, Please

Editor, The Varsity:

As the UN Assembly convenes this week people throughout the world will watch and listen for a spark of hope that a peaceful settlement of world conflict may emerge. The UN Charter represents the basis on which genuine peace can and must be built. The foundation stone of the Charter is great power unanimity. Without it peace becomes precarious to say the least. Is there any better way to ensure peace outside the UN Charter and great power unanimity?

Collier's magazine would have us think that peace can be achieved by war. As a recent Varsity editorial pointed out the main emphasis of the article was the Third World War — and the glorious prospects following it. There was little discussion of what we would do with rearmed Germany and Japan after the war or exactly how we were to convince 400,000,000 Chinese that we were their friends. War itself has never really solved anything but wrought havoc and created problems greater than existed before. Man can always look back and see that war could have been prevented.

Professor Underhill took up the question of peace in The Varsity recently. It is a very good thing to have our professors writing in The Varsity especially on such an important subject. He lauds the American theme, "peace through strength," i.e., more rearmament. But can Professor Underhill (as an historian) cite examples of how armament races have prevented wars in the past? He also speaks of America's move to take decisions on security to the veto-less General Assembly at the beginning of the Korean war as "brilliant constitutional manoeuvre." Brilliant manoeuvre for what? Peace? Well hardly! Its result has been the extermination of one-and-a-half million Korean civilians. Genuine peace will depend in the final analysis on great power unanimity protected by the veto as Roosevelt foresaw when he suggested it.

Mr. Harold Miller of the World Federalists spoke on the campus recently propounding his view on how peace is to be secured. But his sum-up reveals the truth about World Federalism: "Even if Russia doesn't join the World Government and she is the big question mark (why should she give up sovereignty to an organization dominated by powers which are antagonistic — writer) it is still better and more secure for all western nations to oppose her united rather than individually." We can see that this course of action has little hope of achieving peace except amongst the western nations, but of course they do need something to keep Iranians, Egyptians and Nigerians in line.

Mr. Cadbury, British Quaker and millionaire chocolate manufacturer, was reported in The Varsity to have expressed the belief that mutual understanding is the way to world peace. No one could say this is not a step in the right direction. Its importance has been forgotten by our NFCUS leaders who rejected the opportunity of inviting Russian students to Canada. To invite South-East Asian students instead of Russian students is to do no more for world peace than the World Federalists.

The NFCUS Conference in London did take [illegible] steps toward peace. They passed a resolution [illegible] favor of peace and approved a meeting of [illegible] student unions with IUS to discuss their problem[illegible] The opportunity for success at this meeting, [illegible] approached in the spirit of compromise and [illegible] ultimatum, is apparently real if we can believe [illegible] Denis Lazure, NFCUS observer to IUS Council [illegible] summer.

It has been suggested that any such agreement [illegible] with IUS would threaten to remove the support [illegible] businessmen to NFCUS overseas delegations. [illegible] a reason for modifying NFCUS policy is of course [illegible] completely unacceptable to all. Perhaps steps [illegible] should be taken to remove the basis of such [illegible] suggestion by financing our delegations from [illegible] dent funds. Surely students are more interested [illegible] than ever in such delegations since they influence [illegible] the path of the world toward peace or war. The [illegible] future of any realization of student aspirations [illegible] depends on peace.

Regardless of how one may feel about the motives [illegible] behind the petition for a Five Power Peace Pact [illegible] (sponsored by the World Peace Council) and the [illegible] writer for one believes them to be sincere, it does [illegible] strike at the core of the problem of peace and [illegible] in a way which Collier's, Professor Underhill, [illegible] World Federalists, and NFCUS in part, have not. [illegible] The realization of the ideals of the UN Charter [illegible] and the accomplishment of great power unanimity [illegible] are its aims.

The Peace Petition does not ask for negotiations [illegible] between the great powers, after they have ruined [illegible] their economies by rearmament, but asks for it now. [illegible] And the first act the Petition calls for is a Five [illegible] of Peace between the Five Great Powers. Some [illegible] have said that this does not go far enough and [illegible] one could argue at greater lengths about disarmament with controls, banning atomic weapons, demilitarizing Germany and Japan, trade and cultural exchanges — all important questions on peace. But the point the writer wants to make is that the attitude. There are two attitudes that a person must constantly keep in mind if he is going to work for peace: 1. the two economic systems can exist side by side, and 2. that peace through negotiations is possible.

We must respond to each new opportunity to break down the barriers of misunderstanding and fear which produce war hysteria and blind us to the real possibilities that exist of solving problems peacefully. For instance, as Mr. Cadbury suggested, we should follow up Russian peace proposals more positively.

The NFCUS executive last year endorsed the idea of a five power peace pact as a means of safeguarding peace. It is not too early to discuss endorsation by the new executive of the Five Power Peace Pact. The Appeal for a Five Power Peace Pact and the attitudes towards peace it represents is the best medium for working positively for a genuine peace.

Donald Anderson,
IV Medicine.

More Spine!

Editor, The Manitoban?

Congratulations! Your editorial on the conventionalism of modern youth was supported on the same page by a superb example. The reasons given by the Toronto delegation to the NFCUS conference, explaining why they rejected an invitation to Russian students to make a brief visit to Canadian campi, displayed aptly the inert disposition of our thinking.

The delegation argued that we could not learn much about Russia by looking at the visitors for a few days like animals in a zoo. This was not the purpose of the visit. It is possible for the Russians to learn a great deal about our culture by living in it for a few weeks.

The delegation feared that the Communists would make political capital of the opposition by some universities. True, this is food for the Russian propaganda machine, but to prevent this we are trying to hide the sordid truth that there are universities, institutions of education, which are so prejudiced that they will not permit Soviet students on their campi. I feel that the NFCUS would lose nothing by the withdrawal of such narrow-minded organizations.

They were afraid of opposition from sections of the Canadian public and university administrations, particularly in the Maritimes and Quebec. If their g[illegible] stated conviction, that [illegible] NFCUS is anxious to extend [illegible] operation with students throu[illegible] out the world, were anything [illegible] bellywash, they would support [illegible] against any opposition and [illegible] tainly not be intimidated [illegible] minorities.

It is of no immediate concern to me whether the Russians [illegible] the visit or not, but the spineless answers to the problem given by the Toronto delegation [illegible] pathetic. It is irksome to [illegible] politically bigoted organizations propagating an attitude [illegible] timidity and stagnation, but [illegible] see this philosophy strangling the independence of the university is appalling.

Yea Vic!

Editor, The Varsity:

I think that Jack Gray should go back and see the Bob Revue again. He has presented a rather narrow viewpoint in my opinion, and has judged the show as a whole by one or two of its acts. I will not dispute the fact that it "doesn't hang together", (although I think quite good unity is maintained by the opening and closing choruses), because I don't believe that is a standard requisite of any variety show . . .

It isn't every year that any college review turns out a new college song, and especially one as catchy and spirited as "Stand and Shout". That was composed by Barb Taylor and Phelps Bell, two Vic students as loyal and enthusiastic as their song, and the cast at least doesn't consider this little ditty run-of-the-mill, not by a long shot.

I'm all in favor of honest and fair criticism but I think that the the critic in this case has erred in overlooking at least two very original facets in a terrific college show.

Judy Hutchison,
I Vic.

Building Of Union Questioned Again

The scheduled debate yesterday, "Resolved that the University of Toronto needs a Student Union as soon as possible," turned into a forum as 75 students turned out to hear this important issue discussed.

Cliff Wilson, V Arch, speaking for the resolution thought that it would help us "to live harmoniously with our neighbours" and followed it up by stating the ways in which it could be used. The union could house the Carnegie record collection, The Varsity offices, a coed lounge, SAC offices and many other activities that are at present spread over the campus "It cannot come too soon for me" stated Wilson.

On the other hand Al Strauss, IV UC, felt strongly that there were many other things that took precedence, such as a new Skule building, a new Skule residence, a new UC men's residence and a library addition. "Students are indignant and irate at the foistering of this project upon them at a time that is not right." Strauss added. "The Varsity is the only organ that is agitating for a Student Union Building."

The cost of such a project also came up for criticism from Strauss. A forty-thousand dollar expenditure to be used to coordinate the SAC projects and committees might be in order and not the three-hundred thousand which is the proposed cost of a Student Union Building.

The Student Union building has been up for consideration since before the turn of the century, was the answer of Lois DeGroot, IV SPS, to Strauss' statement. The idea of a Student Union and its uses has been long considered at the University. Uses such as rehearsal halls, meeting places, and a place to coordinate the coeducational activities in the evening, were a few of the suggested uses that Mrs. DeGroot mentioned. "A poll taken five years ago resulted in 75% of the students wanting a coeducational Student Union building" she went on to add. Girls not in the Arts courses had no place of their own to relax in.

Dave Rose, IV UC, speaking against the resolution, felt that the "rising costs" and "decreasing enrollment" would make it foolhardy to attempt such a project now. Rose went on to mention the other fees that a student has to pay such as college fees, Hart House fees for men, SAC fees, and athletic fees, would make it prohibitive to add a $12 fee for the maintenance of a Student Union building. "There would be difficulty in providing the initial cost and the maintenance costs" went on Rose. He thought it better to maintain the high standards because "the University of Toonto will be judged on its academic value" and because the money would be better spent toward that aim.

In the question period that followed it was brought out that the Student Union committee of the SAC had cut the original plans to the bone but that no cost estimate had been arrived at. The proposed building, which would be an additional wing to Hart House, would contain offices for the SAC and all its varied activities plus other rooms and lounges which would be coeducational.

New Tarpaulin Will Be Used At Last Game

Varsity has a tarpaulin too! Just like the professional contemporaries with their mysterious Grey Cup tarpaulin to cover the field before the game, so Varsity has a mysterious tarpaulin also for the Yates Cup games. The only difference is that our tarp will be on view for all to see tomorrow at the McGill game. This was made known yesterday by the Blue and White Society, who are official keepers of the tarp.

In addition, the Society has appointed a special crew of "Groundskeepers" to make sure the field is in the right shape for the game. The crew have been supplied with all the equipment necessary to complete the job, and with the new tarpaulin, it is felt that the field conditions will be all that can be expected.

If . . .

. . . we had a Student Union Building the cat who lives in University College basement might have a permanent home.

Narrow Campus Attitude Deplored By Syd Wax

Opposition on many university campi to Canadian student participation in international affairs was deplored yesterday by Syd Wax at the open meeting of the SAC External Affairs Committee.

"Although most Toronto students do not realize it" Wax said, "The majority of Canadian universities do not have the dynamic interest in world student affairs to be found on this campus." Wax is chairman of the International Activities Commission of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS).

This "isolationism" was very evident at the NFCUS Ontario Regional conference held over the weekend at McMaster, he said. He also pointed out Acadia University's refusal to give money towards expenses of a Canadian delegation to the conference between NFCUS and the International Union of Students this December. However, Acadia will continue to contribute to a delegation to the Edinburgh conference, to be held the same month between a group of western national student unions who have found it impossible to work with the Communist-dominated IUS.

Wax then described a program of Canadian international action which Jack Gray, UC, described as "the most constructive and ambitious in NFCUS history."

Canada has taken the world initiative in asking 25 student unions to try to co-operate with IUS, Wax said. A meeting is to be held next month at which NFCUS and IUS will try to find some common ground on which they can work together. In its circular letter the Canadian body has urged the other national unions to try to find a compromise.

He also described the stand NFCUS is taking in a plan for a Pan-American Student Union proposed by the Brazilian union. Canada's participation has attracted the attention of both the United States and Brazilian student bodies, Wax said.

"This is the first time NFCUS has ever gone out and done anything actively in the international field", declared Jack Gray. "In the next 12 months, it may make up for the lack of action of the past five years," he added.

Wax also traced the history of the conflict between the Communist-dominated IUS and NFCUS, which came to a climax during the summer of 1950. At that time the Canadian observers to the IUS conference in Prague recommended that NFCUS have nothing further to do with the international body. This summer Deniz Lazure, one of the observers at the 1950 conference, returned from the Warsaw conference of the IUS with a belief that compromise between the two bodies was possible. For this reason the western unions—IUS meeting will be held.

Gray, however, warned that NFCUS would not likely find common ground on which to co-operate with IUS.

The national role of NFCUS, as opposed to its international activities, was vigorously defended by the local NFCUS chairman, Joan Presant, III UC. NFCUS actively works for the benefit of the individual Canadian student, she said, in addition to representing him in world affairs. She described the booklet of scholarships and tuition fees which Toronto is preparing for all the Ontario universities.

SYD WAX

Wax gave his report on the international affairs of NFCUS in a one-hour speech that slightly dampened the enthusiasm of the 100-odd persons who came out to the open meeting, most of them to discuss Soviet student visits which were expected to take most of the time of the meeting.

CBC To Disc West Indies' Merry Xmas

West Indian students who would like to send Christmas messages home by radio should get in touch with Canadian Broadcasting Corporation officials as soon as possible.

The CBC announced yesterday that it is shipping records of holiday messages made in Toronto to the islands of Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados, and to British Guiana. If any students from Bermuda, the Bahamas, the Leeward or Windward Islands are interested in recording messages, the CBC will try to take care of them, too.

The programs have to be recorded on Nov. 16 or 17. Interested West Indian students should contact Miss Ruth Viner, Assistant to the CBC International Service Representative, at the CBC—MI. 5481, local 380.

"UN in Korea" Lecture Topic Of P. Berton

A group of former residents of International House throughout the world will meet together in Toronto Wednesday to celebrate International House Day.

There are about 50 persons enrolled in the Toronto alumni group, which will present a lecture on "The United Nations in Korea" that day. The lecture will be given by Pierre Berton, the Assistant Editor of MacLean's Magazine, recently returned from Korea. It will be given at 8 p.m. in the Women's Union Theatre, on November 14.

International Houses are situated in connection with universities in New York, Chicago, Berkley, and Paris. They are large residences at which only foreign students live. The one in New York, for instance, holds about 500 students of almost every nationality.

The Toronto Alumni group was granted a charter only last year, and is now investigating the possibility of a House in Toronto. Such a building is needed badly, says Al Shea, one of the group members. However, he adds, the group has neither the money nor the plans for a Toronto International House at present.

The Houses in the United States and in Paris have been built with Rockefeller Foundation money. In other centres, the money has come from local benefactors. Such is the case with the House in Copenhagen, although some Rockefeller money has been used for an extra wing.

The Toronto group hopes to find a Canadian donor who will contribute the majority of the money for a Toronto International House. If the money is raised, the building here will be the first permanent one of its kind in Canada. There is a small House in Vancouver, Shea says, but it is not up to the scale of other International Houses around the world.

Above is the drum majorette of the Blue and White band and star of The Hawaiian War Chant, Helen Mackie from Victoria College. She'll be there leading the band again tomorrow, despite the cold and probable slush, up and down the field before and after the game and through the special show at half time. Following the traditions of her well-known predecessors Helen stole the show away from home, too, and ended up as the Queen at the Western University Mardi Gras in London last weekend. Here at the last game of the season she can be counted on to show the opposition how to lead a band.

Gray Withdraws Motion Faculties Must Decide

After some discussion, his proposal that yesterday's informal open meeting of the SAC External Affairs committee go on record as approving the principle of exchange visits between Canadian and Russian students was withdrawn by Jack Gray, U.C. It was decided to let the decision of the students of the University of Toronto come solely from individual faculty mandates.

Peter Alley, IV Trin, vice-chairman of the External Affairs Committee presented a list of possible stands that could be taken on the question of inviting Russian students to Canada. He asked that the colleges and faculties instruct their EAC representatives to take a stand on them by either affirming one (the first) absolutely, or making a preferential selection.

The possibilities suggested are as follows:

—that NFCUS not concern itself with Russian students coming to Canada under any circumstances.

—that Toronto press the National Executive of NFCUS to work for consent from the constitutionally requisite number of local committees to effect an exchange of student tours with the Russians for this year.

—that Toronto press at the next annual conference of NFCUS that an exchange of student tours with the Russians be effected for the academic year of 1952-53.

—that Toronto press that NFCUS arrange an exchange of Russ... and Canadian students for the pur... suit of their studies for an acade... ic year.

—that Toronto request that NFCU... lend the support of its availa... facilities to any organization wh... will effect any of the above (exc... the first), but that it not carry t... burden of any such tasks.

—that Toronto press that NFCU... ask some organization, (presumab... Canadian International Stude... Service (ISS)), to carry out any ... all of the above proposals.

—that Toronto, as a local comm... tee of ISS press Canadian ISS ... rectly to arrange an exchange t... or exchange year of study. (Th... to avoid plaguing NFCUS with t... problem)

—that Toronto itself undertake ... arrange an exchange of tours or ... study years. (This to take the pr... lem out of the hands of any ... tional organization.)

Bud Brennon, III St. Mike's, c... clared that the first of the abo... listed possibilities should be follo... ed by Toronto students. George Morrison, IV Meds, ... of the Toronto delegates to t... "Breakneck" Needs Signal Morgantown, W. Va. (Exchange) —The students of West Virginia University have a traffic problem too. The Daily Athenaeum — the undergraduate newspaper reports. The city council has been begged by the faculty and many students to erect traffic signals at a bridge known as "Breakneck Pass." But the council pays no heed. Some "narrow-minded" towns people have voiced the opinion that university students should have enough mental resourcefullness to cross a street without being run down.

Detonated Gloria In Critical State

Acting swiftly on information laid by Art S. Mann, the All-Varsity prosecutor's office charged N. Geneer with attempted murder arising out of the wounding of Gloria May Swansong when a detonator exploded under the Law School float on the Homecoming Week-end.

Claiming this vicious and irresponsible behaviour must be stopped at all costs, the prosecutor said he would "throw the book at Geneer and his accomplices." We must stop this sort of thing before all is kaput, he said. The first hint that more people implicated came in the charge.

Besides attempted murder, Geneer faces counts of wilfully and maliciously damaging the Law School float and conspiring to upset the dignity and defame the name of the University by engaging in "hell-raising" acts. It was this conspiracy charge which raised speculation as to whether recent events on the campus have not all been the work of a cleverly-organized gang.

Spotting the accused on the front steps of the KCR two eagle-eyed officers took him into custody yesterday afternoon only four hours after the warrant was issued. Protesting his arrest, Geneer stated he was only going home after a late afternoon "lab" and didn't know any guys named Rex. With little ceremony he was taken to the Hart House towers and confined in the fifth sub-basement which is reserved for low characters.

Friends of the accused swore he was innocent. "We'll spring him," one declared. Others turned back inside, ostensibly to drown their sorrows.

Meanwhile, a friend in attempting to see Gloria Swansong was refused admission to her room by the head-nurse. "Her condition is very critical," she whispered. "She is suffering from multiple confusions and confounded concession." Her doctor reported that they were trying to rally her for an operation to relieve the pressure.

Conversation with her private nurse disclosed that Miss Swansong was delirious and kept mumbling about the past when she was a famous All-Varsity girl and a BWOC.

Above is Physot Bev Secord, in her second year of leading the cheers for the Big Blues in Varsity Stadium and on the road. She's one of the cheerleaders who formed almost the sole support the Blues had in Montreal for the "Mud Bowl" game last year, and this year may be expected to do a repeat performance on home ground. In the picture, taken in fairer weather, she's practising for the "Toronto Locomotive" yell, one of the most popular this season. Although the movements look fairly simple and attempts are occasionally made by students well protected from the cold to lend assistance, the timing requires long drills and hard work.

McGill Comes To See Blues By Hundreds

Montreal (CUP)—McGill seems to be coming down in force for the big game tomorow. At Wednesday noon, 600 tickets had already been sold at McGill for the game, and 200 extra were being flown from Toronto to meet the demand.

Two days ago 300 railway tickets had been sold for the special McGill train, which arrives at Union Station at 9:45 p.m. today. The Blue and White Society is planning a special welcome as the trai. pulls in, and is asking Toronto students to come down to the station this evening to greet the Redmen supporters.

At Wednesday noon McGill had bought 100 tickets to the football dance at Hart House, which will feature five orchestras, the Rochester University Glee Club, and the Toronto Women's Interfaculty Swim Meet.

2400 Students Take Medical

To date about twenty-four hundred University students have taken advantage of the university Health Service's free medical examination. Last year a grand total of thirty-nine hundred examinations were given. This examination is compulsory for all new university students, those participating in any sports, students from foreign countries and anyone whose previous rating was below B.

All those who are in the compulsory category should have their check-up before Nov. 15. An appointment can be made at the Health Centre, 42 St. George St., or by telephone MI. 9644 for men and MI. 2646 for women.

Another health service available to University students is the free Chest X-ray in the Drill Hall behind 119 St. George St. Appointments have been arranged from Nov. 5 to Nov. 16. If you don't have an appointment go to the Drill Hall Friday, Nov. 9 any time from 9 to 5.

MYSTERY ENTRANCE

Retreat

By J. A. LOUGHEED

Down the main corridor of Hart House towards the Great Hall, an old door is set unobtrusively in the wall between the SCM offices and the coat racks. It is covered with red leather held in by metal studs. Immediately behind the outer door, but almost touching it, is another door. This one is of panelled wood.

The student who encounters this phenomenon for the first time is puzzled. Has he floundered upon the secret passageway through which furtive visitors are ushered into Hart House? It this a mediaeval dungeon complete with thumbscrew for disposing of unwary students who fail to conform with the rigid standards of dress demanded in the house? Or is it the strong place where the gold reserves of Hart House Tuck Shop are kept?

Entering, he discovers the reason for the twin doors. For once inside he feels a hush — a spiritual stillness — the most noticeable feature of the room. The sounds of Hart House corridors are kept out, for this is the Chapel.

At the student walks over the thick rug his gaze strays up a little chancel to a lectern and a table upon which rests an exquisite crucifix.

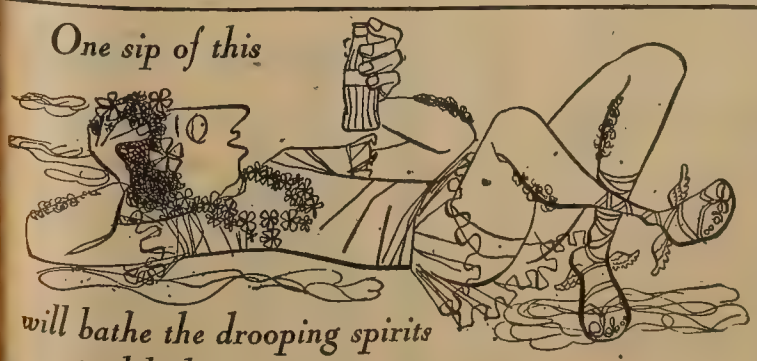
He sits down on a wicker-bottomed chair and looks about him. The walls are not covered with mottos or texts, rather there are daring murals. The central panel bears some resemblance to the man on the flying trapeze. It is a sturdy twentieth century athlete flying through the air, arms extended and chest expanded. And there is a nativity scene without camels and wise men; their place is taken by representatives of a twentieth century Canadian people; a modern mother with her child upon her knee, a few timid deer, the Ontario trillium and a student presenting his books in place of frankincense.

The mural is a portrayal of "the new heaven and the new earth" and is singularly effective. According to the terse notation in the Chapel information sheet the mural decorations are the latest additions which were executed by Mr. Will Ogilvie of Toronto in 1936. They convey a mystic conception of the Ascent of man.

The windows, looking over the quadrangle, are made of variegated coloured pieces of glass fitted into odd patterns. Brig.-Gen. C. H. Mitchell, former dean of the faculty of Applied Science and Engineering, brought these back from Europe where they had been found among the ruins of continental churches during the First World War.

A bit of glass from St. Mary Church in Armentiers rests in the window of this chapel, so that this room of prayers seems to partake of the peace of that place — the quietness, the serenity that succeeds battles' turmoil.

TV Authority Will Discuss Flicker Cure



The cause and cure of the interference often seen on television receivers will be discussd by one of America's leading authorities on TV interference next week. The lecture will be of particular interest to radio amateurs on the campus, as well as future electronic engineers.

Speaker will be Philip S. Rand, founder of the Laboratory for Advanced Research for Remington-Rand, Inc., who will deal with the various types of electrical, industrial and electronic equipment which causes television interference.

As an electronics engineer, Rand did work on guided missiles, and operated his own experimental TV transmitter as early as 1934. He has written many articles for technical journals on the result of his experiments in TV interference.

Rand will speak under the auspices of Canada's oldest radio club, the Wireless Association of Ontario. The meeting, open to the public, will be held in the McLennan Laboratory, Room 135 of the Physics Building at 8:15 p.m., November 15.

THE LAW AND US

Trouble Shooters

Little thought is given by students to the constant policing of the grounds and buildings on the campus by the six men who form the University of Toronto police force. Rain or shine they patrol the grounds seven days a week on every day of the year.

This force has probably been in existence as long as the University itself so some policemen who have been on the force for 15 or 20 years have become well-known figures on the campus. Each new policeman before beginning duties is personally trained by Chief D'Arcy, who has been on the force nearly 32 years.

During the academic session, there are usually two policemen assigned to traffic control while the others patrol the grounds. The men rotate on these duties so as to relieve the monotony.

Reinforcements from the city police are occasionally called in if necessary and both forces cooperate to the utmost extent. The robbery at the University Bookstore several weeks ago was one such incident turned over to city police and detectives. It is still under investigation.

As all of the campus buildings are protected 24 hours a day, 19 night watchmen augment the police force. There are five policemen on duty in the daytime and at least one until midnight.

The University of Toronto police feel that the students are very well-behaved and that the occasional disturbances are generally caused by outsiders.

They added that the students are mature young men and women by the time they reach college. For this season the force likes to help students rather than to discipline them.

When the SAC advertised Post Office Christmas jobs they expected a good number of applications. The rush is even more surprising considering the few free days the students have between the official end of lectures and Christmas Day.

The sophomores, juniors and seniors of the male sex at the University of Manitoba are not, nor probably would they want to be, candidates for the title of "Canada's Best Dressed Man." Occasionally their suits need pressing, their ties are garish, their shoes are dirty. Frequently they forget to shave. But a new order of man has entered this university and men of the seniors years are, by comparison, "men of distinction". The class of '55 has descended upon us in all its high school disorder. Seniors, scan well your brothers who have elevated you, in fashion circles, to the pinnacle.

The most essential article of dress in the male freshman's closet is his trousers. This is probably very natural and as it should be—but such trousers! They contain enough cloth for two pairs of the ordinary type—most of the bolt settling about the knee. It seems that, last year, a tailor was having some difficulty fitting one of his patrons. The lad was desperately in need of the pants for the local high school hop, and said tailor, in desperation, made them fit by pleating the side seams three or four times. Apparently these very trousers were the highlight of the evening, and all the Winnipeg youths, not to be outdone, immediately adopted the fashion. In a matter of months, one's place on the social scale came to be determined by the number of pleats in the pants.

Came the day for Johnny to choose his college clothes. Sweaters, he was told, are the essentials in the undergraduates' wardrobe. Johnny did not inquire further to discover that sweaters are usually worn by members of his sex over shirts. Fashion dictated sweaters and a sweater he purchased. We must admire his fortitude, however, for we are of the opinion that only a rhinoceros could wear a sweater next to his skin without rendering an excellent imitation of a flea circus trainer whose stock in trade has escaped.

Proceeding upward, we reach the head of this new face. Hair is in profusion. It nestles coyly around the sweater neck. Tired of his mother's frequent request that he have a haircut, one enterprising chap managed to cling to the present style by leaving his hair long at the sides. To assuage his family however he visited the barber and had his hair shaved immediately above the forehead and backward to the crown of his head. The young man was apparently something of a wheel among his high school compatriots and they all rushed to the corner barber to follow his lead in hair styles, calling it the "boogy-cut."

Thank you, Class of '55. No more will we have difficulty distinguishing freshman from senior. No more will we fail to appreciate your Esquire-attired upper-classmen. We predict that Color Night of 1955 will find the executive of USMU debating on the advisability of wearing tuxedos, the question will be, "Do I have to wear a shirt?"

Miniature UN Council Organized

A model United Nations Security Council has been set up on the Toronto campus.

The council is built on students representing the five permanent memberships (Great Britain, Russia, China, U.S.A. and France) together with Canada, India, Israel, Yugoslavia, Norway and the Arab bloc. The non-permanent memberships were determined after a poll was conducted among members of the campus UN Club, sponsor of the model council. Members were also polled on the country they would most like to study. India, Russia, the United States and Great Britain in that order proved most popular.

Yesterday's meeting started off with a social hour at Wymilwood. After routine business the memberships of the separate national groups were made known. The groups then adjourned to University College.

After discussing their plans for the coming council debate, appointing their delegates and alternates they adjourned to Thursday, November 22. December 7 was set as the date on which the council will meet to resolve the problem of admitting Red China to the United Nations Organization.

Advisory Bureau Helpful For Undergrad Problems

There is an organization on the campus where students can air their troubles to their heart's content. Valuable assistance on all types of individual problems connected with university life can be obtained from a trained advisor in the neutral zone of the University Advisory Bureau.

When the Advisory Bureau was first set up in 1945 in connection with the Department of Veterans' Affairs, the Bureau was chiefly concerned with administrative problems of ex-service students. Such questions as "how do I get my teeth fixed on DVA?" and "how do I get my DVA cheque?" were very common at the time.

As time went on, advisors at the Bureau found that students were coming in on more individual problems which had deeper significance than just the administrative troubles. Many wondered if they had chosen the right course. Why were they at college was a common question as more and more non-veteran students come to consult advisors at the Bureau.

DVA problems are still received by the Advisory Bureau, although there are only approximately one thousand students on the campus who are still receiving veterans' allowances. The Bureau is the secretariat for the Veteran's Loan Fund, and works closely with various benevolent funds in addition to the university faculties.

Often students are referred to the Bureau by the registrar's office, the University Health service and by individual staff members. Social, emotional and mental difficulties are referred through the University Health Service for psychiatric consultation when advised. Naturally matters discussed with the advisors are kept in the strictest confidence and the fact that the Bureau has no disciplinary authority helps it to operate in a neutral zone.

The seeking of advice is completely voluntary, so there is no compulsion for anyone to make use of the Bureau's services. Perhaps it is because this point is stressed, that a great many students do call on the Advisory Bureau for help.

From deep down in the cellars of University College, a passing student can often hear the clanging of metal on metal, and the sounds of men at work. If he investigates, he will find the University smithy, where all the metal work for university buildings is done. Above, Bill Hall is seen working on a piece of copperwork.

Glen Directs Deep Drama For Victoria

The Vic Dramatic Society will resent J. B. Priestly's "An Inspector Calls" in Hart House Theatre on Jan. 10, 11, 12, David Peddie, IV Vic, Associate President of the society, announced recently. The play will be directed by Don Glen, once quite active in campus dramatics, whose work culminated in "The Guardsman" two years ago. Since then he has acted in Europe and the States, last summer opposite Claudette Colbert. The play is a suspense drama, delving deep into character study, and has an O'Henry twist ending. Casting will begin soon.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

The last film we saw concerned with hospitals was Joseph Mankiewicz' PEOPLE WILL TALK. It was a witty piece filled with bright talk and comment about the medical profession and some of the taboos and attitudes of our society.

Another film concerned with hospitals is WHITE CORRIDORS, a British product which opens at the Odeon-Toronto today. Quite different in its approach, this new film presents a kaleidoscopic view of a hospital's internal processes. Don't let this scare you away; the internal processes are not mechanical but human.

Most of the action takes place in one day at Yeoman's Hospital, somewhere in the English countryside. The story makes me think of Lloyd C. Douglas' preoccupation with hospital habitants, but perhaps Elizabeth Seifert has a hand in too. (Someone named Helen Ashton wrote the original novel, though.) At any rate, there is the devoted young researcher (James Ronald), his ambitious surgeon-fiancée (Googie Withers), the scared young probie (Petula Clark), the distinguished surgeon (Godfrey Tearle) his weak doctor-son (Jack Watling), the senior nurse (Moira Lister) who loves the weakling, and so on.

Tried-and-true stuff it all is, and yet the whole thing jells into a neat package. WHITE CORRIDORS does not shake the world but it is not starched and antiseptic either.

Credit for the satisfaction would go to director Pat Jackson's tight direction and to James Ronald and Googie Withers who make their obvious parts seem quite important. Ronald will be remembered as the corporal in THE WAY AHEAD, and Miss Withers, with the expressive face, has been around quite a while.

Basil Radford is injected as a "guest star" but his material does not meet his peculiar talents. Jack Watling, of course, was the young tennis star in QUARTET who came off well with the blonde temptress. And young Brand Inglis is another un-precious British child star. Barry Jones of SEVEN DAYS TO NOON is seen in a small bit.

I especially liked the tasty handling of probie Petula Clark's facing the Man Without a Face. Director Jackson never lets us see the scarred man when the bandages are removed. A neat touch.

I do not know what the medical or nursing professions would say about the technical aspects of this film, although the impression is given that great care was put into authenticity. But as a layman, you may go away thinking that the next time you ring the bell and the night-nurse doesn't turn up, it might be because under the starched bosom of her uniform, warm emotions are stirring. That will be a way to curb your impatience anyway.

Big Blues Still Undefeated All Set To Trample McGill

With only the McGill Redmen standing between them and the Intercollegiate football championship, Coach Bob Masterson's Varsity Blues will take to the field tomorrow afternoon in an attempt to finish off the 1951 season without losing a game.

However, with the Redmen sporting an impressive four game winning streak, it would appear that the Blues have no menial task on their hands. Without a single important injury marring their lineup, Obeck's charges are determined to make up for the manner in which they let the Yates Cup slip through their grasp last fall.

The weather forecast for today is clear and warmer, and nothing other than some drying weather is going to return the field in the Stadium to anything like proper playing conditions. The Redmen have developed a diversified attack to strengthen the aerial power that they showed when the Blues defeated them in Montreal earlier in the season, and a good playing service would enable them to use everything in their bag of tricks.

With one of the strongest lines in Intercollegiate ball, based on such powerful blockers as Pullar and Mitchener, McGill has soundly trounced the Mustangs twice this fall, the same team that held the Blues to a 13-13 tie in London last weekend. Geoff Crain and Gene Robillard are the chief threats in the McGill backfield, along with Findlay who is the leading scorer for the Redmen this fall.

The Blues suffered a slight stroke of bad luck yesterday morning when quarterback Alex Lawson fell on the icy pavement and gave himself quite a cut on the right elbow. Although it was not felt advisable to take any stitches in the cut due to its position on the point of Lawson's elbow, officials felt that Lawson would be able to play and would not be hindered to any great extent by the wrapped up elbow.

Jim Butler at guard and centre Ray Yakasovitch are the only regulars who will probably have to miss the game with the Redmen tomorrow. Butler's broken hand is still in a cast, while Yakasovitch's ankle is still giving him a bit of trouble and may cause him to miss this game as well as the last two.

Steve Oneschuk, who spent the last half of the game in London nursing a couple of sore ribs, seems to be back in top condition again. Bill Bewley's shoulder has been giving him a bit of trouble the past couple of weeks, and a fall in the wrong direction tomorrow could cause him to head for the sidelines.

The Blues have got a game on their hands if they hope to prevent the Redmen from forcing the league into a playoff, and they realize it. A win for McGill tomorrow would put them at the top of the league by one point and the spot for a playoff would be their choice. They would probably choose home territory figuring that a home game is an easier one to win.

Whenever a football game is played on a slippery field, the breaks are usually the most important deciding factor, and unless conditions in Varsity Stadium change a great deal by tomorrow afternoon, it is the breaks that are going to decide what may well be the most thrilling game in the Intercollegiate loop this fall.

Intercoll Loop Rejecting R11

Ryerson Institute placed applications for entry of a basketball team and a hockey team to the Intercollegiate Intermediate League this week, but both were rejected. The basketball team was rejected because it was not considered likely to be up to the calibre of the league. The hockey team, lacking an indoor ice surface, failed to gain entry because it was not felt they could cover visiting teams' expenses.

Aggies Register 13-0 Upset Over Champion Baby Blues

By FRANCIS QUINLAN

The Intermediate Blues' dreams of an undefeated season were rudely shattered yesterday on a snow-covered back campus as they absorbed a 13-0 whitewashing at the hands of the OAC Redmen. The Aggies' superior kicking and a couple of breaks made up the difference between the teams as Varsity's vaunted pass attack was stalled up the heavy ball and a good pass defence.

The field was covered with some four or five inches of snow, but it had been removed from the yard-markers and the sidelines. Red powder was laid down on the lines to make them stand out.

The result of the game meant nothing so far as the league standings went, since the Blues clinched the top spot last week. However the Aggies gained a measure of revenge for the 19-7 shellacking they received from the Intermeds a few weeks ago as they racked up a very convincing victory yesterday. McLennan was running for substantial yardage all day while Calverley's booting left little to be desired. Fitzhenry, and Geekie didn't start to connect with their passes until the second half and even then they didn't complete enough to throw a scare into the Aggies.

OAC took the lead in the first quarter on two singles by Calverley as a hard-charging Aggie line kept the Blues bottled up in their end of the field. The Intermediates threatened once in the second quarter when they penetrated to the OAC 15. After the Aggies had driven for two consecutive first downs into Varsity territory, Ron Fleming picked up a Red fumble and raced to the OAC 40. Don Harrison carried twice to put the Baby Blues on the 15 but the Farmers held and kicked out of danger. After an exchange of kicks Strapp of OAC grabbed a loose ball in the Blue backfield and raced 40 yards to the Blue goal line to make the score 7-0. The try for the point was no good. Late in the quarter two Fitzhenry passes brought Varsity to OAC's 10, but Ford's attempted field goal was blocked.

Calverley booted another single in the third quarter to increase the Redmen's margin. Varsity started to roll at last as a Geekie to Milne pass put them on their own 45. Danny Nelson snagged one on OAC's 45, and Milne was on the receiving end of a Fitzhenry heave and got to the 23 before he was downed. OAC split the game wide open on the next play as J. Smith intercepted a wobbly Blue pass and galloped 90 yards into the Varsity end zone to put his team out ahead 13-0. The convert was not good.

The Baby Blue literally filled the air with passes in the last quarter and came close to a major but the Aggies weren't letting up. A Redmen bobble on their 40 gave the Blues a chance late in the game. Ford plunged for 10, Palermo for 5, and Ford again for 15 to give the Intermeds a first down on the 10. After a pass just eluded the fingertips of a Blue receiver in the end zone, the Aggies recovered a fumble to end the threat. The game ended a few minutes later with the Redmen on top 13-0.

The aforementioned McLennan was the best man on the field for the winners while Reeves and Smith turned in good performances. Fleet Don Fawcett couldn't get untracked in the heavy going and the bulk of the Blue running was done by Ford and Harrison. Bill Burley kicked well for the Intermeds but still was outdistanced by Calverley of the Redmen. George, Dougan, Don Smith, and Ellis played well on the line, while the entire Aggie line was outstanding.

This was the last scheduled game for the Intermediates this season, but there is a chance that they will play the Queens' Comets for the Intermediate Intercollegiate championship of the East.

This bit of action was taken on the back campus yesterday afternoon as the OAC Aggies whitewashed the Varsity Intermediate Blues 13-0. The game meant nothing as far as league standings are concerned as the Baby Blues earned the title last weekend by downing the Western Colts, but it served as sweet revenge for the Aggies who lost 19-7 to the Intermediates earlier in the season.

McGill Field Not Suitable For Harrier

The Intercollegiate Harrier meet, originally scheduled for this Saturday at McGill, has been postponed due to impossible course conditions. It will probably be held the following week, in the same place.

The McGill Athletic Association sent word yesterday that the five mile cross-country course was "not runnable", and would probably be dangerous as well as very uncomfortable for the runners. The Toronto Athletic Office concurred in the postponement without hesitation.

The team was thoroughly skunked by the Alfred College team last Saturday on Alfred's course, as the Blue runners skidded over the 4.2 miles of ice and hard snow and watched the host team, equipped with short spikes, place men in all the first five positions. Herb Tilson was sixth and Chuck Wortman seventh. Having benefitted from sad experience, the Toronto men were ready to don their indoor spikes for the Intercollegiate meet if the present weather persisted.

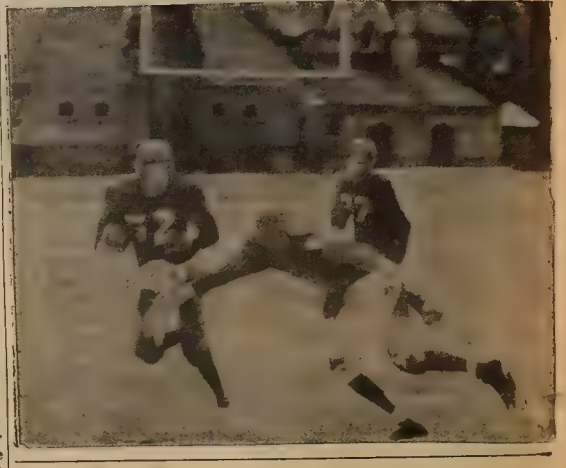
Interfaculty action was limited again yesterday by the unplayable conditions of the back and front campi. The west field on the back campus was used by the Intermediates and was in fair shape for that tilt. With warm weather coming tomorrow, both fields should be back in shape for the resumption of Intramural gridiron action Monday.

The games that went on as scheduled yesterday included lacrosse and volleyball. In boxla, Trinity A handed UC their first defeat of the season, as the Buttery boys came through with a close 6-5 win. The Red and Black took a 4-2 lead in the first quarter and held off a determined UC crew for the remainder of the contest.



Briant and Brown led the winners with two tallies apiece with Williams and MacMillan adding singletons. Watson potted two for the losing Redmen while Kopsky, Giles and Longhouse scored once each.

In the other lacrosse game, Knox kept up their winning ways, as they walloped the Pharmacy B entry 9-3. The Druggists took a 2-1 lead in the first quarter but were unable to hold it, as the winners made it 4-2 by the half. McPherson was the big gun in the Theologs' win scoring five of his team's eight goals. McWhinnie added two and Self got the other. For the losers, Brown, Gillan and Brooks tallied one each.

On the volleyball floor, Dents A beat St. Mike's A two straight, 15-11 and 15-9. The Dent B team started out right, taking Forestry 15-12 in the first, but the Woodsmen came back to take the next two, 15-4 and 15-5.

Meds III year had little trouble as they trounced the Sr. Vic entry 15-4 and 15-2. UC took two straight from St. Mike's D 15-11 and 15-8, while the Vic III's beat Wycliffe B 15-13 and 15-9.

Snowmen

Blues vs. Redmen For Soccer Title

Tomorrow the Varsity Senior Soccer Blues will be gunning for their eleventh straight intercollegiate championship when they meet the McGill Redmen on the Front Campus at 11:30.

Th weather man has done the Blues in the eye two years in a row now on the second meeting of the two teams. Last year the Blues travelled to Montreal only to be met with a field covered with four inches of ice water, and this year the Redmen will be faced with a similar situation.

The Blues will have to play at the top of their form to win this game, as the Redmen have come up with a strong team this year. In the first game against McGill this year, the Blues emerged on the short end of a 5-2 score. But they were handicapped by playing three games in four days prior to the McGill game.

Tomorrow the Redmen will be at a similar disadvantage, having to play the R.M.C. Cadets today. If the playing conditions at Kingston are anything like they are here, the Redmen will have a tough time slugging it out in the slush with the well-conditioned cadets, and should be slowed down a little by Saturday. However the McGill players are fast, skilfull, and always dangerous. The forward line is particularly good, and will take some stopping no matter what the conditions.

The Blues have suffered only one loss this season, and that to McGill. If the Redmen win at R.M.C. today, the Blues will have to beat McGill to tie for first place in the Eastern Division of the Intercollegiate league. The champion will be the team with the best scoring record.

The Blues are all alone on top of the Western Division not having lost a game, and a convincing win tomorrow is all that stands between them and the championship.

The Intermediates are following in the footsteps of the senior team, not having lost a game yet. The Little Blues have two games to play yet against McMaster. One was scheduled for today, but has been cancelled due to the weather. The game will be re-scheduled sometime next week.

Most college show producers are content to make their sets out of the traditional wood, paper and composition board. But down at the Skulehouse things are different; their machine must be made at least partially of metal to stand the strain put on it. Hence we see the eager stagehand with full welding equipment putting the properties together. The work may be a bit warm, but we'll bet he's one of the few photographic subjects who wasn't bothered by the magnesium flash of the photographer's camera. What the flash of a welding torch in use can do to a lecture is almost as obvious, too.

The Sportswoman

In the first of three basketball games at OCE last night, Phys. Ed. I's, last year's inter-faculty champs, continued their winning ways with a 40-8 victory over UC Sophs. The game was a lot closer than the score indicates, but 22 fouls called against UC didn't help their chances. The Phys-Edders were smooth all the way, but they were not to be outdone by the UC guard line which was a power house. Alma Hatch led the winners with 15 points, and Sally Wallace followed with 13. PHE, who have won their previous games by scores ranging from 53-6 to 71-15, look like the team to beat.

In the second game, St. Hilda's Jr. defeated Phys-Ot's 37-13. It was a good clean game in which St. Hilda's definitely had the edge. High scorer for the winners was Ruth Anderson with 16 points while Carolyn Dobson had 13.

In a real thriller, St. Mike's I outshot Phys. Ed. Freshies to win 31-27. PHE led all the way in the first half which ended 16-14, but in the second, Kay Schenck hooped some beauties and backed by some terrific guarding, St. Mike's led 27-21 at three-quarter time. Both teams kept up a terrific pace. All the way and came up with some beautiful plays. Shirley Roberts (PHE) led all scorers with 16, while Jane Timmins and Kay Schenck led St. Mike's with 13 and 12 respectively. On the whole, this was one of the best inter-faculty league games in a long time and featured some excellent basketball.

Us Cats

BY THE CHAMPUS CAT

I don't know quite how it came about, but all of a sudden I find myself identified as "the most useful, loyal and self-effacing of God's lesser creatures". Me — an ordinary, champus-type cat!

I find the whole business very flattering. It all began in 1938, when the American Feline Society, Inc., was founded, and chartered by the State of New York. Apparently a bunch of dear ladies got together and decided they wanted to start something. What more useful than a Cat Society? And so began this non-profit corporation, with membership open to "all those having the Cat's interest at heart." The Society Inc., now has 63 member societies. It is heart-warming to think that you guys are really so concerned about us CATS. We used to get along all right on our own, you know, but a little build-up never hurt anybody.

Now natcherly the Society, Inc., has its purposes. The chief ones are to "alleviate cat suffering and abuse, offer protection, food, medical attention, advice and instructions on the care and feeding of these animals." It proudly notes that its services to date have involved more than 35,000 Cats. That's a lotta Cat.

It boasts an adoption service. Also a Cat Information Bureau (I'll let you know when there's anything I wish to be informed about). But it gets better and better.

May I quote from the publicity blurb the Society, Inc., is sending out to the press? Our Library

Someone has said that the true university consists of a collection of books. And however restricted this judgement may seem, the library remains the basis of any university. If it is not a good one, the university can hardly be expected to be a success.

Yet, at the University of Toronto Malcolm Wallace comments "we have just completed (1949) a new Chemistry Building at a cost of $4,300,000, but our library as a building and as a collection of books can only call forth our apologies and explanations."

Since 1923, library facilities at the University of Toronto have been growing more and more inadequate. Built for a student body of 2,500, the library can hardly expect to serve the requirements of a student population of over 10,000. And it does not.

For almost thirty years, an extension to the library has been needed and yet, for one reason or another, it has not been built.

After the war, not the library, but a New Mechanical Building, a new Chemistry Building and a new Stadium were first constructed. These first two buildings were essential, but hardly more so than the library. And the stadium might possibly have waited a bit. Yet the library has waited so long that no one was very surprised at the delay.

It is a very easy thing to be convinced that we can make out with what we have just a bit longer. And in the case of the library, we have become used to doing this.

Many people would suggest that university students today are not reading as much as they ought. But the barriers imposed by library red tape are enough to discourage even the most avid reader.

The necessity of signing for a book in the early morning, of returning for it in the later afternoon, and then of bringing the book back by 10 o'clock the following morning, wastes a tremendous amount of time. And how much of a book is it possible to read overnight?

These particular regulations apply only to those books on the Students' Shelf, but this seems to include practically everything on university course.

The result of all these restrictions is inevitable. Students attempt either to buy as many books as possible, which is expensive, or to cut their reading to an absolute minimum—a more common alternative.

We are not suggesting that all the red tape is a special device of the library to discourage potential readers.

The circulation if library books would probably not increase by a 100%. But the fewer the barriers the better.

$2,000,000 has been set aside from the Building Fund for a new library building. Construction is supposed to begin after the completion of the Heating Plant.

With the library, we begin to wonder whether it is not a perpetual "after" project.

Let me raise the Iron Curtain on a drama of frustration that only now can be told.

Act Oneski

For two long, empty months our hero, Seibenjar Itch, had writhed on a little bed in a third-floor cell in the Ivory Tower (the Union prison for men). His hair faded, his face grey, loneliness had long since taken its toll. Only in his reddened eyes remained tthe memory of the glorious party.

"Whatta party", he was often heard to say.

His head still ached as he remembered the way tthe vodka had flown, how wonderful it had been to burn the monopoly game in the basement, and then, of course, he remembered . . . Olga.

I didn't think that even this son of Itch could last long after that, and he didn't.

His end happened dramatically, so the story goes.

One night from the code pounding in the radiator pipes Siebenjahr learned from the outside that Olga was somehow going to come to him that night.

But how could a girl get in where even Varsity-Pravda reporters had failed? Could Olga, disguised in a suit-coat, linger in the Comerade Art-Gallery after five o'clock? Would the suitcoat over her peasant windbreaker be enough to break the electric eyes that guarded every entrance?

Hockey Night In Canada

Reprinted from a very old Varsity

Remarkable realism was the most noticeable characteristic of yesterday evening's performance by the Toronto Maple Leafs and the New York Rangers. The entire cast entered into the play with a good deal of spirit and feeling and were roundly applauded by a small but select audience.

The dramatic structure of the play was unorthodox but excellent. It was divided into the customary three acts, but as the play ended in a deadlock, there was a short epilogue which was a riot of action and colour. Of course, there were several dull stretches throughout the play, but the sincerity of the individual performances was unquestionable.

Norman Lamport in the unsympathetic role of the referee gave an interesting portrayal, and rose to great heights in the free-for-all in the third act, before being abruptly hit by a flying Pepsi-Cola bottle. His closing speech was rather crude and out-of-place but it was so sincerely spoken that he passed out quite realistically.

The first period was featured by a rink-length dash by Sylvanus Apps who played the lead. He was cheered by the audience at every entrance and his technique was strongly reminiscent of Rachmaninoff's Prelude in C Sharp Minor. However, Mr. Apps was flat before he finished the performance.

Broda was unconvincing as the goal-tender. Every time he was scored upon, he overplayed his disgust. His gesture of breaking his goalie-stick on players that scored on him was quite an unnecessary bit of business. Producer Smythe may well omit this from the play.

The second act had some gripping moments, especially when Horner, on being penalized for tripping, made some grand speeches. These will undoubtedly be deleted by the censors before the next performance.

YATES CUP COMES HOME

Blues Humble Redmen 11-7 To Climax Unbeaten Season

By BRUCE MACDONALD

Bill MacFarlane, who earned himself a few gray hairs when he dropped a third quarter touchdown pass, carried the ball across the McGill line twice last Saturday afternoon in Varsity Stadium to give the Blues an 11-7 win over the Redmen, and the Yates Cup to boot.

But MacFarlane was only one of the factors in the Varsity victory that made the season an undefeated one and probably the best in University of Toronto football history. The Blue line came up with one of its best performances of the season, outplaying a McGill front wall, that averaged ten pounds per man more than Varsity's, all afternoon.

The defensive play of line-backer Bob Garside was one of the highlights of the game. His deadly tackling and effective work on pass defence (he knocked down three McGill passes behind the Blue goal line alone) were a major contribution to the Varsity victory. Steve Oneschuk came through with one of the all-round performances that has made him a favourite of the fans this fall. Al Haig's superb kicking more than counteracted the ground gaining efforts of the Redmen, who collected 18 first downs as compared with 13 for the Blues.

The Varsity team was a credit to Bali, coach, Bob Masterson, who has managed to earn the coveted Yates Cup for Toronto two years out of four, and to their school. They really played their hearts out all through the game, and it was a weary but happy crew that was surrounded by crowds of well-wishers on the field after the final whistle had gone.

Bill Bewley, whose lame shoulder forced Masterson to use him sparingly, took the opening kickoff to start Varsity 47-yard line. Blue attempts to get rolling were foiled by a couple of fumbles early in the quarter, but Haig's kicking kept them out of danger, and when the worm tuned and Oneschuk dove on a McGill fumble by Kline on the Redmen's 37-yard line, the shoe was on the other foot. A Varsity holding penalty forced the Blues to kick on third down. The McGill receiver was hit hard and fumbled. Jimmy Bell recovered for the Blues on the 8.

Since the Blue defensive team was on the field, Steve Oneschuk took over the quarterback spot and handed off to Bill MacFarlane, who galloped around the right end and crossed the line in the corner of the field for his first major of the game. Bell's convert hit the post but bounded through for the extra point.

A couple of booming 70 yard kicks by Haig, and the running of MacFarlane and Rumball kept the Redmen bottled up in their own end for the first part of the second quarter, but Sliwka intercepted a Lawson pass with about 8 minutes to go in the half and the Redmen began to threaten for the first time in the game.

Lionel Quinn (63) of the Redmen is heading for a fall as two Varsity linemen pin his ankles and McMurtry (31) of the Blues moves in for the kill.

A few plays later, Lawson bobbled in the Blue backfield and Shaw recovered on the Varsity 15-yard line for the Redmen. The Blue line rose to the occasion and held the Redmen to no gain. Robillard dropped back and kicked a single for McGill. The half ended with the Blues leading 6-1.

Varsity kicked off to open the second half and Blewald gave the ball right back to them when Bell recovered his fumble on the McGill 32. Rumball carried or 6, and Oneschuk picked up 3 yards. Lawson decided to gamble on third down and MacFarlane came through with a 4-yard gain to give the Blues a first on the McGill 17-yard line. Lawson pitched a strike to end Al Brown who was downed on the McGill 4.

The Blues tried to bull their way over through the centre of the McGill line but Bewley and Oneschuk were each held to a yard. Lawson

University Forest Block Is Site For Field Work

Every year the old story that the University of Toronto Campus is too crowded comes up with relation to something or other that should be on the campus and isn't. Every time, it is explained that there is no room for it on the Campus.

Despite all the crowding on the home site the University of Toronto can still boast the largest university forest of any university in Canada. They have 18,000 acres of hardwood and mixedwood areas typical of the parts of Haliburton County in which they are located. This compares with university forests of about 7,000 and 8,000 acres at the University of New Brunswick and the University of British Columbia.

The University Forest is situated on highway 35, seven miles below Dorset and about 27 miles above Minden. The main center of forest is marked by the Ontario Forest Ranger School and is the headquarters for all the work done on the University property.

The Ranger School was started during the war and was completed in about five years. It consists of a main school building, complete with an auditorium in which 16 mm movies are shown every week, a dormitory which accommodates about 60 people, a dining room, with kitchen facilities combined, capable of seating about 200, a well equipped garage and carpenter shop and a boiler plant capable of supplying central heating for the whole station and enough electricity for most of it in case of a power shortage. In addition to all this there are individual housing units for each of the teaching staff there.

There are many other courses taught at the University Forest. The first and second year Forestry students take three weeks field training there every year. Third year civil engineers take five weeks of surveying field work there, and the final three years of Architecture take two weeks of training in landscape sketching in the fall. The University rents the buildings but supplies their own staff and their own site for carrying on this work.

With respect to the University Forest proper, its main purpose is to supply Varsity with a place to carry out its research programs, and to give its students practical field work under typical field conditions. Ten years ago the whole area was virtually a waste, but now, though not yet greatly changed, it has become a major centre of research on the provincial level. Some plans are already being laid for holding a world conference on Forestry there next year.

If...

. . . if we had a Student Union Building students from McGill would not have had to be entertained at places miles from the campus.

Varsity Takes Win Quietly

It was a grand day for the Blue and White Saturday—even though many Toronto students didn't know what cup the Blues had won. Aftter the goal posts had come down and the victory parade had stopped traffic on Bloor Street, people were still talking about Toronto regaining the Intercollegiate Rugby Cup and the Grey Cup. Some people mentioned the Mulock Cup and the Bracken trophy, but they were not won over the week-end either.

Old-timers around the University noticed a big difference between the sober, young students who watched the Blues win in '51 and the gay veterans who stormed the City Hall after the victory in '48. Although the cheerleaders asked the crowd to follow the band after the game, only around 300 were marching with the combined McGill and Toronto bands by the time the parade had marched along Bloor Street and Queen's Park to College St.

In 1948 over 5,000 students blocked traffic on Bay Street when they marched on the City Hall. The City of Toronto police were prepared to see Bay Street blocked, but were completely unprepared for the complete tie-up that resulted when the Engineers carried the goal posts down Yonge Street at the same time. This was, of course, before the subway.

When they reached the City Hall, the mayor congratulated the team; Bob Masterson made a speech, and President Sidney Smith sang a song. The present-day students do not know what they missed by not following the band. The song alone was worth the walk.

However there were a few students willing to risk life and limb at half-time. Five or six gay blades did swan dives from the cross bar at the south end of the field, after almost breaking the bar in their attempts to swing up on top of it. A smoke bomb added to the confusion while some of their friends tried to hasten the dives by shaking the goal posts. Fortunately, none were hurt.

The most colorful addition to Saturday's game with McGill was the Redmen Band with new red and white uniforms. This was quite a change from the shabby crew who marched several years ago and were mistaken for the Lady Godiva Memorial Band by some of the students. The new uniforms almost made up for the lack of cheerleaders (female), and a drum-majorette. Several co-eds were heard admiring the big white hat on the drum-major which they thought must have been made from at least two polar bear skins. When last seen the drum-major still had his hat.

All in all it was very quiet considering that Toronto has won the cup only twice since 1936. In case anyone is interested, the competition was for the Yates Cup.

Music Review

Rochester Glee

"We try to find music that suits our organization," said the conductor of the University of Rochester Men's Glee Club, Paul Allen, at the concert on Saturday night. They certainly found it, and perhaps even more important, it was music that also suited the audience. The Great Hall of Hart House was packed to the doors with couples from the Blue and White dance, looking for musical entertainment rather than edification, and entertainment the Glee Club gave them—entertainment of the highest order of excellence.

The Glee Club began their program with two strongly contrasted numbers of a more serious nature: "Your Voices Raise" by Handel and "The Sleeping Lake." The first is a highly contrapuntal, exultant piece, the other a quiet bit of mood-painting. In both, the group showed its clean, sharp attacks, its perfect intonation, its clear, easily understood diction, and its rich, manly tone.

Then, after assuring the audience that they were capable of singing serious music, they let the fun break loose. First they sang "You'll Never Walk Alone," from "Carousel," accompanied by piano duet. Two pianists, who played brilliantly, unfortunately remained anonymous. A group of three Negro spirituals followed, none of them well-known, but all of them bright and well-contrasted. These were transmitted to the audience with an intensity that represents far more than mere singing of notes. One cannot do better than to say the singing had "punch"—a combination of numerous technical and emotional factors known to the conductor, but appearing to the listener only as vividness and aliveness.

A group of eight men from the choir then sang four songs in barbershop octet style, and the choir concluded its program with three extremely amusing novelty numbers, sung with all the precision and pep required to make this sort of thing come off. They were: "Brother Will, Brother John," "Who Did," and "There's Nothing Like a Dame." For a final offering, the Glee Club sang their Alma Mater, "Gene...

Much of the success of this extremely successful program is undoubtedly due to the conductor, Paul Allen. Mr. Allen is not only a stern disciplinarian to his choir, but a showman to his audience. The discipline resulted in singing, the like of which we wish we could hear oftener; the showmanship warmed up the audience right from the start, and kept them in a mood proper to the music the Club presented. This was also the mood of the big dance, and the result was the roaring success of Saturday night's program.

This is a winter shot of the University of Toronto library in the days before parking regulations took effect. Last night President Sidney Smith announced that to this building will be added a new wing named after Sigmund Samuel, who has donated $500,000 towards its construction. Architects have already started work on the plans for our library addition.

Dr. Sigmund Samuel has donated half a million dollars towards the construction of a new University Library, President Smith announced last night. Architects are now drawing up plans for the building, to be named after Dr. Samuel.

The addition will be devoted to the Humanities and Social Sciences, while the present building will house the stacks and reading rooms for the scientific division, including medicine. The buildings will be linked by a reference room.

The new library will have the same floor space as the present one, and will consist of a basement and two storeys. It will be designed on the modular plan, which allows partitions to be shifted without difficulty.

No definite plans have been announced as to the site of the new building, except that it will be near the old one. No date of completion has been announced either.

The present library was designed for a maximum of 4,000 students. Today there are nearly three times that number registered. Built in 1892, it has a capacity of 300,000 volumes. It was last enlarged in 1909.

This year the librarian, Dr. S. W. Wallace, must find room for 524,000 books and 160,000 pamphlets. More than 85,000 volumes are in storage. The remainder of the overflow has been divided among thirty colleges and departmental libraries around the campus.

Students have been complaining about the inadequacy of the library for many years. Long line-ups, crowded reading rooms, and frequent delays in finding books are all symptoms of its overcrowded condition.

This brings to over $800,000 the donations Dr. Samuel has made to the University. The Archives Building, which opened this summer, houses his unique collection of Canadiana. He contributed $150,000 towards the construction of the building, which stands on Queen's Park Crescent behind the library, and set up an endowment of $100,000 for the upkeep and extension of the collection.

Among the rare books Dr. Samuel has presented to the University from time to time is a large original volume of Sir Isaac Newton's Principia, and eight classical volumes, some 300 years old, from Newton's library. He has also made gifts of statuary and scientific instruments and provided funds for scholarships and the publication of scholarly works.

Varsity Debaters Defeat US Team

A resolution to the effect that "Communism should be outlawed" was defeated by a vote of 19-7 in a debate held in Trinity College Junior Common Room Saturday morning. The United States Merchant Marine Academy from King's Point, N.Y. introduced the resolution in what was their first debate while on tour in Canada.

In introducing the resolution Cadet L. J. Grill stated that the Communist Party had deliberately embarked on a program of espionage, treason, and criminal conspiracy dedicated to the disruption of human right. "There is no individual who has the right to commit treason, so," he asked "should a political party have that right just because there are more of them?" "It is evil to outlaw it, but it is a matter of choosing the lesser of two evils."

"The idea of outlawing the communists is both impossible and undemocratic," stated Doug Shepperd, III Meds, as first speaker for the negative. "It would be completely impossible to effectively outlaw a party, such as the communists, and for that reason it should not be attempted. Furthermore the principles involved in outlawing it are directly opposite to our democratic ideals. In democracy you are either quite free or you are not free, but you cannot be both."

"In outlawing the Communist party," stated Sheppard, "you are admitting failure in yourselves and your democracy. The free people of the world will not outlaw them because they still have faith in themselves."

Cadet G. S. Shreve, second speaker for the Marine Academy, went on to point out that they were a criminal conspiracy, with a move to take over the government by undemocratic means.

"Communism merely offers a false philosophy to those who are dissatisfied," declared Elmer Sopha, Grad, "and since their propaganda has won the first step, the United States is now in a state of hysteria. Outlawing a party is negative and repressive, and anyone interested in keeping our ideals would not ask for it," he said.

This debate was the first debate this year between a foreign college and the University of Toronto. The University of Toronto Debating Union has arranged for several more, as well as tours of Toronto debaters to parts of the United States.

IRC Groups Begin Today

Weekly discussion groups on international affairs will begin today, under the auspices of the International Relations Club, the Club's President, Andy Watson announced yesterday. The IRC, sponsored by the United Nations, is designed to inform students on world matters.

The first group, which meets every Monday starting today, is on the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). It will meet in Room 3, Trinity College.

The Colombo Plan for relief to South-East Asia is the subject of the second group, to be led by Ali Arsareb, a native of Pakistan, one of the countries receiving aid under the program. It will meet every Tuesday, starting tomorrow, in Mr. Allen's office, opposite Room 355 in the Department of Geography, Economics Building.

The third group, which will start next Monday, will discuss China and Korea. It will be under the leadership of Don Sutherland, of the Department of Chinese Studies.

"Things are looking up," exclaimed Dentantics director Mal Yasny as the Dentantics photographer caught him sizing up the show at a recent rehearsal. Dentantics, renowned for its fresh and captivating chorus line, has even more material to uphold its high standards this year in the form of the newly instituted Dental Hygienist Course. The comely young lady strung up on the rock is Frances Findlay. Frances is one co-ed who sees her dentist more than twice a year, and brushes her teeth after every meal and before she goes to bed.

NEWS MEETING

There will be a ten-minute meeting of all the news staff at 1:00 p.m. in Room 13, University College. The news staff is expected to attend this meeting. This includes those who have indicated that they would like to write for The Varsity as well as those who have been writing for the paper this year.

Deplores Spurned 'Culture'

At a meeting of the U. of T. Polish Students' Club on Sunday, Julian Michalski, cultural director, spoke on the purpose of the club's cultural committee. Michalski said that the committee's aim was to place emphasis on the intellectual aspect, by providing the club members with a background of life and history.

"It is rather unfortunate," he said, "that in our so-called modern society there is a pronounced tendency on the part of the average man to spurn the idea of culture." In his opinion this attitude is a result of two things. The first is that man today has an ill-conceived notion of the meaning of culture. Secondly, man has set out to condemn certain aspects of culture without even making an effort to study and analyze the products of a culture and estimating their worth.

According to Michalski, culture is not only the material development in man, but what is more important, the moral development of the artistic and ethical activities. Therefore, since culture is something which belongs to the earthly order, it is the product of man's reason. In obtaining an insight into culture we study not only culture itself, which is the effect, but also the people who are the cause.

Campus Show

UC Follies

By JACK GRAY

One of the strongest claims for attention that the UC Follies can make, and one that it has made for several years now, is the proud boast that it is " a completely original musical revue." Few college shows at this university try to carry out that difficult task, managing to content themselves with other people's music and mouldy jokes.

Alhough much of this year's Follies' material was good, its strongest claim remains the fact that it tried to be original. The treatment that originality received didn't go to make a really successful show. This is not by way of being unkind: many people enjoyed the Follies at the performance I attended (first show, Saturday night), at times the laughter was wide, expansive and genuine; the sets were very good, the costumes simple and effective.

That, however, is only one side of the story: the dancing was very bad — the girls simply couldn't dance. Too often the humor reached into sex, the bathroom, and kindred sources, and that kind of humor, unless it is very, very funny, is as dangerous as going to visit the directors of a college show after writing a review like this one.

While the show ran smoothly, with no irritating lapses between scenes, it had at times a technical incompetence that has left me without any finger-nails at all. The most glaring example of this was in Back Home. This number had a high potential rating, the set was excellent, the song as far as I could tell pleasant and enjoyable. But — the singing chorus was piped in over the public address system, and you couldn't hear what they were singing. They were out of time with the orchestra. The dance routine suffered not from bad choreography but from the simple and fundamental mistake of trying to make untrained girls into ballet dancers in six weeks — which doesn't work. The net result of all this was that what might have been an excellent number was completely lost, and I for one resented it.

The set design (Ron Farquhar, Don Russel, Mike Thompson) was good throughout, and particularly effective in the Hart House set for the Opening. Sets for Trip To The Stars, and Back Home also stood out. The lighting (Joe Vise) at most times was an effective complement to the sets.

The quality of the original compositions was uneven, but not particularly distinguished. I would question seriously the wisdom of keeping the orchestra when budget troubles are in the offing: many shows have made it clear that the two pianos plus traps (and perhaps a bass) arrangement can do the same job. It may not be as flashy, but it certainly saves dough. As for the song, I particularly liked The Big Three (Music: Weingarten), Trip To The Stars (Weingarten again), and We're Debonaire (guess who). No credit is given for the lyrics on these three songs — it should have been.

The skits are a problem. In all of them but one (Bathtub Ballad) the ideas were good. Paul Break's take-off on Bitter Rice (Bitter Bulrush) was, for me, unfortunate. The idea was tremendous, the treatment not so hot. One problem was the acting, which was below average for the show. Another was the treatment of the female bosom, which reached, as far as I am concerned, a monumental climax of bad taste. While I realize the bosom is fundamental to any treatment of Bitter Rice (along with the wider aspects of sex) in Bitter Bulrush it managed to reach a pretty deflated level.

Simpleton's and Cretin's (by Jack Robson and Pat Watson) also had a good idea. It was marred at times by poor acting, a tendency to throw away the blue pencil too soon, and bathroom fixtures. Bert Stone's Royal Visit was excellent, but here much of the humor was killed by throwing it away. Grant Gibson was guilty of this more than once.

People who did a good job: Gibson, Freed and Rechshaffen in The Big Three, probably the best all-round act of the show. Vern Turner, for his work throughout. Jack Robson, although not particularly for his acting. Grant Gibson who, even though he killed many of his lines, shows promise. Gilda Fine, for the first minute of her part in Bathtub Ballad. Joan Palter, for her treatment of Twenty-One.

Directors Barbara Cornes, Joe C. Goldenberg and Victor Beube (who was unfortunately invalided out before the show was produced) made their big mistake, I think, in trying to do too much, to be too original. In the case of untrained dancers, for example, imaginative precision routines are a better bet than ballet sequences. And unless you have a lot of time in which to train it, the singing chorus can become an unbearable millstone. Another beef I have was the use of the PA system so many times. A stage is a stage, and not a radio studio. Although it may make it more difficult, every time you use your stage and get rid of the PA system you manage to appeal to an audience in the way it expects to be appealed to, through its eyes, as well as its ears.

This year's UC Follies could have been much better than it was. Still, for those who participated in it the show has probably been fun, and for many, a valuable experience. And while the treatment was not always of the calibre I would like to see, the words "completely original" still put the Follies in a class that could use more members.

HART HOUSE BULLETIN BOARD

CHAPEL

Services will be held daily from Monday to Friday, from 10:15 to 10:30 a.m. These services are conducted by the Chaplain, Rev. E. M. Nichols, and by students. All members of Hart House are invited.

SING SONG

There will be a Sing Song in the East Common Room tomorrow (Tuesday) at 1:30 p.m. All members are cordially invited to attend.

GLEE CLUB

The second tenors will rehearse tonight at 5:00 p.m. in the Music Room. The regular full rehearsal of the Glee Club will be held tomorrow (Tuesday) at 5:00 p.m. in the Music Room.

TABLE TENNIS

The Table Tennis Club will meet tonight and tomorrow night at 7:30 o'clock in the Lunch Room. Tables will be set up ready for play.

REVOLVER CLUB

The Revolver Club shoots Monday and Wednesday in the range at 8:00 p.m. All members of the House are welcome. There is instruction for beginners.

ART GALLERY

A new exhibition of paintings by Aba Bayefsky will open tomorrow in the gallery, and run until the 25th of November. The gallery will be open to members of the House between the hours of 12 noon and 7:00 p.m., Monday through Friday, and TO WOMEN OF THE UNIVERSITY FROM 4:00 to 5:00 p.m. EVERY WEDNESDAY. Now showing in the Print Room, off the gallery, is an exhibition of Post-Impressionist prints by Cezanne, Gauguin and Van Gogh.

BRIDGE CLUB

The Bridge Club will hold its regular Tuesday meeting in the Debates Room at 7:15 p.m. tomorrow evening (13th November).

LIBRARY RECORD HOUR

A recording of "Facade," poetry written and read by Edith Sitwell, will be heard tomorrow (Tuesday) at 1:15 p.m. in the record room.

ARCHERY

The Archery Club meets at 7:30 p.m. every Tuesday and Thursday in the rifle range. Instruction is given by Mr. W. A. E. Frost (the Dominion Champion). Membership is still being accepted.

WEDNESDAY 5 O'CLOCK RECITAL

RAY DUDLEY, PIANIST, will give the recital in the music room on Wednesday, 14th November, at 5:00 p.m. Members of the House are cordially invited to attend. No tickets are required.

Consider Varsity Award

An award of $100.00 may be presented to some Varsity writer at The Varsity's Annual Banquet next March. The cheque goes to the recipient of the Anita Freedman Award, presented yearly for the most distinguished reporting during the current publication year.

Although the award is open to all members of The Varsity staff, tradition excludes four editors (the editor-in-chief, the managing editor, the news editor and the make-up editor) from eligibility.

Anita Freedman, born in Montreal on June 27, 1921, came to Toronto as a young child. She graduated from Harbord College Institute and enrolled in English Language and Literature at the University of Toronto.

ANITA FREEDMAN

It was here at the University that she began her career in writing, as a member of The Varsity.

In 1942 she received her B.A. and the following year went to work for the Canadian Press. After two years at the Canadian Press she joined the staff of the Globe and Mail, where she became known for the accuracy, style and completeness of her reports.

When Anita Freedman died May 28, 1947, a group of her close friends thought it would be a fitting tribute to her memory if an award was established in her name. The award was also intended to arouse an incentive for journalism on the University of Toronto campus.

All reporters are eligible and there is no restriction to the type of writing. Any writer of sports, news, art, music, book and movie reviewing or features may qualify. There are no set standards other than energy, faithfulness, inventiveness and integrity of the reporter concerned.

The awarding committee is composed of the Editor-in-chief of The Varsity, who provides the personal information, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Administrative Council, a representative of the University of Toronto, and a member of the Press.

It has been four years since the award was first established. Previous winners have been: 1949, Wills Harrison and Jack Gray (a joint award); 1950, Don Stevenson. In 1951 the award was not given, because in the opinion of Frank Moritsugu, then Editor of The Varsity, no writer on The Varsity staff possessed the abilities required. No one had contributed an all-round effort of superior reporting.

It is to be hoped that this year at least one member of The Varsity may possess the elusive qualities.

Music Review

Immaculate Technique

Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D is one of the great concertos for that instrument, not because it fully exploits the violin's technical capacities, but because it realizes to an unusual degree its typical quality. Beethoven deliberately put virtuosity in a secondary position and allowed a fresh elevating lyricism to blow freely through every bar of his masterpiece; this must be given a full and sensitive expression. Thus the concerto becomes a test for violinists who wish to prove that they are not mere technicians but mature musicians as well. Technically, one may be excellent, yet not able to sense their subtleties and grasp the meaning of this composition.

Last Wednesday night, at the regular TSO concert, Tossy Spivakovsky, in his performance of this concerto, proved at least one thing: he is to be ranked with the great violin virtuosos. He has a fine immaculate technique which revealed itself in the difficult cadenzas; his three part chords used liberally there, were remarkably pure, no mean feat on the violin. Too, he tried to convey the lyrical qualities of the work; but he succumbed to a temptation which I consider unforgivable. Taking the inherent romantic elements, he overexpressed them, sometimes to a point of effeminacy. This was especially true in the first movement. The [illegible] melodic lines were conceived [illegible] er weakly and narrowly and [illegible] given the breadth they deserve[d] His tone here was small and [illegible] Where the violin battled in [illegible] lets against the orchestra, [illegible] very essence of the concerto [illegible] he just failed to bring these [illegible]

In the second movement, the [illegible] ghetto, Spivakovsky was at [illegible] best; he blossomed out with a [illegible] onant tone that suffused the [illegible] provisations and main [illegible] theme with a warm beauty. [illegible] rondo, perhaps one of the most [illegible] lightful in all Beethoven, Spi[illegible] kovsky played at a quicker tem[illegible] than is usually found, but he [illegible] catch the lively spirit of the mo[illegible] ment and it proved to be very [illegible] joyable. He played the mid[illegible] theme with a subtle delin[illegible] which contrasted well with [illegible] vigorous statement of the the[illegible] by the orchestra.

In fact, the performance [illegible] interesting, and in some ways [illegible] isfying, but it failed to rise to [illegible] great heights or give any new [illegible] sight to the listener into the co[illegible] position. I may add that the [illegible] orchestra in the tutti section and [illegible] accompaniment was excellent, [illegible] only criticism being its failure [illegible] make the climax at the end of [illegible] concerto as grand and forceful [illegible] it might have been.

In the orchestral part of the [illegible] gram the major work was th[illegible] rak's Second Symphony in D M[illegible] or. Sir Ernest MacMillan is [illegible] lauded for performing this ra[illegible] heard work. The Symphony [illegible] way, justly deserves the rel[illegible] obscurity it has received. It mak[illegible] a superficial attempt to be tr[illegible] with the minor mode, but at [illegible] end, one cannot help feel[illegible] "sound and fury signifying hill[illegible] not nothing." However it do[illegible] have its moments, and Dvorak [illegible] written some rich orchestral[illegible] Sir Ernest conducted a vigoro[illegible] and dramatic performance and [illegible] was a pleasant change to tu[illegible] surfeited with the more comm[illegible] ly played symphonies. Perso[illegible] one other work should be noted [illegible] excerpt from the Rocky Mount[illegible] Suite, Swallow's Nest, by the C[illegible] nadian composer, Robert McL[illegible] len. It was innocuous but pl[illegible] ant and Mr. McMullen sho[illegible] some skill in the handling of [illegible] theme and in orchestration.

International Relations Club Plan Weekend at Ottawa

Ottawa, capital of Canada, is the destination of the International Relations Club next weekend. The club will leave Toronto on the afternoon of Thursday, November 22, spend all day Friday and Saturday in the capital, and return on Sunday. The purpose of the trip is to examine the machinery that administers Canada's foreign policy.

While in Ottawa, the group will view the Department of External Affairs, Parliament in session, and likely the Privy Council. They will be addressed by prominent officials of the Civil Service, the Cabinet and perhaps by the P[illegible] Minister.

It is expected that many m[illegible] bers of the Club will be dri[illegible] to Ottawa and will have room[illegible] others. Also, special return [illegible] on bus or train fares are being [illegible] tained so that the total [illegible] transportation cost should not [illegible] ceed ten dollars.

All students of the University [illegible] invited to come on the trip. [illegible] Turner is arranging the trip.

A general meeting of those in[illegible] ing of going on the trip w[illegible] held in Room 3 of Trinity C[illegible] at 1:30 on Wednesday.

Approximately 250 students received their commissions on Saturday morning after completing their NTD, COTC or Air Reserve training. Com. J. C. Hibberd, Maj.-Gen. H. D. Graham, and Air Vice-Marshall F. G. Wait spoke to the graduates before the march-past in front of University College

In a short service afterwards a tribute was paid to the men and women from the University of Toronto who have served in the two great Wars and in Korea.

Chancellor Massey and A. Kelso Roberts placed wreaths at the memorial tower from the University and the Province of Ontario, while Winds Burriss and Syd Wax represented the Students' Administrative Council.

Wreaths were laid by the University College, Victoria, Medicine, Engineering and Dentistry Alumni and by the Trinity Convocation.

Offer Illusion At Skule Nite

Because of the traditional elaborateness of the sets and the time lapse in setting the stage, the technicians of Skule Nite '52 will be working under a great strain.

In order to give them more time, Skule reports that "We're featuring a Magician before the curtains, who will stage a major illusion never before attempted in the illustrious history of Hart House Theatre."

The Magician has stated that this will not be just the usual sleight-of-hand, but an outstanding effect staged by many leading Magicians throughout the world. He assures that anyone who sees this act will leave Hart House Theatre wondering how the trick was done.

Samaritan

President David R. K. Rose of the University of College Literary and Athletic Society offered to give Skule Nite a script after the UC Follies were over. Skule could not accept the script as the show has been cast and besides they already had a similar script.

By DAVID PEDDIE

In London, Ont., last Friday night, a new play by a Canadian, Joseph Schull, was given its first stage presentation. SHADOW OF THE TREE won the 1,000 dollar prize awarded last year by the London Little Theatre for the best Canadian play against 72 other entries.

Although this critic cannot say anything of the play itself, not having seen or read or heard it on the radio where it has already been performed, I think that it offers an opening into that field sown with so many dragon's teeth — The Canadian Theatre.

Mr. Schull's play is one of the very few that have been recognized as good plays and it is among an even smaller group of plays that have been financially satisfying to their authors. Even then $1,000 is paltry when one considers the effort that was put into its writing. It is commendable of the London group that it has given the prize and staged the author's play but we are still a long way from anything resembling a living theatre.

Now most people will question the very concept of a native theatre. After all, if they want to see a play they can see the best shows from Broadway imported by a few theatres in some of Canada's larger cities and that is far better than an amateur show put on by the people who live and work right here in Toronto or London. It seems to their shallow minds that nothing theatrical can come from the dull atmosphere in which they live.

Many other people have tended to be annoyed by this talk of a "Canadian Theatre," because the talk has been so idiotic. It has usually revolved around the ideas of culture and art and education or something equally insipid.

For some strange reason the theatre has an eternal fascination for a large number of blockheads, show-offs, and pale-young-things who think they are artists and who want to do artistic things. They want to e cultured and they have been told that Culture is Art. The culture they espouse is their only reason for living; actually it is not even a good excuse for living. So we hear them saying that someone must provide them with a National Theatre in which they can act or attend as the flower of Canadian culture. They want the theatre to attract bigger audiences and then by some miracle the audience will become cultured and then everything will be just grand. That of course is the extreme case and will apply to no one person directly but it is the assumption of too many people — both those who are for a theatre and those who are indifferent.

However, an excellent account by Robertson Davies of the Canadian Theatre as it should be if and when it comes, and the reasons where, why and how, is to be found in the volume of special studies prepared for the Massey Commission. Mr. Davies realizes that the theatre is primarily the result of a culture, not the cause of one, although in a secondary way it is slightly educational. The fact that the Massey Report made a study of the arts is far more noteworthy than the pseudo-artistic theatrical groups, and seems to suggest that we are nearer to a theatre than ever before.

In judging our own theatrical achievements, such as Mr. Schull's new play or the performances of any local group, we must have a standard and Mr. Davies tries to define one for us. "A classic thoroughly understood and finely presented, a display of virtuoso acting in a play of modest merit, a fine piece of ensemble work in a play of Tchekov or Ibsen, a farce played with skill and gusto — any of these may in its degree provide that special pleasure, that sense of exhilaration and fulfillment which first-rate theatre can give."

This we should remember, for too often we are apt to accept what is called art as true culture. But to steal from Mr. Davies again — "Enough for one morning. Let us to the cocktail lounge where we may drain a bumper to the future."

SCIENCE NOTES

Pterosaurologists

By JOHN REDFORD

The aeroplane is a recent application of the principles of flight, but flight is no new phenomenon. About one hundred and fifty million years ago vertebrates first ventured into the air using the same principles of flight that are found in the aircraft of today.

During previous periods in the earth's history, an extraordinary variety of animals had adapted themselves to life on land or in the water. Finally, some animals who found that it was getting rather crowded down on the earth decided to adapt their bodies to flying so that they could escape the dull existence of crawling around on the ground or splashing in the ocean. To do this they had to develop wings, a motor, light strong bodies, and a good stabilizing system. Two groups of animals made this experiment. One group was that of the flying reptiles or pterosaurs; the other group was that of the birds. The birds have survived until the present day, but the pterosaurs perished along with their dinosaurian cousins about sixty million years ago. Leaving the study of birds to the ornithologists, let us become pterosaurologists and consider the winged reptiles and their experiments in flight.

There were two great groups of pterosaurs. The early ones were for the most part small, often not larger than robins or crows. The ones that appeared later were enormous. Pteradon, for example, had a body over four feet long and a maximum wing span of some twenty-seven feet. In those days there must have been some spectacular air accidents, unsurpassed in the world's history until the present century.

The wing of the pterosaurs was a huge membrane supported at its leading edge by a greatly elongated fourth finger. The remaining fingers were hook-like claws, apparently used for clinging to cliffs and trees. Their motors were their powerful breast muscles attached to a greatly enlarged breast bone. However, it is doubtful if they flew as much as they glided or soared, for their bodies were tiny in comparison to their wings. One species had a body only six inches in length, yet his wingspread was over eight feet! The hind limbs were extremely weak, which suggests that these animals were almost incapable of locomotion except in the air. It has always puzzled scientists how they were able to take off from the ground or from the water.

The pterosaurs were lightly built, with hollow bones which were strong yet at the same time remarkably light.

For a stabilizing system, pterosaurs had a long tail with a horizontal fin at the end. Their hind legs were extended back and connected with a membrane, the moving of which could control their flight.

Their food habits are imperfectly known. It is believed that they ate fish, as fish bones have been found in their stomachs. Their large efficient eyes also scanned the horizon for other flying creatures such as insects and birds which they swallowed whole.

Like all other reptiles, pterosaurs probably laid eggs. As the bones of the pelvis are closely connected, these eggs could not have been larger than those of a hen. Such small young would need parental care, and they may have had breeding grounds and seasonal migration just as do modern birds.

It is just possible that pterosaurs were warm blooded, for it is difficult to conceive how they sustained flying action over long periods of time without a constant body temperature. Other reptiles are cold blooded, but these that developed independently may have attained a condition similar to birds and mammals.

Carabin Visit Is Scheduled For December

Applications for the Carabin Week-end must be in by the end of the week.

Designed to promote more understanding between French-speaking and English-speaking university students, the annual exchange week-ends between the Universities of Toronto and Montreal will begin here on December third. Forty students from each university are chosen to take part in the discussions and social events planned Toronto will return the visit to Montreal in the middle of February.

We are particularly anxious to get applications from the professional faculties, chairman of the Leiberman, II Pre-Meds, said. In the past, U. of M. students in a professional faculty have been disappointed that they have not been able to meet students from our equivalents here. Last year there was a large representation from their Dentistry faculty while we did not have one application from that faculty here, she added.

The University of Montreal is quite differently organized compared to English-speaking universities in Canada. Especially it is a graduate and professional institution. Students enter to take a graduate degree or pursue some form of professional training.

Applications for the week-ends are available in both SAC offices. There are no requirements to apply except interest.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

When Mr. Reach starts making the official Intercollegiate football with a handle on it, the Blues are going to be the greatest college football team in Canadian history. Last week at London they came as close as they possibly could to giving Western the game when they fumbled away the ball five times. Last Saturday, with the Yates Cup on the block, they lost the pill on fumbles six times, once to set up McGill's only touchdown, and dropped three of Lick Lawson's passes, one of them in the end zone, a sure touchdown.

Fumbles or no fumbles, though, you have to go a long way back to find a Varsity team that can match the record this one has made. They were checking back through the records when we left the press box Saturday but had not found an undefeated season or an undefeated record of eleven straight games. They'll probably have to go all the way back to the Champlain-Cartier-Radisson team (which covered quite a lot of ground too).

It was a great defensive ball game, with neither team able to sustain a long march or scoring breakaway, and with thumping hard tackling. Those fumbles weren't the result of poor ball handling, but because the backs were hit so hard that the ball was torn away. The fumble Saturday was an offensive play by the defensive, rather than a lapse on the part of the offensive; all the scoring resulted from recoveries. Varsity's first touchdown resulted from the recovery of McGill fumbles on two consecutive series of downs. MacFarlane swept eight yards around the end after the second recovery to score. Varsity's three first half bobbles resulted only in Robillard's single, as the Varsity line, outweighted but not outfought, held McGill back on the others.

In the second half, both teams scored touchdowns from fumbles. Biewald was separated forcibly from the ball on the kick-off, and 32 yards and nine plays later MacFarlane was over again. Lawson's lovely TD pass dropped by MacFarlane came after a recovery on McGill's 15. All Lawson's passes, by the way, hit Varsity receivers, were either completed or dropped. It looks like the Blues have developed a pass attack potentially as good as their ground attack — now that the season is over.

McGill's touchdown was scored after two Varsity fumbles in their own territory in the third quarter. The Redmen actually gained more yards and first downs than the Blues, but thanks to Al Haig's kicking (except for two 20-yarders in the second half on which he was badly rushed, one of which he recovered himself, Haig's hoofs averaged 44.4 yards from the line of scrimmage), the propensity on the part of Cuzin and Robillard to pass or run on third down, and the stiffening of Varsity's defence whenever McGill cr[illegible]d the centre-stripe, McGill didn't show on the scorebo[illegible]

Lou Willard Shines In Swimming Meet P.H.E. Takes Title

Last Saturday night at Hart House pool the Women's Interfaculty Swimming Meet brought to a close five weeks of practice for some twenty-five girls. Nearly every faculty was represented in one or more of the eleven events.

P.H.E. easily won the faculty championship with an aggregate score of thirty-five points. Trinity and Victoria followed with twenty-five and eighteen points respectively. P.H.E. points were gained through the combined efforts of Beryl Lewis, Fricky Wood, Peg Rowntree, and Roselyn Stone.

Louise Willard, Trinity showed terrific form and came up individual high scorer, winning the diving, synchronized solo, and school figures, for a total of sixteen points. Second by only two points was Peg Rowntree, PHE. In the closest race of the evening, Peg managed to eke out a win over Pam Perrin, Vic, by one-tenth of a second in the seventy-five yard medley.

Beryl Lewis, PHE, made thirteen points winning the fifty yards free style in 30.9 seconds, and also the fifty yards backstroke. Lois Cossar, Physio, by her sustained drive gained most of the points for the combined Meds-POT team.

The most impressive event was Trinity's synchronized duet. Jane Rogers and Jessie Marinner performed the difficult tricks in their routine with perfect timing.

The costumes added sparkle to the evening. Especially colorful were the black sequined suits worn by UC swimmers, Helen McPhee and Joan Ellis.

All in all, both the swimmers and the audience appreciated and enjoyed the evening which was marked by enthusiastic swimming of a remarkably high calibre.

Oneschuk Leads Ground Gainers

Freshman fullback Steve Oneschuk climaxed the last game of his first season in Senior Football with the outstanding ball carrying performance of the championship game. He toted the ball 100 yards from scrimmage and lost two for a net gain of 98 yards. Besides his offensive play, his tackling and the spectacular way he batted down McGill passes made him a star in Saturday's game.

The most used ball carrier for Varsity was left halfback Bill McFarlane, who ran the ball nineteen times for 67 yards. Bill played 60 minutes, was a workhorse offensively and defensively; he had to be, as his sub Bob Dale was carried off in the first quarter.

Top ball-carrier for McGill was fullback Lionel Quinn. Though not in the first string, Quinn carried 11 times for 52 yards. He is in his first year at McGill, but is in the second year of his course since he entered with Senior Matric.

Win 4 to 3 As Atucha Nets Two

Revenge is sweet, and no d[illegible] the University of Toronto So[illegible] Team gloried in it as they h[illegible] out a 4-3 licking to the McGill R[illegible] men on Saturday morning.

Saturday's game was a thr[illegible] It was fast, clean and well-con[illegible] ed, providing a few exciting m[illegible] ments to the hundred odd spe[illegible] tors who either turned out to [illegible] the game, or lingered on [illegible] they heard that an Intercolleg[illegible] title was at stake.

The game started with the Bl[illegible] playing like a team determined [illegible] win. In the first half, despit[illegible] disadvantages of kicking towa[illegible] the eastern goal which was mu[illegible] for at least twenty yards from [illegible] goal line, the Blues established [illegible] lead which they were to main[illegible] right through the game. The f[illegible] goal came, when on a clear p[illegible] Gil Toppin booted in a "sti[illegible] that had the keeper well beat[illegible]

This egged the team on, and [illegible] forward line played like a s[illegible] unit. A long, clever pass from W[illegible] Eze set the ball upon Ken Je[illegible] sop's head, and the score she[illegible] read 2-0. McGill's attack sparg[illegible] at this point, but despite seri[illegible] threats on the Blues' defence, [illegible] never really bothered Bobby La[illegible] the Blues' netminder. On the [illegible] of these attempts, just before t[illegible] half-time whistle went, O'B[illegible] playing over the ball for the Re[illegible] men, handled the ball. T[illegible] Broadhurst, captain of the Bl[illegible] and left back, kicked the penal[illegible] shot which grazed the outer [illegible] of the left post. The half end[illegible] with the Blues attacking, and t[illegible] score sheet reading 2-0.

The second half opened with t[illegible] Blues pressing. Manuel Atucha [illegible] the assault, when soon after [illegible] whistle for the second half wa[illegible] he made a flying dash towards g[illegible] on a well centred pass. A ro[illegible] of applause greeted the Redme[illegible] netminder as he made an un[illegible] lievable dive for the ball. The [illegible] ward line kept up their pressu[illegible] and soon Manuel Atucha engine[illegible] ed a pass to Newt Reid who pas[illegible] it to Jose Atucha, and he m[illegible] no mistake. Jo[illegible] passed to Gil. The ball went ba[illegible] to Jose, twenty yards out from [illegible] goal and in a brilliant kick, [illegible] claimed his second goal for t[illegible] game.

McGill's forward line moved [illegible] for one of their spasmodic outi[illegible] Falconer received the ball ex[illegible] pass, centred to O'Brien; O'B[illegible] passed laterally to Procope and [illegible] had Lane beaten by inches. [illegible] Blues won 4-3.

As The Blues Won

Redmen Defeated Blues Take Title

ded it to McFarlane who cut rt around the left end for the ndown. Bell's convert attempt blocked. The score, Varsity 11, Gill 1.

Only three minutes later the Blues missed a chance to put the game on ice when MacFarlane dropped a perfect toss from Lawson in the end zone. Late in the third quarter the Redmen began to take matters into their own hands. McGill recovered a Lawson fumble on the Blue 52 and began to roll. Robillard elected to run on a pass play and carried to the Varsity 39. Quinn plunged for 10 yards and a first.

After the Blue line had held for two plays at the start of the fourth quarter, Sliwka hauled in a pass on the Blue 8. Varsity held and regained possession, but not for long. Caldwell pounced on a Blue's fumble on the Varsity 27. Crain tossed to Shaw for a first, and then charged his way to the one through the centre. On the second try, Cec Findlay went over for the major with 10 minutes to go in the game. Tomlinson limped onto the field to kick the convert and limped off again.

With only 4 points between them and victory, the Redmen began to show a little fire, but a determined Blue team kept them bottled up in their own end until a desperation pass in the last minute of play from Crain to Klein brought the play to centre field. A McGill pass on the last play of the game was incomplete and the Blues had won the championship.

Isolationism

The charge levelled against smaller universities in general and Acadia in particular, that the course which they followed at the recent NFCUS conference leads to isolationism is neither correct or warranted.

The Acadia stand was not groundless. Larger universities who would wecome "a little honest controversy over the visit of some dyed-in-the-wool Russian Communists" would do well to remember and respect smaller colleges and their views.

The proposal to bring fifteen Communists to Canada for an expense-paid tour of Canadian universities is something that not even the most starry-eyed idealist would dare dream. Certainly these 15 Commies would be trained propagandists — experts in their field. On the other hand they would be meeting students who would have had no experience in such matters. We would be sitting ducks. While some universities might lay claim to superhuman intellectual and argumentive powers for all their students we at Acadia make no such boast. We are a group of college students and most of us would not want to be pitted in a bull session or elsewhere against 15 of Russia's best. If only one student were influenced by these Reds, then the entire purpose of the plan would be defeated.

Supporters of the plan argue that this trip could arouse Canadian students from their smugness, and complacency. If such a method must be used to arouse Joe College, then he is not worth arousing. Forums, lecturers, Mock Parliaments and so on will awaken student lethargy without the help of propaganda we know to be deadly to democratic ideals.

It is all very well to discount the adverse publicity which such a move would bring to NFCUS, but the fact remains that a Red Reputation once acquired is difficult to get rid of and would do nothing to further NFCUS work at home. This coupled with the extreme expense of bringing these Communists to Canada is reason enough for an Acadia veto.

When our campus is fully aware of the issues, bring on the Russians. But we are not yet ready for them. First things first. Let us develop on each campus an awareness of democratic ideals and concepts, of our way of life and our political thinking and institutions. Then, and only then, will we be able to effectively cope with any Reds that may be sent. We then would be fighting on the enemies' ground and not our own.

Instead of all this playing with fire, let us now turn our efforts to the Canadian Student, which should be the primary concern of NFCUS, and all members of student government. After we have developed a national consciousness and awareness, then and only then can we widen our scope to include others.

RED ROOTERS

Gloomily Glum

The American Everyday Dictionary's definition of "glum"—gloomily sullen. The Varsity's definition of the McGill Cheering section—gloomily glum. This was the third year in a row that the Redmen supporters have travelled to the province of Ontario, in the hopes of seeing their heroes win a clutch game that might mean the Championship; and alas and alack this was the third time that they were sadly disappointed.

This "Hydramatic" McGill team (no good in the clutch) gave little for the McGill rooters to shout about, and their comments and their cheers during the game reflected the sad disposition of the Montrealers.

The only amusing incident that gave Coach Vic Obeck's followers some relief from the sad case of the Blues that they suffered, happened before the game. Obeck and some fans had just descended from their bus, when a youthful scalper (he was no more than sixteen) saddled up to the McGill coach, and in quick, short, undertones offered him a choice ticket to the game. Said the scalper, "Would you like this ticket?" Replied the coach: "A ticket. To what?" To which the young ticket broker replied in obvious youthful astonishment, "Why to get in there, of course." To which Mr. Obec quipped back, "What's going on in there?", strolled off amidst loud guffaws, and left the most bewildered young scalper that the city of Toronto ever did see.

The McGill section, which was the largest visiting cheering section to appear at the Bloor Bowl this year, were on the edge of their seats all through the second half, but remained quite silent in their anxiety.

Faculty of Arts

Manitoba (CUP) — In a recent editorial The Manitoban has upheld the position of the Faculty of Arts at the university. Arts students are charged with wasting time and graduating without any practical knowledge. Yet Arts teaches the student to think and work for himself which is equally as important as, or more important than mere technical knowledge. Even cramming for lectures develops initiative, The Manitoban said.

Curtain Call

A Large Cast

We have a team who won a game which won the cup. All this despite the large gaps in the audience at last Saturday's game — produced by cowards, no doubt, who thought the game a lost cause and their comfort a primary aim. Not that they can be blamed too much, after last week's weather ructions.

But it was a fine day; both teams played well and consequently, the game was exciting. There were few plays of awe-inspiring brilliance, but the overall tension of two closely-matched teams contributed to ever-increasing enthusiasm from the stands.

Maybe is was because of the booing blunder at the last game, but everyone was on his best behaviour. A mad spirit of co-operation swayed the stands and field alike. It was a dizzy race to see who would come out on top, whether cheerleaders or audience would put on a better show.

And, unlike the game itself luckily, it was a tie. The unity which makes for a winning team manifested itself in the spectator aspect of the game — an important facet of the whole football pageant.

In short, the football game was not composed of a limited number of players, but like de Mille's movies had a cast of thousands, all of whom were necessary, all of whom played well.

Yet the football season is over and the cast of thousands file back to their respective colleges and faculties. If past performances are any indication, there is a slim chance that they will appear together till next year in the stadium. At least football seems to be the one occasion on which the university as a whole is drawn together so forcefully and so enthusiastically.

But like weather probs, predictions in which people are concerned are never very sure. Efforts like All Varsity Aid, the Blue and White Society's Museum and Art Gallery nights, and the All Varsity Revue can and have drawn the university together in their very different ways.

Such causes should be thrust head and shoulders above the sectionalism of this university just as Bob Masterson was carried triumphant from the field by his team.

Les Carabins

Like most all-university activities worthy of wider recognition, the Carabin Weekends between the Universities of Toronto and Montreal, are often just one of the many nebulous activities on this campus.

The idea behind it, however, reflects the growing desire among Canadians for a greater national unity. Quite simply, it aims at improving understanding between French and English speaking university students.

While, at the start, the Weekends were little more than an unending round of entertainment, the feeling soon arose that their real value lay not just in parties but in discussions to get at the root of differences.

The discussions have not proved entirely successful because, like most uncharted talk, there was no fixed direction and they buried themselves in essentially insignificant details.

A better approach to the whole Weekend would be to break down the eighty Carabins into small groups or eight or ten, not just for discussion but for social activities as well. On this more intimate basis there is consderably more opportunity to get down to the basis of prejudice and misunderstanding.

Carabin Weekends are not designed for any special group of Toronto students. Although open to everyone, an unbelievably small number of students have applied, particularly from the profession faculties.

Understanding is a word that is much bandied about on university campi. But in the case of Carabin Weekends, it has proved, to some extent, that it is not entirely worn out from overuse.

What Price the Press ?

The Prostitute

What is news? What is its role in the modern world? Is the press free? In the first of a series of three articles, the writer examines the printed pages, its problems in our time.

By WILLIAM GLENESK

"What is truth?' said jesting Pilate, 'and would not stay for an answer." And neither does the newshawk linger as he edits the daily despatch. If the evidence of current media is convicting, we in the half-century face a chaos of communication that would shake the Tower of Babel. News turns to the black and white of its ink and paper, but its real colour remains unseen. The reader who thinks that he reads pure news, reports of events as they are, needs a dose of reflection on what happens to news between the event and the printed page.

Fiction mixes with fact from Korea eye-witness observers, and the event must filter through a series of lenses before they see printer's ink. A few of the lenses are (1) the bias and prejudice of the reporter, (2) the perspective or position of operation, (3) the ability of the writer, (4) his style, (5) censorship, (6) selection and condensation for cabling, (7) re-write revisions at the paper, (8) the headline and position set by the editor, and possible last minute cuts. What emerges may still be the event. But it resembles the original much as an omelette the original egg.

Since advertisers pump the life-blood into a paper, whose heart-beat contracts and expands with circulation, news has become a commodity, something to be sold. As Dr. H. A. Innis of the University of Toronto concludes: "Consequently it was classified in relation to the markets which it was supplied and in relation to regions [illegible] produced it. In the words of Mr. Dooley, 'Sin news and news is sin.' Charles Merz wrote [illegible] is doubtful whether anything really unifies country like its murders."

William Randoph Hearst believed "that 'news' largely a matter of what one man wants the pe to know and feel and think." He proved his p in the Journal American, "An American Paper American People." Hearst fed on real and f explosions in society, and to keep the home burning was his theme. Says Dr. H. M. McLu in The Mechanical Bride: "Headlines mean sales. It takes emotions to move merchandise wars and rumours of wars are the merchan and also the emotion of the popular press." Pulitzer "rather liked the idea of a war — no big war — but one that would rouse interest give him a chance to gauge the reflex in circulation figures." And Lord Beaverbrook that "you must be ready to put into it your w heart and soul, your stomach, your liver, whole anatomy which will appear most of the to be dangerously stimulating and on occa positively revolting." News is never pure.

Stories are played down, trimmed, slanted killed, and written from an angle. A glance at Telegram and the Daily Star for instance, will sh a divergence in their respective cryptic summa of the official forecast of the weather. Murder riot or fire would hence give rise to even wi shades of meaning, to say nothing of p political hay. Ruskin ought to have inclu Colonel McCormick, Hearst and Beaverbrook his Modern Painters, for they wield a brush t paints the greatest number of minds in our t with the most florid, creative strokes. C circulates.

One American depicts the tabloids thus: business of a New York journalist is to distort truth, to lie outright, to pervert, to vilify, to l at the feet of Mammon, and to sell his coun and his race for his daily bread. We are intellectu prostitutes." Prostitution is the oldest profes in the world. Next week I will look into its pra tice by the Press.

OUR READERS WRITE

Philistines We !

Editor, The Varsity:

My general distress at the hysterical incompetency with which the problem of Varsity Radio was handled, has reached the limits of endurance. Now you have added stupidity of reasoning and gross unfairness to the previous stupidity of misbalanced reporting. You have followed the recantation which invalidated your initial headlined hysteria with a muddle-brained editorial seeking to re-kindle the dying embers. With your head firmly buried in the shifting sands upon which the unsteady foundations of this year's lamentable stand, you have been blind to several crucial points.:

(1) The initial attacks of Mr. Waite, the Radio Chairman, were obviously tiresome and childish for if it was, indeed, true that the radio committee had been guilty of the faults which he claimed, he himself was to blame. It was his duty as Radio Chairman not to whimper after the event but rather, as an SAC member (with responsibilities attendant upon his privilege of being quoted in The Varsity) to prevent the mishap in anticipation before the event.

Furthermore:

(a) In the field of radio drama two plays have already been performed — an achievement of some merit.

(b) In the field of discussions, etc., the animosity or disagreements between Rocky Martino and your late Feature Editor, Harry Rasky (now of CKEY) were a completely open book.

(c) The lack of inclusion of glee clubs, etc., must be attributed to SAC supervision for Martino was handling discussions and Giles drama — no third party was appointed.

Thus we can see that a little forethought on your part, though it might have lessened the quantity of news you carried, would most certainly have improved the quality.

(2) In your editorial you claimed that because the standard of Varsity Radio was low it should be allowed to die.

I will not try here to elucidate an argument the truth of which should have been manifest to you shortly after the age of five: Namely that the value of student means of expression (be they radio plays, discussions or papers) lies not in the finished product itself, of course, but in the educative effect which its production engenders in the students concerned.

Suffice it to say that, if this policy of extermination of the lame-footed were really carried out, The Varsity itself would be one of the first institutions to take a hasty leave of us.

(3) In your editorial you further claimed that because Varsity Radio was the concern of a small minority of students, it should no longer receive SAC grants.

Might I point out that unless Varsity Radio gets grants it will never be able to graduate from FM to AM where it can be heard. You, in fact, are advocating a vicious circle policy of extermination. But with help Varsity Radio will most assuredly prove itself on FM and thus graduate to AM where it will establish itself on the airwaves towards the ultimate goal of achieving its own small station. And then it will become not only a valuable occupation for many students but also a means whereby some effort may be made to instill the first quaint traces of education into the co-ed mind (i.e. they may finally settle the mu vexed problem of Hart House d bates by hearing them over t air) etc., etc.

Also, in reference to the ma ter of popularity, it must clearly understood that the c culation of The Varsity in way represents the number copies actually read each d (Of course high circulation ures make for easy advertis selling at high rates . . .)

(3) Your arguments of problems of an annually chan ing and technically unsati Radio Chairman might be plied equally well to the Public tions Commissioner.

In short, madam Editor, if are to carry out the foolish poli which you so lighthearted vocate, if we are to throw Va Radio into the flames of Phi stine stupidity, let us at le realize that this holocaustal like all other local fires (be th of vandalism or not) will m assuredly have been started an unopened and unused copy your paper umors persist that the walls of University College quadrangle are umbling from erosion. This recent picture of Croft Chapter House ars out the opinion of experts that the stonework will endure for nother century. Even in the nearby cloisters where the effect is most nticeable, it is considered merely as symptomatic that hoary old age s come to UC, bringing, alas, along with dignified tradition, some of e deterioration due to a long, eventful history.

VCU Agrees To Authorize Russian Students Exchange

Although told that The Varsity had dealt with the Russian question ad nauseam, the supporters of a motion that the National Federation of University Students should not concern itself with Russian students coming to Canada under any circumstances, saw the motion almost unanimously defeated at the Victoria College Union meeting last night. A motion was then passed that NFCUS should invite Russian students and investigate the possibility of year-long exchanges.

In presenting the eight alternative proposals which the External Affairs Committee wanted the faculties and colleges to vote on, NFCUS rep Tim Armstrong said that The Varsity had given the impression that the External Affairs Committee was preoccupied with the Russian student question.

Later in the discussion, Alec Langford, II Vic, said that there was no need for discussion as everyone should have an opinion on the question already. He stated that The Varsity had repeated the Russian question ad nauseam.

To help the VCU make a decision, SAC representative Graeme Ferguson gave a brief outline of the history of the question from the time that Denis Lazure first invited the Russian students to visit Canada.

Ferguson said that he voted against the proposal that NFCUS should invite the Russian students to visit Canada when the question was raised at the NFCUS conference in London, but favored the motion as a student of Victoria College. He explained that the Toronto delegation felt that they could not support the motion without the support of the student body and at that time they did not know what the opinion of the student body was on the question.

There was also the danger that some of the smaller Canadian universities who have not the strong financial position of larger universities such as Toronto and McGill might drop out of NFCUS if there was a great deal of controversy over the visit. Ferguson said Acadia, Montreal, and Laval universities as well as several of the western universities would ban the Russian students from their campi, if they were invited.

However pessimistic we may be about the world situation, Ferguson said he believed that Canadian students must try to maintain good relations with the Soviet Union. He said that this was becoming extremely difficult since with the present world split there is very little communication between North America and the USSR.

Nothing Bothers UC Wall

Rumours that the walls of the U.C. quad are crumbling have been checked, and have been found to be of no immediate concern. It was believed that the bricks of the outer walls were an inferior variety generally used for interiors. The shorn edges, seen extensively near the claisters, seemed to indicate erosion, caused by moisture seepage undermining the inner strength of each brick. This would mean the inevitable collapse of the whole structure.

However, experts and authorities investigating this problem have assured that any deterioration is just the work of old age. The walls were built over 100 years ago, and are constantly examined for defects. "Barring an earthquake," one authority said, "U.C.'s walls will last another century."

Preliminary Plans Made For Library

he half-million-dollar gift of Sigmund Samuel towards the nstruction of a new University rary brings much nearer the e when the University of To- o will have library space ap- aching adequacy. The sum of ney now available for the con- uction of the library is $2,000,- , as the Library Committee of Senate having appropriated and a half million some time o.

lans have been submitted for a w library to be built with the er amount but they did not et the requirements. Consee- ntly no action could be taken. However," said Colonel Le r, Building Superintendent of University, "preliminary sketches have now been made and they are being considered to find the best possible way to meet the present and future needs of the library with the money now available. The $2,000,000 building will be constructed on a unitary plan so that additional space may be added, either vertically or horizontally." He stressed that, "the new library will have to function satisfactorily with the present library and with any future buildings."

The huge amount of work entailed in this project is going ahead as quickly as possible.

Campus Profile

By PEARL PARNES

An intense, scholarly man, whose family traces back to 900 A.D. and whose knowledge goes back even farther, chuckled as he remembered one of his favorite escapades.

Dr. Fritz M. Heichelheim had been dismissed from Giessen University, in Germany. The reason for his dismissal had been a matter of principle. It was 1933, and Hitler had come to power. But, Dr. Heichelheim insisted, he headed an illegal government, and the lecturer refused to compromise his principles just to keep a job.

So the rector of the university, acting under Nazi orders, dismissed the young scholar. "Luckily," adds Dr. Heichelheim, now lecturer in the Classics Department at the University of Toronto. "If I hadn't left Germany then, it would not have been easy to do so later."

One day, a month after his dismissal, two letters came, one from the Sorbonne in Paris, the other from Cambridge. He accepted the fellowship offered him in England, and with the moral-support of the Cambridge scholars who had come to fetch him, went to a congress of professors in Munich. "I was the only dismissed professor who dared to appear. It was great fun!"

Except for a return visit to Germany to get married to a lovely lady whose picture sits in his office next to that of his father in high collar and handle-bar moustache, the next ten years were spent at Cambridge as a research student. "I was occasionally entrusted with lectures," this reader of 20 languages remembers, "but spent most of my time editing a catalogue of Greek coins." This has become one of Dr. Heichelheim's chief projects. "In this world of complications and so many instances of ugliness, it is good to take a daily bath in beauty."

The son of a banker, Dr. Heichelheim's early life had been "happy, carefree, and dull, at least compared with our present hectic existence." As an undergraduate, he had become interested in Ancient history and has specialized in it. A bronze bangle which once belonged to a Roman child, and a huge Tudor thumb-ring found in Southern Nottinghamshire near some Roman pottery, form part of his prize collection of his own discoveries.

"The ring was apparently lost in the process of burying a pig, whose bones were found nearby," he speculates.

The shelves of the little office, which looks out the west side of University College, are covered with all sorts of texts in many languages. There is a long row of the professor's own works, including a 1240-page volume of the "Economic History of the Ancient World."

"The Dutch firm which originally published the book, which, incidentally, was almost a best seller, hid the money they owed me from the Nazis, and sent it to me after the war." As a result, that firm has the contract for the new English edition soon to appear.

A clipping from the "Gongster," the student paper at Nottingham University where Dr. Heichelheim was lecturing from 1942-48, testified further to his love of beauty, for during his stay there he restored a recently discovered poem of Sappho, the only outstanding woman writer in all Classical literature.

Dr. Heichelheim, the discoverer of the boom and depression cycle in the Roman and Greek empires, is at present director of a scheme to publish a huge untouched collection of ancient papyri. Co-operator with the University of Toronto on the project is Giessen University, the professor's old alma mater.

For the end of the Giessen episode is a triumphant one. Five years ago, Dr. Heichelheim wrote his old university from Nottingham and asked for an honorable release. Their answer was an apology for the 1933 affair, and a relieving of duties so that he might remain in Nottingham. Since then, he has remained in friendly contact with Giessen and was recently appointed to an honorary post as full professor at the German University.

"The life of a scholar is quiet, but not enough so in the twentieth century," sums up Dr. Heichelheim. "I have so far seen two world wars and two revolutions. It would have been preferable to have looked at them from the moon."

Council Meeting

The Students' Administrative Council meeting will be held in the mining building Wednesday night. All students may attend these meetings, although only council members are allowed to address the chair.

Scholarships For Phys Ed Postgraduates

Scholarships of the value of six thousand dollars for post-graduate study in physical education, recreation or physical medicine will be awarded this year by the National Council on physical Fitness. This was announced by J. H. Ross, the acting chairman, in Ottawa on Thursday.

In awarding the scholarships, the suitability of the candidate's proposed study with respect to his future employment and to his professional competence, will be considered. Scholarship winners must agree to return to Canada for at least two years.

The total value of these scholarships has increased this year from $4,000 to $6,000. No award may be for more than $1,200 or less than $300. The scholarships are restricted to Canadians who have had at least three years' full-time experience in physical education or recreation in Canada. This must include at least one year's experience since obtaining an under-graduate degree.

These scholarships for post-graduate study were set up three years ago to help overcome the shortage of professional personnel with advanced training. The deadline for applications is January 15, 1952. Application forms may be obtained from provincial government fitness or recreation offices or from the National Council's office in the Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Camfor Discusses US-Red China

The United States should recognize Communist China and admit its mistakes in crossing the 38th parellel as a matter of Christian expediency, according to Professor K. J. Joblin of Emmanuel, who spoke yesterday before the Camfor Club in the first of a series of lectures and talks on Pacificism. As a pacifist, Prof. Joblin felt that it was first necessary to stop aggression before the positive action of Christian love could take effect.

The Camfor Club, standing for the Campus Fellowship of Reconciliation, was formed last year as the Christian Pacifist Fellowship. It was decided at that time to form a separate club rather than join the University Peace Council as it was felt that the council violated some of the Fellowship's principles.

Prof. Joblin remarked that he could see the tyrannical imposition of ideas coming from the USA just as well as the USSR. This prompted one student to add that "we are as bad as the USSR." Professor Joblin said that to say this is to obliterate the judgement as while it might be true, it does not necessarily follow.

The speaker hoped that the students, who were passing through the same st ge as he was in twenty years ago, would not lose their faith in peace or their abhorrence of war and drift into cynicism. The invasion of Ethiopia and the fall of Czechslovakia shook Prof. Joblin's belief in pacifism before 1939. Now he does not believe that it is wrong to use force to stop aggression as moral force does not necessarily work against an immoral force. While still a pacifist he feels that to refuse to take the logical implications of the use of force as a last resort to stop aggression, is to break the law of love.

Before the war, one of the Hart House debates was on the question of whether students should bear arms for King and Country. Now, Prof. Joblin said, it was felt that while war is an evil and against the will of God, yet the refusal to stand on the side of justice was also an evil.

Bumpers Away

A Toronto Engineering student is busy today looking for his notebook. Seems he put it on the bumper of a car parked in the SAC parking lot near Hoskin Ave., then walked away. While he wasn't looking, the owner of the car drove away—with the notebook still on the bumper. Lost: one complete set of notes for the year.

Varsity Placement Service

"Tack splitter — a colloquial term applied to any worker who uses a magnetized hammer and holds tacks or small nails in his mouth, transferring the tacks directly from his mouth to the hammer". This definition describes one of the 14,000 jobs listed in a dictionary of occupational titles which lies on the desk of J. K. Bradford, director of the University Placement Service.

Not many jobs like the above are received at the Placement Service since the employers who contact the office want university-trained personnel. As yet the office has never refused to place a job on file.

Certain occupations seem to have more glamour attached to them — advertising, journalism, personnel work — and these are the types of jobs most sought after. Many people miss good jobs because they often disdain to accept work with which they are familiar. Every individual has his own idea of what he wants to do.

Some of the jobs that come in seem strange to most people but there may be only one person to fill it and the job doesn't seem so odd when the right person is found for it. In the past such jobs as selling ladies' hats wholesale and selling books of matches found 2 or 3 interested male applicants.

The University Placement Service was formed about three and one-half years ago by J. K. Bradford and is an administrative department of the university responsible to the president of the university. This service is for the benefit of all grads, undergrads and those who have completed at least one year in any one of the faculties and colleges. Applications for employment have been received from alumni up to 70 years of age who have been away from the university for 30 or 40 years and have been placed. These older alumni are not encouraged by the placement service.

Most of the firms contacting the Placement Service want students in their graduating year and notices of available jobs are posted on the bulletin boards of colleges interested up until the start of the examinations. Since the engineering exams start one month early, notices of jobs interesting them are posted at the end of their examinations.

Switch Date Of Debates Hart House

A change in the date of the Hart House Debates has been announced by the Publicity Director of the Hart House Debates Club. The debate on "Canada's Immigration Policy" was to be held on December 12, but the date has been changed to November 28 when the Hon. W. Harris, Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will be guest speaker.

The other debate, "Resolved that this House regards the modern press as a monument to human folly," was originally scheduled for November 21, but will definitely be held on December 12.

MOCK TRIAL

Skuleman In Gaol

N. Geneer, I Mining, charged with attempted murder as a result of an explosion he set off at the float parade, is awaiting trial in the weekend cell in the fifth-sub basement of the Hart House Tower dungeon. Bail has been set for the prisoner at $6.66⅔ payable at bar in Toronto.

"Just a little over-enthusiastic" was the way Bill Broughton, Chairman of the Mining and Metallurgy Club, described Geneer. Stressing his youth and innocence, Broughton said that Geneer was a first-year man and had not taken the float-(ation) process yet. 'He probably probably took our unwritten motto 'Dam it and blast it' literally, and blew his top."

New light was shed on the abortive romance by Rodney Drill, Geneer's rummate, a boozum companion of his summers in the north. "It was while we were up in the new Flim Flam development last year." Drill said, "Nathaniel, we call him 'Nathy' for short," he explained, "was mucking in the pits looking for new ore bodies. Well, one night we went to the Shaftblaster's Mowdown at the Pick 'n Shovel Inn. There she is, a case of mutual conflagation, at first light.

Elaborate Sets Are Featured At Skule Nite

Not to be outdone by the traditional elaborateness of the stage sets designed this year by Dave Powrie of the school of Architecture, Skule Nite's Dance Committee is going all out in its schemes to transform the lower gym of Hart House into a Mecca of dancing enjoyment.

Dave Wood, the Chairman of the Dance Committee has obtained from the Aluminum Co. of Canada, five hundred square feet of aluminum to be used exclusively for decoration purposes. "Sure our sets are wonderful," said Wood, "but wait until you see what our crew is doing to the gym for Nov. 16 and 17.

In addition, Al Fujiwara, cartoonist from the College of Art, who drew murals for the newest campus restaurant, has spent all his spare time working for Skule.

Former Varsity Editor Speaker At Modern History Club Tonight

—Globe and Mail, Canada Wide Press

COL. STACEY

"The Second World War from German Sources" will be the topic of Colonel Charles Perry Stacey, O .E., who will address the Modern History Club tonight at 8:00 p.m. in Wymilwood.

Colonel Stacey is, at present the director of the Historical Section of the Canadian Army Headquarters and the official historian of the Canadian Army. He was the first man to make a comprehensive record of Canada's Army during World War II and was awarded the academic non-fiction medal while with the Canadian Army.

After graduating from the University of Toronto in English and History in 1927, Col. Stacey furthered his education by obtaining a B.A. degree two years later at Oxford University. While proceeding to his Ph.D. degree he also taught history at Princeton University.

Throughout his undergraduate days Col. Stacey was active in the COTC, and in his final year was editor-in-chief of The Varsity.

Among the many books he has written on military affairs, some of the better known are The Candian Army, Canada and the Second World War, and The Military Problems of Canada.

The Modern History Club, this year is having as its guests eminent historians and tries to provide gatherings of an informal nature where students can intermingle with the members of the History Department.

Discussion Group On Atlantic Pact Featured By IRC

Several students, turning out for the first discussion group of the International Relations Club last evening at Trinity College, were told by President Andy Watson, IV Trinity, that the meeting had been postponed.

The group will meet today at 4:00 p.m. in Room 19 University College, Watson indicated. He apologized to the students who had not been warned of the postponement, and said that most of the members of IRC had been told of the change.

Watson censured The Varsity for failing to print the time of the meeting in the advance which appeared in yesterday's issue.

"All members of the club are welcome," said Ian Scott, I St. Michael's, who is chairman of the discussion group, "but we encourage especially those who will be able to attend regularly."

The IRC will meet weekly on Tuesdays to discuss the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The broader aspects of the community of nations in the North Atlantic region will be discussed," said President Watson. The cultural, historical, and economic as well as the political background will form the foundation of the talks, he indicated.

Miss Ghan's voice was smooth and well controlled, every note from Middle C to High C possessing an equal firmness and intensity. She wore a worried expression through the early part of the programme ,but loosened up when she came to Always Do As People Say You Should from The Fortune Teller, and in Romany Life her magnetic personality really caught fire.

As for the orchestral selections little can be said except that Paul Scherman sweated to endow them with freshness, and in the Habenera and Vaqueros Song from Natoma almost succeeded.

The chorus, unfortunately, was too obviously made up of soloists, each singing in his or her own style, and so was most effective when it could scarcely be heard.

Herbert's appeal can be muffled only by a very bad performance, and certainly Friday's was far from that. In fact probably those who can take Victor Herbert in large doses enjoyed it.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

AN AMERICAN IN PARIS may not be the greatest musical ever made in Hollywood as the ads suggest, but it is a great musical. It is fun, it is color, it is imagination. What a perfect prescription for a bad mood or over-study hangover it is.

This is a Gene Kelly musical. Not only is he the star, but like most of his recent musicals, Kelly has had a hand in backstage. The choreography is all his, and it is tailored to the happy Kelly personality and his new young partner Leslie Caron.

We have come to expect a lot from Gene Kelly musicals. ANCHORS AWEIGH proved of course, that his tremendous work in COVER GIRL was not a fluke. And after ANCHORS AWEIGH came TAKE ME OUT TO THE BALL GAME, SUMMER STOCK and ON THE TOWN. ON THE TOWN was perhaps the closest we had come to a perfect musical. I recall someone once telling me that GOOD NEWS was the best movie musical he had ever seen. His case was that it made no pretense at being anything but a musical; it started off with the cast in a production number and ended up that way. In other words, GOOD NEWS was a literal transfer of the stage musical to the screen. But I vote for ON THE TOWN because the camera participated to present an integrated musical over and beyond a pure stage musical. ON THE TOWN hung together and moved together smoothly; a perfect sense of completeness.

There is only one reason why I wonder if ON THE TOWN is still not the best pure musical. AN AMERICAN IN PARIS is more ambitious and succeeds in the ambitions, but maybe because of this, it has the feeling of jumping from one thing to another, while ON THE TOWN flowed smoothly throughout.

Anyway, AN AMERICAN IN PARIS is an example of the gigantic faith Kelly's studio, MGM, has in him. They have taken only a few good players and director Vincente Minelli, and welded them together into a production in which considerable money has been used with intelligence and imagination. Kelly's personality, the guy who really gets a kick out of life (even if there are temporary set-backs) illuminates this musical. But co-starring with him is the imaginative camerawork, and the tasteful use of color throughout the film. The climax comes in the new celebrated An American in Paris ballet. It is a wonder to behold, although the swift movements, the color and dazzle of the costumes and the expert dancers of the various corps de ballet will perhaps tire you a bit the second time around.

This is something unique in most musicals. In almost every musical there are one or two numbers which are alive while the others seem a lot of ado about a little. But after our introduction to Paris and other characters, Kelly with Oscar Levant, Georges Guetary and a couple of older women do the lesser-known Gershwin song By Strauss as if they are having a wonderful time. This carries through to 'S Wonderful which Guetary and Kelly do, to I Got Rhythm which surrounds Kelly with a bunch of Parisian urchins; every number is a delight.

Leslie Caron, the new French dancer, is Kelly's love. She is a pixie-ish thing, and she has a young ingenuous personality that refreshes. Her dancing is delightful, if not up to the technical verve of Vera-Ellen. She does have much too much teeth, but this is a minor fault, the rest of her graceful pliable self more than makes up.

Oscar Levant does familiar things, except that in his scenes with Kelly he seems to be enjoying himself rather than making just a fast buck. His playing of Concerto in F with an orchestra of himself is not that impressive, I liked his singing and his bravado finishes with Kelly much better. Georges Guetary is the other French accent in AN AMERICAN IN PARIS. I am told he is a big name among the French-speaking; he is of the Jean Sablon-Charles Trenet school. Guetary has a flair, he contrasts well with the Irish Kelly. His big number, A Stairway to Paradise, is not that good, but this is not Guetary's fault. I prefer seeing beautiful young ladies singly so that I can concentrate on them, rather than hordes of them in identical dresses parading up and down fancy staircases.

The only straight drama role is Nina Foch whose dram tic talents have been more appreciated on Broadway than Hollywood. She is just fine. Even those who judge movie people by their Good Guy or Bad Guy roles will warm to her.

But the big comment is on the American in Paris ballet, of course. This is an elaborate stupendous thing. The details about the use of French paintings as backgroundsand the color, oh, c'est magnifique.

VIC'S CORNER

Another Tuesday, another corner — so here goes:

A big bundle of X's to all who were involved in the Bob Revue — it was a tremendous show — a financial success too.

The first issue of Acta appeared in Alumni Hall last week — you have already paid your dollar, so you might as well pick up your copy . . . there might be an article or two which would appeal to you, too.

There won't be a service in Wymilwood this Sunday because of technical difficulties, but for the next mid-month we have arranged to have Rabbi Feinberg — for the Chapel service on Dec. 2 we are going to have a speaker from Hartford, Connecticut . . . Keep your eyes open for more news.

Orders for the Vic Pins will be taken in Alumni Hall every morning this week . . . a deposit of $1.00 will be required before a pin will be ordered . . . all those who have previously ordered a pin without leaving a deposit, please note this. Delivery is promised before Xmas. . . . The MUSIC CLUB'S joint Glee Club - Opera Party will be held in Alumni Hall on Wed., Nov. 14 after the regular 7:15 rehearsal. . . . Tonight (Nov. 13) the Drama Club is producing Drinkwater's X - O in the first of two nights of U.T.D.C. 1-act plays in Hart House Theatre. . . . On Thursday night the regular meeting will be held in Wymilwood at 8:15. Sitwell's 'Ballad of Sister Anne," a skit by Ricky Arnold and Dan Glen, director of "An Inspector Calls," will be the feature of the evening. Casting appointments for the big play will be made. Everybody's welcome.

Gathletics: Basketball in full swing — I mean free-throw — 5 teams from Vic (2 Freshie, 1 Soph, 2 Jr -Sr.). Freshie B team under coaching of capable Marybelle Seasworth have been welded into so powerful a team that they're having difficulties finding worthy opponents. The teams have all won a couple and lost a couple but the kids are having a terrific time throughout it all. Watch those technical fouls, Alice. Naughty! Naughty! . . . Girls' Tennis Tournament: Semi-finalists were Louise Burge and Mary Eleanor Riddell, Mary Crowther and Jackie Donnelly. Finalists were Mary Crowther and Mary Eleanor Riddell — score 6-0 and 6-1 for Riddell. Congrats — well - played matches!! . . . Girl's Hockey Practice: 7 a.m., Friday morning.

Mathletics: Postponements because of bad weather last week have meant that Vic rugby and soccer teams are faced with heavy schedules in the coming week. Vic footballers tackle Sr. Meds on the back campus on Thursday, and meet Sr. SPS Monday to finish the regular schedule. After yesterday's game with Sr. SPS, the Sr. Vic team (soccer) takes on Trinity A on the front campus today at 4.00. . . . In lacrosse activity, bath the firsts and seconds see action this week, and the Volleyball Juniors, thirds and fourths, all have important games. . . . Watch the bulletin board for times of games. Hockey thirds and fourths still need players — lots of positions still to be filled. Practices in Varsity Arena.

Here we are at the end of the Corner already . . . hope to see you in the library!

EFFY.

P.S.—Don't you forget that there is just over two weeks to get a date for the DANCE OF ROMANCE . . . the VIC INFORMAL, Friday, Nov. 30.

Research on 'Godiva' Reveals Varied Past

"Godiva was a lady who thro' Coventry did ride . . ." till the whole sad tale (Skule version) is told. Being able to sing her story and give forth the accompanying yell with inspired fervour has been regarded by Skulemen as the first and foremost task set all Skule Freshmen.

By now, the famous Skule song is, however, no longer exclusive Skule property. Reliable figures indicate that it is sung by 99.5 out of every 100 students on 98 per cent of the 100 campi, and by 100 out of 100 students on said campi when said students are counting pink elephants. The fame of Lady Godiva is widespread. More people know of Godiva through the Skule song than from their history books.

Tracing the origin of the song is impossible. It just happened to happen. None can say when or where for none remember Skule minus Godiva. A few historians may recall that Godiva was, as legend has it, a very noble woman who, in protest against a tax proposed by her husband upon his serfs, rode naked through the streets of Coventry. The proposed tax was repealed.

The Skule version is a slight variation of the same story. The chorus, however, is designed merely to express good cheer and has nothing to do with the plot.

Godiva is also commemorated by the Lady Godiva Memorial Ba... The day following the aforementioned ride, the town musicians of Coventry gathered in the marketplace to show their heartfelt appreciation to Lady Godiva. The ... of their dedications floated ... the town. So popular did the ... and beautiful Godiva become ... yearly grand procession was ... tuted to commemorate her wild ride through the streets of Coventry. When the Band of the procession heard of Mr. Petrillo they decided to efigrate to the New World.

Here their story takes a sad turn. Because it is so very difficult for musicians to be self-sufficient, the Band devised a plan whereby they would learn to earn while at the same time play their music. They wandered into Engineering. Their repertoire consists of ... Godiva dedication plus numerous other songs both old and new.

While spirit and tradition are very strong, the arrangements are new and the harmony is the ultimate in modern expression showing a most well-developed dissonance.

Orientation Failure Blamed on Publicity

As part of a university-wide orientation program, four tea-dances, one at each of the arts colleges, have been planned. The frosh of UC, Vic, Trinity, and St. Mike's were invited. The first of these was held on Friday at St. Mike's. But no one from UC, Vic or Trinity was there.

The reasons for this are various, but centre around the lack of publicity according to Bud Brennan, III St. Mike's, who helped to prepare the freshman orientation tea. This brief was presented to the Students' Administrative Council as the co-ordinating committee ... the SAC was to handle all publicity.

The publicity consisted of a story in The Varsity which misquoted the date for St. Michael's dance, a retraction and a few signs at St. Mike's.

Four weeks ago Mr. Brennan ... formed a meeting called to discuss the program that St. Mike's would be unable to hold a dance, ... mentioned other plans. Later he found that a dance could be held and immediately informed Carmen Guild, graduate secretary at Hart House. Mr. Guild said yesterday that he was under the impression that St. Mike's tea-dance had been cancelled.

Charles Hanley, III UC, chairman of the Extra-Curricular Affairs Committee, said that it was college was to look after all the details of their dance, including publicity. He added that he would try to prevent the same misunderstanding occurring with future tea-dances.

Buckley Challenges Spirit Of Old Eli

...n and Man at Yale, by William F. Buckley, Jr., Henry Regnery Co., 1951, $4.75.

William F. Buckley, Jr., believes ...d God, free enterprise, a qualified ...nd of "academic freedom", Yale ...nd the United States of America. ...e does not believe in atheism, ag...nosticism, "collectivism" (what...ver that may mean), and what he ...es as a dangerous trend which ...merican universities, particularly ...ale, have shown which is leading ...dem away from God, free enter...rise, and so on.

Buckley graduated from Yale in ...950 with a brilliant and controver...al career behind him. Whatever ...se he may have received at Yale, ...e didn't get much education, as ...is book testifies in page after page ...f brilliant, biased journalism. Buckley's method is one of the ...ost dangerous and most effective. ...f your belief is strong and your ...ime and facts are short, as any ...ood journalist knows. It consists ...f a completely personal approach ...o a narrow segment of the prob...em, attacking people as if they ...epresented wide-spread ideas, and ...ttacking them in such a way that ...he average reader has no oppor...unity to check the facts for him...elf. Added to this is a rigid exclu...ion of any 'fact' that goes against ...our argument.

Buckley's iconoclastic rush at Yale ...s directed primarily at the de...artment of religion and the de...artment of economics. Since I am ...at up on the conditions at Yale ...cannot say just what is correct, ...hat is incorrect, or where the ...hading comes. But there are points ...hat seem important. The first ...orty-four pages of the book are ...evoted to religion, and much of ...he rest of the book is about re...igion, or concerned with it in one ...ay or another. Yet at no point, in ...oreword, body or appendix, does ...uckley indicate that he is a man ...ith strong, dogmatic views on the ...ubject. Buckley is a Roman Cath...lic, which is certainly nothing to ...e ashamed of nor to hide. It ...ould help to put his view into a ...erspective. His section on econo...ics rests more or less on a charge ...hat Yale is inculcating "collec...ivist" values in its students. Buck...ey never defines just what he ...eans by "collectivist", but it ...eems to be roughly or vaguely as...ociated with "socialist". His view ...n this matter has already been ...gorously challenged by those who ...now Yale well.

For the Canadian reader the most interesting, and most damning section of the book is the chapter on "The Superstitions of Academic Freedom". His charge is specific:

"I believe it to be an indisputable fact that most colleges and universities, and certainly Yale, the protests and pretensions of their educators notwithstanding, do not practice, cannot practice, and cannot even believe what they say about education and academic freedom. I am not saying that they do not utilize the rationale of academic freedom to obtain license when and where they desire it. This they most certainly do, for their policy is one of expedience."

Buckley's thesis is that universities, whether they admit it or not, do conform to what he terms an "orthodoxy", that there are limits within which faculty members must keep their opinions if they wish to be "tolerated". And then he says:

"Now these limits are very wide indeed, and they are limits prescribed by expediency, not by principle. My task becomes, then, not so much to argue that limits should be imposed, but that existing limits should be narrowed."

I do not like Buckley's book, nor his thesis. It is disturbing, but perhaps significant, that such a book should appear at this time. Living in his own world of absolute personal values Buckley may naturally want to see those values spread as widely as possible. Yet there will be few who will agree with him that we should move in on the universities and turn them into institutions that are little better than propaganda mills, no matter how right the propaganda might seem to us.

What Buckley seems to fail to understand in his rush to rid Yale (and presumably other universities) of those who do not agree with his own narrow interpretation of the truth, is that the values and standards of a society should at all times remain open to change, so that when significant portions of the population see a better way of doing something, or a more satisfactory way of belief, those changes may manifest themselves. And in democratic societies the job of the universities as I understand it, is one of giving a man the methods to work to improve his society, rather than a rigid set of values and beliefs which it will become his main task to propagate.

Perhaps, as Buckley seems to believe, our greatest strength is our greatest weakness. But with Yale's former president, Charles Seymour, many will prefer to "seek the truth and endure the consequences", knowing that the "truth" is an elusive kind of thing, and the "consequences" often explosive. Buckley is described by his publisher as an "eloquent spokesman for the new generation of conservatives — the 'new radicals' on the university scene". He has also been called a "black reactionary". God and Man at Yale tends to bear out the epithet rather than the advertising.

Ave Atque Vale

The first issue of Vic's College Magazine, Acta Victoriana, came out yesterday morning with an excellent new cover by Bev. Pearson and a restful lay-out that make it a pleasure to read. Although we think that lower-case type should have been used on the Table of Contents when it was used so extensively throughout the magazine, who are we to quibble if the contents themselves are as refreshing and easy on the eye as the lay-out is at first glance? Let's dig in with both feet and find out!

John Finlay's Editorial keeps an even balance between facts and speculation. It is a straightforward presentation of the state of extra-curricular activities around the university and it is not written from the lofty perch of some ivory tower far removed from the cries of men. So too, Walt Stewart's article, The University and Society, keeps its nose to the ground and deals with the business at hand in an earnest and intelligent way that leads us to cite this article as the best in the whole issue. Can this be the same guy who wrote that zany letter to The Varsity not so very long ago? Anyway on to Marg. World's-of-interest-to-Vic-people article, Prof's Away, which brings the professors back in the limelight even though some of them tried to escape, for the summer at least.

The contributions to the Fiction, Poetry, Books and Drama section are good, but it is quite obvious that Acta is coasting along on the talents of three or four people who have been with them for some time. Chuck Rea has a lot of words at his command but sometimes we question the use to which they are put. We've just never had a wave slap us disinterestedly, or something. Joyce Upshaw's contribution is good in parts but quite a letdown here and there, especially in the second stanza of her poem. Ricky Arnold's idea in Old Burwash is entertaining, but the second half of the story is far superior to the pea incident. Jo' Boyd's In Loco Parentis unfolds skilfully and has a nice, soft, unhurried touch. All these contributors will be familiar to last year's Acta readers and the only new name is that of Jean Little. Miss Little's poems show promise, to use an old cliché and Acta is considerably richer for her contributions. Finally, William Glenesk does his usual competent job in a description of the present state of Hart House Drama.

Other feature contributions toe the line and we think it no small accomplishment that the first issue of Acta has no glaring errors in taste or use of English from start to finish — whoops, we just turned the final page and darnit, there it is — we do object to try somewhere else. We believe it is a crime against the VCU to go to all the trouble that a college magazine involves and then to have even the tiniest bit of space thrown away for nothing. Whaddya mean, WE expect the world for free!

Half Century Survey Of American Literature

The Modern Novel in America 1900-1950 by F. J. Hoffman, Saunders & Co., 1951, $4.00.

The American Publishing House of Henry Regnery & Company has undertaken to publish a series of studies on literature in the United States from 1900 to 1950. Drama, Poetry, Short Fiction, Non Fiction, The Novel and the New Criticism will each be treated in separate books by men who are authorities in these particular fields. This series is distributed in Canada by R. J. Saunders and the first one to come to our attention is F. J. Hoffman's treatment of the modern novel.

Now this book is probably the least exciting of the series, because the novel in America has been adequately presented before in critical treatises on the subject and the study of the American novel follows a generally accepted path. James leads the way as the one great conscious craftsman that America has produced in the field of the novel. His fall from favor in the face of a new generation which believed that his scope was limited reaches its lowest ebb with the publication of Dreiser's Sister Carrie in 1900.

Dreiser emerges as the father of the new naturalism and exponent of an observational type of writing which believes in putting everything in. The first two decades of the century produced all kinds of novels devoted to putting everything in in the belief that when the whole picture is shown, it becomes obvious to everyone that the 'have-nots' are suffering grave injustices at the expense of the fortunate few whose parents glided through the pages of Henry James.

Naturalism served time for a social cause but the first-rate writers who appeared in the twenties owed very little to that tradition. Hemingway and Fitzgerald, the two writers who will stand the test of time, were spiritual children of Gertrude Stein, and Miss Stein was far more interested in the way people wrote than she was in the material with which they dealt. Prof. Hoffman's chapter on Miss Stein fills in a gap which is often ignored by writers on the history of the modern American novel, and this section, along with the chapters devoted to Faulkner, Hemingway and Fitzgerald mark the high points of The Modern Novel in America.

The writers of the thirties, Farrell, Steinbeck, Dos Passos once more plunge us back into the social scene and although each of them has at least one monument that will last— Studs Lonigan trilogy, Grapes of Wrath and U.S.A., the output of these writers is uneven in quality. Moving into our own period, Prof. Hoffman covers the war, race-prejudice and homosexual themes which make up the present fiction offerings. The treatise ends with the usual plea for writers 'who have both something to say and a clear notion of the best way of saying it.'

Whiff of Romance In Morgan Novel

"A Breeze of Morning," by Charles Morgan Macmillans, 1951, $2.25.

"A Breeze of Morning" is a reflective novel, the story of a confusion in love reviewed in middle age by the narrator who observed it as a young boy. David Harbrook is trying for a scholarship to Eton at the beginning of the book, and the love affairs he witnesses run concurrently with his own struggles with Greek and Latin. He is a sensitive, intelligent boy, fascinated by classics as a subject and by the shenanigans of his elders, amorous and otherwise. He is an admirable narrator, shrewd yet wondering, childish, yet with a tremendous sense of duty. He plays little part in the development of the love-story, even though one of the protagonists is his sister Ann.

The Harbrooks' cousin, Howard Treladdin, has come to live with them. He and Ann fall in love, but when Rose Letterby, the squire's daughter, returns from the continent, Howard speedily switches girl-friends. This may all seem nonsensically Edwardian, but the book is often too sensitive psychologically to keep from probing deep into love. It is also an enchanting portrait of the mind of an imaginative young boy. As a rule however, the characters are lightweight, the story pleasant and the treatment decidedly turn-of-the-century.

Because we have seen many of the situations and characters in older novels, most of the book's interest and originality lie in David Harbrook. The people he observes may be ordinary, but in David's eyes they begin to play parts, to take on the impressions of an imaginative personality. Dick Featherford becomes unlikeable because David sees him as a clod. Rose Letterby is interesting because she is the young scholar's first adoration. We see her within an atmosphere of enchantment because she has bewitched David. Often their actions don't bear out his impressions, but his descriptions gain them interest.

A Breeze of Morning may not be representative Morgan — he is often accredited with a mysticism absent from this novel — but it is a highly reasonable romance.

Germaine Clinton.

Varsity Professor Is Birdwatcher

"Carolina Quest" by Richard M. Saunders University of Toronto Press, 1951, $3.50.

Professor Saunders of the History Department has written a short account of a bird-watching trip he took with one of his students in June, 1936, to South Carolina. Readers whose interest in ornithology does not extend beyond the "Indoor Bird-Watchers Manual" will doubtless be lost when they encounter names like "boat-tailed grackle," "white-eyed Trohees," and "Acadian fly-catcher" in the pages of Carolina Quest, yet anyone who is at all interested in bird life will be immediately impressed with the colourful and accurate way in which Prof. Saunders has described the birds which he and his friend encountered on their trip.

The rare moments of great excitement when a bird like the painted bunting or an ivory-billed woodpecker is sighted by these two ornithologists will hardly be appreciated except by other bird enthusiasts who know what it is to wait for hours for one or two precious glimpses of a rare beauty. However, the sustained quality of Prof. Saunders' prose makes Carolina Quest a short but enjoyable account which will appeal to many who are not necessarily ardent bird watchers.

The last chapter in the book tells of many occasions when birds from the south have been driven as far north as Toronto and even as far again as Haileybury due to storms or over-population of birds south of the border as in the case of the cardinal. Prof. Saunders believes that the number of birds winging their way north has been on the increase in the past fifteen years and finds the most satisfactory explanation for this in the fact that we are going through what meteorologists call a warm-weather cycle and our climate is becoming more suited to these birds.

In closing we would like to mention the twelve wood engravings of birds which accompany Prof. Saunders' text, done by Sylvia Hahn of the Royal Ontario Museum staff. These engravings are very well done and contribute to the attractive make-up of Carolina Quest.

Four Blues Make All-Stars

Masterson - Obeck Tie As Top Gridiron Coaches

By MAL CRAWFORD

Varsity placed ten men on the Inter-collegiate sportswriters' and coaches' all-star team four on the first string and six on the second string. In addition, Bob Masterson was tied with Vic Obeck for the sportswriters' selection of Coach of the Year. McGill and Queen's each placed three men on the first team, and Western placed two, while McGill got four men on the second string and Western three.

Reg Ort, who has played tackle and centre for J. P. Metras for four years now, edged out Al Dancy and Bob McLellan in what was very nearly a three-way tie for the centre nomination. Ort was one of the four first stringers who returned at Western this year. He missed a couple of games this year because of a leg injury, and his absence in these was very noticeable in the reduced effectiveness of the Mustang's secondary.

Wally Kowal is another veteran lineman, who has been an outstanding guard for three seasons with McGill. Built somewhat along the lines of a spark plug, Kowal, 5'7" and 200 pounds, is a hard chunk to move out of the way.

Marshall Hames has concluded his short stay at Varsity — he graduates this year — from pass arts — but has become in two years with the Blues the best guard in Canadian college football, in our opinion. At 5'10" he weighs a solid 217 and can move faster than most lighter linemen.

Bill Pullar of McGill was a unanimous choice at tackle. Pullar plays right tackle offensively and linebacker on the defensive. A former Calgary Stampeder, the 6'2" 205 pound lineman has usually been McGill's best lineman both ways. John Evans, Varsity's left tackle, completes an injury-ridden career of four years with the Blues as he graduates from Meds this year. Big John, 6'4" and 200 pounds, has held up the Blue line defensively on many occasions this past four seasons.

Doug McNichol, 6'4" 205 pound Mustang end, has been cited as a man able to play for any team in this country. His defensive play against Varsity was outstanding, and he is a pretty fair pass receiver too. Harry Lampman, Queen's end, has played on Queen's teams which have been noted for their good ends for several years.

Geoff Crain, McGill was a unanimous choice at quarterback. McGill under his generalship and passing arm has been the most pass-minded team in the league. Another unanimous choice is Queen's Ross McKelvey. This little (155 pound) halfback was a consistent gainer with a weak blocking team.

Nearly unanimous was the choice of Varsity fullback Steve Oneschuk. Oneschuk, a freshman, was the league's leading ground gainer. The other backs were Bob Dale, Toronto back who led the scoring with five touchdowns, and Queen's Jack Roberts, who missed most of the season due to injuries.

Toronto's Al Dancy and McGill's Bob McLellan were tied for second string centre. Two Western players are the guards, Milt Cork and Jack Wyatt. Western also holds one of the tackle positions, Bob McMonagle, and Varsity's Joe Harris (in our opinion the best defensive tackle in the league) is the other.

McGill's Jim Mitchener and Toronto's Al Brown are the ends on the second team. Quarterback choice was Alex Lawson.

Toronto placed two other backfielders on the second team, Bill Bewley and Bill MacFarlane. MacFarlane, like Lawson, would probably have received far more prominent mention if the selections had been made after Saturday's game.

Western's Murray Henderson and McGill's Frank Findlay are the other backs.

Senior Skule Wallops Meds 6-0

The Senior SPS football squad kept alive their playoff hopes yesterday as they handed the Meds I crew a 6-0 setback on the back campus. The win gives the Engineers four points and brings them within one point of the second place UC team. But they must face both UC and Victoria in the final two games of the season, and need two wins to clinch a spot in the post-season games.

The big difference in the play in yesterday's contest was on the line, where the Skulemen were too much for the inexperienced Medicos.

Led by the hard tackling of end Don Kerr, the Engineers' line completely bogged down their opponents' ground attack and forced the Medsmen to take to the air. The Skule team, on the other hand ran through the Meds line at will racking up ten first downs on line play.

The Engineers put on two drives which showed them to be the superior team. One in the first half took them from their own 35 all the way to the Meds 12. But the Red and Black line tightened up and on third down Kerr attempted a field goal which went wide.

The Skulemen got rolling again in the third quarter and this time went all the way. Gaining possession on their own twelve, they ran the ball for a touchdown on eight plays. They were helped by penalties to Meds for having too many men on the field on two different occasions, and the Doctors were forced to play a man short for almost six minutes, and it was at this time that the Engineers made their touchdown drive.

Bob Ella was the one wso carried the ball over for the major, but he was helped in the march by Karl Snider and Kieth Mowat. Each of the three turned in a fifteen yard run to bring the ball up to the two, from where Ella plunged it over. The convert attempt was wide, but Meds were offside. Kerr made sure on the second try with a high one right between the posts.

Meds opened up with passes in a desperate attempt to get back into the ballgame. They threw thirteen in the last half, completed five. The last one, with about two minutes to go, was from Wheeler on the Meds 47, to Copolino on the Skule 25, and he ran it to the ten before being brought down.

Wheeler threw another to Samis who took it on the five and carried it over. But the major was called back as Meds were offside on the play.

Ella was the star of the Skule team, turning in a good running and blocking performance, while Beattie, Riddell and Lietch were good up front. For the losers, Wheeler played well at quarter, while King and Bollard turned in good tackling jobs.

Waterpolo Season Starts In A Month

Waterpolo will be off to a splashing start in less than a month. Practices have been most vigorous and demanding for the past full month. As any player will tell you, dinner means nothing to such enthusists who are to be found porpoising about in the pool between 5:30 and 7:00 p.m., Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday.

Coach Bob Dunstan, who played on and coached Varsity championship waterpolo teams as an undergrad, assures us that the ideal player should be an even cross between a bull in a china shop and a trained seal. Speed, power in shooting, checking, and a keen sense of timing, all in the water, make waterpolo the fast hard sport it is.

Several of last year's championship team are back upon which the 1 team s built. Such standouts as the Rosen brothers, hil and Larry, Norm Mortimer, Bernie Langer, will again power the Varsity attack. Bill Buik, Bob McKenzie, Doug Carnahan are coming up from last year's junior squad. Several outstanding newcomers are also working in, such as Hart Robins, The new "stone wall" goalie and "push shot" Hackbourn on the forward line.

The Blue waterpolo has a long tradition of championships to uphold. Varsity has won the Herschorn Trophy for the past four years straight. Up Varsity — Drown McGill.

Sportswoman

OCE was the scene of the only basketball game played last night as St. H's Sr's and PHE III's met in a battle which proved to be a real thriller. At the end of the first half the Saint's led by 11 to 10 over the "Amazon Girls" but the second half saw the awakening of the latter and the final score gave the story, with Phys. Eds. on top, 32 to 21. Sharing honors for the winners were high scorers Enid Walmsley and June Plant with 10 points each, while Jane Rogers and Joan Stirling starred for St. H's with 8 apiece.

Pitching Sportshoes

On the Soccer scene yesterday, Sr. SPS whipped Sr. Vic. by the score of 4 to 1 on the credit of two goals by Kahn and one apiece by Chippendale and Seljak. A hard-pressing S.P.S. III team edged the lagging Architects 1-0 on a goal by Kelly. On the same greasy field Emmanuel blanked Sr. Meds. by a 2-0 score on a goal by Snowdon and a free kick by Vanstone.

Looking to the Volleyball scene St. Mike's beat Trinity B's and U.C. VI won over Vic. III. The Lacrosse game between S.P.S. II and U.C. was cancelled yesterday.

Wortman Comes In First As Blues Take Harrier

The Varsity Harrier team won the cross country championship for the sixth straight time since the war at McGill Saturday, Chuck Wortman coming in first to go down as individual winner. Varsity and McGill are the only teams that generally compete in this Intercollegiate sport on the senior level, but Royal Military College, Guelph Aggies, and Western also entered teams in the meet this year.

Varsity had a score of 26½ to take the meet by a considerable margin. RMC was second, OAC third, Western fourth, and McGill a poor fifth Wortman's winning time was 26 minutes 0.0 seconds, fast running for the 4.7 mile course. Behind him, Gord Rintoul tied for second with an RMC man and Bud McCurry was fourth. Rintoul is in his first year of harrier running and put on a very promising performance. McCurry, who has been running Intermediate in past years, also did a fine job upon making the Senior team.

George McMullen came in seventh, and Murray Gaziuk put on a sprint to come in twelfth to beat McGill's best distance man, Farrel Hyde. McGill did not place anyone in the first half of the 25 man field.

The Intermediate team goes to London this Wednesday to meet teams from Western and OAC.

Woodsmen, Trinity In Six-All Deadlock

By GERRY HOLLYER

Forestry and Trinity renewed their gridiron feud yesterday on a field which, although greasy, was in remarkably good shape considering the pounding it took from old man weather last week. In a contest in which tempers flared repeatedly (on several occasions fights were narrowly averted) the two teams battled to a 6-6 tie. Mainly on the merits of a Forestry team who refused to give up, but fought till the closing gun, was the tie achieved, for although they dressed scarcely more than one squad, they repeatedly witheld the attack of the double platoon system used by Trinity.

The first quarter went scoreless, as Forestry dominated the play due to some tricky running by Eddie Marcus and Waddell's pass receiving ability. The Woodsmen were also aided by a fifteen yard penalty to Trinity for roughing the kicker. The second quarter was almost a copy of the first, with one exception, it was Trinity all the way. Taking advantage of a penalty to Forestry, for roughing the kicker, the Buttery Boys moved right downfield on long gains by Steedman and Lawson. Finally, deep in the Woodsmen's zone, Doug Andison tossed a pass to Harry Meredeth who romped over the goaline unmolested. Andison hoofed the convert to give Trinity a 6-0 lead.

The third frame opened with Trinity being penalized for playing thirteen men, so with one man short their attempted kick was blocked by Forestry and "Foxy" Clark of the Greenshirts recovered the ball on the Trinity ten. Booth lugged the ball over on the next play but Eddie Marcus' attempted convert was no good. The play was even throughout the rest of the quarter and except for an eighteen yard sweep by Trinity's Tom Thomas, it resolved mainly into the old "two bucks and a kick" routine, with the Boys in Black showing a little more strength.

As the sun went down and the wind whipped across the campus the fourth quarter brought a good deal of fumbling, but the Woodchoppers sharpened up their defence and held the smoother Trinity club, time and time again to very little gain. Facing their fourth straight defeat, the Forestry boys tackled and blocked with renewed vigor. Tempers flared up and on two occasion the referees had to stop play to warn the boys about rough play. The last minute of play was a stirring sight as the determined Forestry crew marched to the Trinity 35 yard line with a varied attack of bucks and passes as well as being helped by a roughing penalty called on Trinity. That brought back memories of the Grey Cup game when John McLelland hoofed a long kick to the Trinity deadline on the last play of the game to give Forestry a tie with the first place Trinity team.

The Cat's Pajamas

Cutest

In all good faith, The Varsity sponsored a cat photo contest to find the cutest and most repulsive creatures of cats on the campus. First prize, a tin of cat food, goes to the Champus Cat for this charming self portrait. Champus' comments on other winners are: "Second cutest over there to your right looks like the cat's pyjamas to me. C. M. Watson, II UC, took it . . . God Bless Her. Most repulsive, at the lowest possible point of the page, is just the sort of sleeky, slinky creature I wouldn't like to meet on a dark back fence. She is the work of Evelyn Linton, IV Vic."

Honorable Mention

The judges longed to give this excellent photograph a prize, but couldn't conscientiously classify it as either cute or repulsive. Also by Evelyn Linton.

Apathetic Average

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Lotos-Lulled

Red invaders from Mars would be a spectacular thing, and would raise all kinds of alarms. Initialitis is not spectacular. It is a crawling, malignant thing that gnaws its way into our lives with no fanfare but with terrifying associations.

It all began, we believe, with President Roosevelt's New Deal, when government departments were conceived, born and named in mass quantities, and their names abbreviated for the sake of wieldiness. Similarly on this campus. We have the IRC, the EAC, NFCUS, ISS, WUS, with many et cetera.

The effect is to give the average citizen the feeling that something has been established, something powerful, something he must accept and dare not fight. A committee is set up one day and initialized the next. The ordinary joe only knows that there is a ZXZ, and who is he to doubt its legitimacy?

As a tool of bureaucracy, or of any organization for that matter, the initial could have fantastic lulling effects. A headline in a recent issue of The Varsity declared, in part, "SAC OK'S NFCUS IAC". Granted it was written as half joke, but the question remains: What does it mean? And who among the reading public will take the trouble to find out? Will it not be easier just to skip over the item?

Initials scare the reader away. By using them, a publisher can say practically whatever he wants, confident in the thought that the reader will not go past the initials in the first line.

The initial device is as frightening in its implications as is the slogan. Many are the men who have played sheep in the follow-the-leader game of existence, bewitched by slogans like "The War to End All Wars", "The Forgotten Man", "The Greatest Happiness of the Greatest Number" . . . even "Don't be Half Safe."

Some of the slogans may be for irreproachable causes. But their effect is to provide a catchword that can be clung to and quoted, in the absence of real thought.

Lotos nectar lulled the lotos eaters into a dream of thoughtlessness and vague contentment. Are the initial and the slogan doing the same to us?

Comment

Friday's issue of The Varsity contained an editorial deploring the inadequacy of the University of Toronto library facilities. Monday's issue contained the welcome news that $500,000 has been donated towards the construction of a new library building. . .

. . . In reporting the falling block episode that could have taken the life of Princess Elizabeth recently, The Evening Telegram reported the weight of the block as 100 lbs. The Toronto Daily Star listed it as 200 lbs. Similar discrepancies can be noted in their current electioneering.

INITIALS

The Student's Guide

For your convenience, we seek to clarify some of the initials commonly met around the University of Toronto. Clip this and save it. You may need it.

ASGA: Annesley Student Government Association. For the ladies at Vic.
ATL: Admit to lectures: The little card you got when you registered. Invaluable.
AVA: All Varsity Aid. A campaign that raised a lot of money last year to help out our fellow students in Asia. Where is it this year?
CCF: Canadian Commonwealth Federation. A political club.
COTC: Canadian Officers Training Corps. For young men who want to be army officers. Also a drill hall at 119 St. George St.
EAC: A branch of the SAC that looks after the U of T's relations with the outside world. It has two main branches under it that look after the ISS and NFCUS.
IAC: International Affairs Commission. A branch of NFCUS that looks after what it says it looks after.
IRC: International Relations Club. "Attempts to fix the attention of students to those underlying principles of international conduct, international law and to international organization which must be agreed upon and put into action if a peaceful civilization is to be achieved." Brings speakers, conducts discussion groups, etc.
ISS (WUS): International Student Service (World University Service). Conducts a program "devoted to international education and university welfare." One of the most important of the university organizations that you will meet.
IUS: The International Union of Students. Ostensibly the only "international" students organization. Communist controlled. Has been for many years a highly controversial subject among Canadian students. NFCUS (see below) has thought about it but never become a member.
JCR: Junior Common Room. At UC (see below), a place to rest, get cokes, sleep, etc. The UC Literary and Athletic Society Executive hangs out there.
KCR: King Cole Room. Local oasis at Bloor and Avenue Road. Not to be confused with the JCR (see above). If patronized, be prepared to prove your age (21 and up).
LGMB: Lady Godiva Memorial Band. A group of engineers with musical enthusiasm. Their repertoire includes "Godiva Was A Lady", "John Brown's Body" and The Queen's Song.
LPP: Labor Progressive Club. A political club.
M & P: Mathematics and Physics. An arts course.
NFCUS: National Federation of Canadian University Students. You are a member. Twenty cents of your SAC (see below) goes to support NFCUS. Almost all Canadian students from the University of British Columbia to Dalhousie University belong, with Queen's a notable exception.
PC: Progressive Conservatives (club). A political group.
PHE: Physical and Health Education. A course. The girls are healthy but lovely. The boys are healthy.
RK: Religious Knowledge. (This listing for a friend who spent years thinking that RK meant Archaeology.)
SAC: The Students' Administrative Council. Main student governing body. Its makeup and activities are listed on pages 21-26 of the Students' Handbook.
SGLIRPB: Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry Regimental Parade Band. A group of "musicians" from Vic.
SCM: The Student Christian Movement. See page 86 of the Students' Handbook.
SPS: School of Practical Science. Affectionately known as "Skule."
UC: University College. A liberal arts college.
UNTD: University Naval Training Division. For those who wish to pursue naval training during their undergraduate carrer.
UTDU: University of Toronto Debating Union. It debates things.
VCU: Victoria College Union. Student Government at Vic. A model organization.
VCF: Varsity Christian Fellowship. A group of students who foster faith through social and other activities.
WUA: The Women's Undergraduate Association. For the ladies (!) of UC (see above).

OUR READERS WRITE

Vive Les Carabins

Editor, The Varsity:

It was gratifying to see that most of your suggestions on the Carabin week-end, which appeared in your recent editorial, have already been incorporated in our plans for Carabin Week-end '51.

Students participating in Carabin Week-end will find what you call "a better approach to the Carabin week-end", when they attend the first serious meeting of the group on Friday, Dec. 7th at 2:45 p.m. in the Vic Alumni Hall. The topic under discussion is a comparison of the system of education in Quebec and in Ontario. We are planning to have as speakers a student and a faculty member from each university; the student is to give a brief factual description of the educational system in his province, the faculty member to discuss the aims, history and traditions behind this system.

The students will then be divided into five or six smaller discussion groups. Then for the last hour of the afternoon, the groups will join again for final general discussion. All interested students are invited to attend this meeting. The day at Caledon Hills, scheduled for Saturday, will provide an intimate and casual atmosphere for a more general airing of views.

However the social aspects of Carabin week-end must not be minimized or forgotten, for casual social encounter contributes a great deal to mutual understanding. A party on Friday evening at the home of Margaret Fleming and the square dance on Saturday evening should do much to cement friendly relations.

Class announcements and posters have brought more than twice the number of applications from students required, but we would welcome more applications from professional faculties. All applications must be in by Thursday, Nov. 15.

Finally I would like to correct the statement in your article concerning the date of the first week-end. The Carabins will arrive here Thursday evening, Dec 6th.

Dorothy Liebman, II Pre-Meds
Chairman, Carabin Week-end

Stalinist To Hoodlum

Editor, The Varsity:

I find myself in agreement with Drama Editor Peddie and his review of Darkness at Noon. While Peddie gives a good review of what happened in the book, he does not review the play.

Sydney Kingsley, the adaptor of Koestler's book, apparently felt that the character of Gletkin would be much too subtle for theatre audiences. Therefore he transposed Gletkin from a realistic-thinking young Stalinist to a hoodlum. And to make the transformation complete Gletkin was moulded as a Nazi storm-trooper. Granted there are many party members who are indistinguishable from Nazi storm-troopers, it was most necessary to Koestler to HAVE NO PRESSURE put on Rubashov. Rubashov's final conviction of self-guilt MUST be the result of an honest appraisal of where "communist line" thinking will end.

Given this freedom of thought, Koestler's reportage of the rise and fall of a Communist makes powerful, honest even hopeful reading. Koestler let the facts speak for themselves. Kingsley moralizes in the "propagandizing manner of both the United States and Canada".

Too bad, the play was so well done, in spite of the adaptation.

Peace And What?

Editor, The Varsity:

Until recently possibly the most abused word in the English language was the small word "love". The meaning of the word ranged through God so loved the world . . . . to maternal love . . . to he "loved" her at dawn . . . to the "loving" of apple pie a la mode.

It now appears that the preeminence of "love" is being threatened by another small word, "peace." Ever since the nations have appreciated the value of the word, "peace", as a propaganda agent, we have been bombarded with "peace" in every shape and form.

For example, in Mr. Anderson's letter in the Thursday, Nov. 8 Varsity, the word, peace, is mentioned 32 times. This seems like an awful amount of peace. It might be suggested to Mr. Anderson that it approaches an obsession with peace.

The word, "peace", standing alone, means nothing. Peace and what? Peace and slavery? Peace and imprisonment? Peace and dishonor? Peace and death

Or peace and trust? Or peace and goodwill? Or even peace and love, to couple both of these unfortunate words together.

Until Mr. Andersn can make clear what comes with his "peace", all his efforts will be in vain and all his motives suspect. Peace and what? Mr. Anderson.

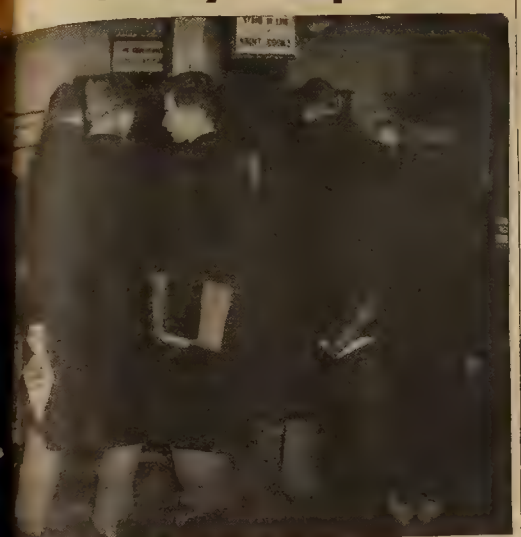
STUDENT EDITOR FIRED

Charge Leftist Tendencies, Gag-Ruling Stops Defence

Montreal (Special) — At a regular meeting of the Students' Council of the University of Montreal held Monday the editors of the student newspaper Le Quartier Latin were dismissed. The editor-in-chief, Gilles Duguay, though regularly a member of the Students Council, was not allowed to speak at the meeting.

This dismissal action was instigated at the request of a number of individual students, as well as by a delegation of student presidents of the various faculties on the campus. The final portion of the meeting was held in camera and no reasons at all were included in the motion for calling the dismissal.

In an interview with the president Jean Noel Rouleau, the McGill Daily learned there was a general feeling throughout the university that the newspaper reflected only the views of the editors and not of the student body in general. Charges of left wing tendencies were also levelled at the paper



One of the few specific issues mentioned in the discussion preceding the vote, was the criticism of the Royal Visit by the Quartier Latin. The paper devoted an entire issue to the visit of the Royal couple to the university, but several of the articles were uncomplimentary and were written in a satirical vein, The Daily reported.

This, it was felt, did not take into consideration the fact that the Royal couple were given a rousing welcome and consequently there was no sufficient justification for what was felt to be excess criticism.

When contacted by The McGill Daily last night, Duguay said that smear tactics were used to arouse opinion against him and his staff and vehemently denied that he or the paper contained any left wing leanings. Furthermore, he said that the procedure was undemocratic since he had no opportunity to defend himself at the meeting.

Only one of the editors was retained. Vivanney Therrien remains in his former position, while the new editor-in-chief is Dennis Bousquet.

Library Lineup

Every night students line up in the library to take out the books they came down early in the morning to reserve. Long lines and relatively few books are all symptoms of the overcrowded conditions of the present library. However, plans are under way for a $2,000,000 addition, which will house books relating to the Humanities and Social Sciences, while the present building will be devoted only to the professions.

Carabiners Support Russ Visit

Montreal (Special) — Unanimous approval of a plan to bring a group of Russian students on a visit to Canada, was given by the students' council of the University of Montreal Monday night. The University of Montreal delegation at NFCUS conference in London voted in favor of the motion there. Two hundred students attended the meeting.

Lawmen Veto Soviet Visit Fear National Body Schism

The question of whether Russian students should be brought to Canadian universities, received a definite answer from the school of Law which decided on Friday night that they would not be invited. The lawmen gave five reasons for their decision, the first of which was the fear that the issue might result in a serious split amongst the universities belonging to the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS).

So far Victoria, Emmanuel, and Music have voted in favor of the visit. Trinity has approved the priniciple of the visit and will decide tonight who they believe should sponsor the trip and what form the trip should take. Medicine and St. Mike's have voted against the visit in council sessions, with a general vote scheduled later for St. Mike's. It is likely that most of the other faculties and colleges will have general votes before the end of next week as requested by the External Affairs Commission of the SAC.

Law Society Secretary Jack Waite gave other reasons for his Society's decision besides the danger of the split amongst the Canadian universities. One was that in view of the increasing activity of NFCUS in promoting worthwhile projects amongst Canadian students, such a division would destroy the future completion of these activities. Another reason was that NFCUS now asks each 20 cents a year and to increase this cost to cover such exchange expenses might drive out some additional members.

NFCUS should continue to be the leader in attempting to arrive at some understanding on a top level, the Lawmen felt. By successful culmination of an agreement with the International Union of Students, the effect would be deeper and of greater benefit in promoting East-West relations, they said.

The last reason given by the School of Law in vetoing the visit of the Russian students was that they felt NFCUS should be given support in what has been called "the most ambitious program" it has attempted since the war.

Masthead Meeting

There will be a meeting of the masthead today in the Editorial office at one o'clock. All editors should make a special effort to attend this meeting.

SHARE Is Here For Asian Relief

From January 14 to 18 next year the students at the University of Toronto will be asked to donate a total of $11,000 to SHARE. This is the objective of this year's campaign to raise money for students in need. SHARE stands for "Student Help to Asian Relief and Education." As last year the main portion of the funds to be administered by the International Student Service (World University Service) will be directed to Asian universities.

Chairman of this year's campaign is Tim Armstrong, II Vic. He will work with a committee of about six people, he said in his report to the External Affairs Commission last night at its meeting, which will do all the organization and planning. Another special group of about seven people will go around to the different colleges and faculties to sell the campaign and solicit their support.

The assembly representing responsible representatives of each college and faculty used for the All-Varsity Aid campaign last year, will be abolished. Instead the focus of the campaign will be on personal canvass working through the college and faculty student governments and using their year and course structure, he said. Reason for not using the special campaign assembly is to prevent an "unwieldy body of campaign officials". Personal canvass also will involve a large number of students working on the campaign.

In his report Armstrong stressed that the personal campaign would be the main source of funds because of complaints last year about the duration of the drive and various means by which students were hit for contributions.

However, he said that colleges, faculties and campus clubs will be asked to run some of their normal events for the benefit of the campaign. The main emphasis will be placed on these events, while the publicity for the proceeds to the campaign will be as unobtrusive as possible. This is another method to stem some of the resentment from last year that students were being canvassed more than once.

Official publicity for the campaign will be handled by special branch of the committee, he said, "since unofficial reporting tends to be inaccurate or out of spirit with the campaign."

No comment was offered on exactly who would get the money, what they would get and how much. Armstrong explained that the committee had not had enough time to decide on these points but added that a clearcut presentation of them would be used as a basis for the campaign.

This campaign will also coincide with the national ISS(WUS) drive for funds as recommended at the annual ISS(WUS) conference held recently at Hamilton.

Coincident with the student campaign, money will also be solicited from the faculty and private businesses.

N. Geneer Bailed Out Skulemen Successful

Flanked by an escort of the Loyal Cannon Guard, N. Geneer was triumphantly carried from the Hart House Tower Dungeon amid the cheers of crowds of Skulemen on the stroke of one yesterday. Geneer was released on bail after the men of Skule had collected sufficient empty bottles at the stadium to pay the court. The release was accompanied by a blast from the Skule cannon which shook several Artsmen standing about.

N. Geneer is the defendant in a case of attempted murder, which arose when Gloria May Swansong was wounded when a detonator exploded under the law school float on the Homecoming Weekend. In spite of repeated protestations of his innocence by friends, he was taken into custody last Thursday afternoon by Officers working in conjunction with the All-Varsity prosecutor's office. He is further charged with wilful and malicious damage and engaging in "hell-raising" acts.

Decrying this intimidation of the officers of the law, the All-Varsity prosecutor warned that this demonstration by Skule might be the forerunner of serious new depredations which would certainly be prosecuted with the full vigor of the law.

Geneer could not be reached directly for a statement as he is currently regaining his strength at the KCR after the ordeal. A friend of his said that the effect of living on bread and water over the week-end had left him in a weakened condition and there was fear that rickets and malnutrition would set in.

"He couldn't sleep at night because of the rumble of the rolling turnips filling the bunkers with the Great Hall's winter supply. The roaring of Tattle Creek as it poured through its underground caverns nearby upset his sensitive mind."

Rod Drill, Geneer's roommate, quoting him as saying: "The loneliness was maddening. The only living creature I saw the whole week-end was the little man who came down to wind-up the carillon." Questioned as to the unusual excitement among the group attending Geneer, Drill said that by a fortuitous stroke of fate, Geneer has found carved on the stone wall of the dungeon Skule's long-lost formula for Brewohol Palpitate.

This was a home-made remedy for almost anything which had been lost after prohibition. Some of the prime ingredients include nitro-propane for zip, added to a base of fermented turnip juice. Experimental dashes of benzedrine and crank case oil were recommended for flavor and body.

Some of the details of the process involving evaporation, precipitation, coagulation and delapidation were missing but a crack team of chemists is working to restore the missing operations. This should put the L.C.B.O. out of business, Drill said.

Eager research of some historical-minded Skulemen showed that the inscription must have been written there in the time of Warden Liquorbreath. There is an old recorded case of a Skuleman who was sentenced to the dungeons for life for entering the Great Hall without his coat on.

Definite News Writing Policy Demanded By SPS Motion

President Doug Sherk of the Engineering Society was requested last night by the Society to present a motion before the Students' Administrative Council requesting a specific policy in writing from The Varsity on news reporting and publicity. The Society asked for this statement so that it would be available for anyone interested and did not ask that the motion should be ratified by the SAC.

A report from the tuck shop committee recommending that automatic vending machines serving coffee and other goods should be installed in the smoking room in the basement of the Engineering Building was unanimously passed. The Engineering Society intends to re-decorate the smoking room so that it can be used as a modified tuck shop and plans to have the automatic machines as a temporary measure. The proposed tuck shop was described by Paul Hutchinson, producer of Skule Nite, as "a bookstore without any books".

Hutchinson reported that Skule Nite was sold out for the first show on Friday and for the second show on Saturday, with tickets on sale for the entire campus at Hart House.

Hans Lundberg, Swedish geologist and geophysicist, has definitely stated that he will be able to speak at the annual Skule dinner on Dec. 5. Lundberg is the founder and head of Lundberg Explorations which has discovered two of the largest iron deposits in the world, in Sweden and in Labrador. He has made the news in the past for using a helicopter in geophysical exploration and for using geophysical methods to discover archaeological remains.

Skule will discuss the question of the proposed visit of Russian students to Canadian universities at a general meeting, probably early next week. The External Affairs Commission of the SAC had asked that a vote should be taken on the question at a general meeting of the students in the various colleges and faculties.

If . . .

. . . we had a Student Union Building, photographers of grad portraits would not have to travel all over the campus.

Nazi War Training Near Miss – Stacey

"Because they were a nation of soldiers who had studied the business of war more seriously than we ever dreamed of the Germans came very close to winning the war before it was well started," said Colonel C. P. Stacey in a talk to the Modern History Club last night on "The Second World War from German Sources." Colonel Stacey is the Director of the Historical Division at Canadian Army Headquarters and a former Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity.

He described himself as being "stored in a warehouse along with three floors of documents" most of which are records from the highest level in the German army, up to and including Hitler's headquarters. There, he said, were the real contemporary sources rather than the memoirs and histories now being written from memory by German officers, usually for a fee. "One sentence scrawled on a piece of paper on the eve of the battle is worth two or three thousand words written even a week later" he declared.

Among the most interesting documents, according to Colonel Stacey, are the telephone logs of conversations between Hitler and his subordinates, and also the very excellent German maps. He said that the Germans were far more faithful and meticulous in their record-keeping than our soldiers were. As an illustration of this point he quoted the last signal sent out by the Bismark before she went down: "Send U-boat for war diary".

These records tell us of the German strength on the tactical level, he said, and that the German soldier was "brave, tenacious, ... skilful, often a fanatic or a ... but always a formidable enemy."

The two outstanding weaknesses of the Germans, he said, were that High Command dominated by Hitler, and the shortcomings of the German Intelligence. He contrasted this position of Eisenhower and the German Commander Von Rundstedt whose authority was entrenched on by Rommel below and Hitler above. The German Commander is said to have remarked on D-day: "My sole responsibility is to change the guard at my gate."

It was amazing, he said, that the Germans did not know about the raid on Dieppe. They generally gave us credit for more inteligence than we had, he added with a twinkle in his eye. However, despite the failure of the Germans to get much information out of England, they robbed us of much of the fruits of our surprises by hard fighting and superior skill, he said.

Campus Profile

Dean Bissell

Professor Bagnani of the Classics Department recently commented to me,

"Claude Bissell is an up-and-coming young man." And the latter's list of achievements is an excellent commentary on this opinion. At present Dr. Bissell's posts include acting as Assistant to the President of the University of Toronto, Chairman of the Humanities Division of the School of Graduate Studies, and Dean of University College Men's Residences.

The dignity of these posts, however, cannot dim his pride in his accomplishments as an undergraduate. He cherishes a little clipping which describes a lacrosse game. It mentions the star, discusses the various plays, and adds, "so-and-so, so-and-so, and Bissell played well".

Tall and slim, with wellbrushed black hair and a sharp little moustache, Dean Bissell has a bright sense of humour and a quick understanding. As guardian and general godfather to 64 young men, the problems he has been asked to solve range from course difficulties to the rehabilitation of ex-servicemen after the last war.

"I'm rarely used in the capacity of love trouble-shooter", the Dean ruefully said. "But it's very interesting watching the developing romances, though they are strictly outside the area where I operate."

Born in Meaford, Ontario ("a halfway-stop to Toronto for my parents when I happened to arrive"), Dr. Bissell entered University College in 1932, in the Old English and History course. He was editor of the Undergraduate (the college magazine before the current fad for conservation of name), and is the shy author of a poem printed under a pseudonym.

A year after graduation, he joined the staff of the college as a teaching-fellow in English. Then he went to Cornell for his doctorate. Two clever 19th century cartoons of Charles Darwin and Thomas Huxley which hang in his office (Huxley in a wonderful bulldog attitude) are reminders of his thesis on Evolutionary Ethics.

In 1942 Dr. Bissell, "having trained in the rigorous school of the C.O.T.C.", joined the army. He went to Europe one month after D-Day with the Argylle and Sutherland Highlanders of Canada, with whom he was stationed "for alphabetical reason". After cessation of hostilities he returned to England "ostensibly to take a course, but really to get married. I made up for the lack of Scottish blood by marrying a Scottish girl."

Then, after several months at Khaki University, [illegible] the University of Toronto. As assistant to Dr. Smith, Bissell acts as general liaison officer between the administration and the faculty and students. Since he teaches two English courses, a happy balance seems to have been worked out between his administrative and academic duties.

"Each supports the other", the Dean pointed out. "Each make different demands and act as relief to the other. Administrative work presents immediate problems needing quick solutions, and gives a feeling of accomplishment, while the academic branch works more often as a long-term endeavour."

One of Dr. Bissell's courses is on Canadian letters. "We need a new approach in the realm of Canadian culture. We ask too many rhetorical questions. We need, rather, a detailed, careful analysis of what we have. As far as needing a shot of intellectual whiskey,' he said, refering to a comment made by a French delegate to the recent International Student Seminar, "a general absence of the catastrophic revolutionary quality is part of our whole tradition. Our great qualities are compromise and reticence, and even an ironic self-depreciation."

Dr. Bissell glanced out of his office window at an unimpressive example of potential Canadian architecture, a large muddy field covered with bits of steel, paper and car tracks.

"It's not very exciting as yet," he said, "but that is the proposed location of the new School of Nursing. The view will undoubtedly improve when plans are completed."

Collectors Item

Above, Brian F. Hooper, III SPS, is seen in the Hart House Tuck Shop, drinking out of a mug which has not yet been stolen by collectors. It is supposed that the thieves use them as flower vases and shaving mugs. A number have turned up in Hart House Theatre, no doubt being used as stage properties.

Seek Council Investigation Of Fee Rise, Bursary Fund

A motion requesting the Students' Administrative Council to seek clarification of the University's policy regarding the reasons for the recent fee increase was passed at the meeting of the External Affairs Commission last night. Also included in the motion was a request that the SAC seek official clarification of the bursary system amounting to $115,000 announced at the same time as the fee increase last spring. As yet no information has been divulged about where the money is, how it is to be used and when the plan will go into effect.

The idea behind the bursary fund was to assure that no student with ability would be denied an education because of lack of funds.

Incentive for the motion presented by Joan Presant, III UC, chairman of National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) committee on this campus, came from a recent letter from the University of British Columbia. It requested co-operation from the members of NFCUS in lowering of the cost of higher education.

The NFCUS committee at UBC was mandated at the annual NFCUS conference held in September to make a survey of costs of education across the country and to present proposals for assuring equality of opportunity for higher education in Canada.

Through student action, the president of the University of British Columbia has agreed to recommend a fee decrease to the university authorities. He told the student council recently that the decrease would not equal the $30 rise announced in the spring but "will be large enough to ease the minds of the students."

Miss Presant added that through the motion, it is also hoped to discover the university's position with regard to a possible fee decrease.

The reason for requesting the SAC to obtain this information, she added, was because it is the elected and representative student governing body. As such, a request affecting all the students of this university should be made through the facilities which are already set up within it, she said.

Cheap Seats

This is a different perspective of the rugby game which gave the Blues the Yates Cup last Saturday. Although it may not be any cheaper than the seats "way up in the gods", it certainly is a novel method of sneaking in for nothing. And what a way to get around the ticket shortage for the Grey Cup finals.

Feather Fair Is Cancelled Have Direct Appeal Instead

The withdrawal of several faculties from participation in the Feather Fair (which had been rescheduled for to-day, after earlier postponement) prompted the Student Service Commissioner of the SAC, Miss Irene McLellan, to recommend cancellation of the fair.

Those students who desire to contribute to the Red Feather campus campaign might do so through their own colleges and faculties, Miss McLellan suggested. The Faculty of Medicine and Emmanuel College have already reported substantially larger sums received to date by such means than were collected in their booths at last year's Fair.

In view of the inclement weather forecast, and the conflicts with other activities which were bound to develop from further postponement of the Fair, the Executive Committee of the Students' Administrative Council agreed yesterday to the concellation of the fair in favor of the direct appeal method.

Miss McLellan expressed appreciation to the Red Feather representatives who have worked so vigorously to organize the Fair. She requested that each of the representatives make the necessary arrangements within his own faculty to facilitate the receiving of student contributions.

An excellent movie about the Red Feather services is available. Representatives desiring to use the film may get in touch with Miss McLellan.

"No, I've got to go to the bookstore for something to eat."

Coffee Expensive As Mugs Missing

Mugs are still being stolen from the tuck shop in Hart House, in spite of complaints made last year.

The manager of the tuck shop, George Marshall, has no idea how many cups have been stolen this term. "As far as I can guess," he says, "they are going as fast as ever — maybe faster".

Asked if this contributed to the increase in the price of coffee, he answered, "I'll say! These cups are 34c each, and we buy them by the gross."

Last year, several hundreds of these mugs were missing, according to Hart House officials.

It is interesting to learn just what becomes of the mugs. Some are surreptitiously thrown away after the adventure of stealing has palled, some are used in apartments and residences for drinking purposes, some even become flower vases.

If these thefts do not stop, or at least decrease appreciably, the price of coffee will inevitably keep rising, said tuck shop officials.

Early Marriages, Dowries Solution to Immorality

Early marriages are the answer to the instability of modern marriage, according to the well-known philosopher Will Durant. Durant was speaking Monday night at the first in a series of luctures at Holy Blossom Temple.

Durant also suggested that the income tax exemption for children be increased, and that it be continued as long as the child is at an educational institution.

"At the present time, there is a ten-year stretch for most men between their biological maturity and their economic maturity (that is, the time when they can support a family)", said Durant. "During this period, they fall into habits of promiscuity. Is it surprising, then, if they continue these habits into married life, and transform fornication into adultery?"

He suggested the parents give dowries to their children, so that the youngsters can afford to marry early. Durant mentioned that he had given both his son and daughter $5,000 presents at the time of their marriage, without any ill effects for the children.

By safely channeling the sexual instincts during this ten-year period, Durant believes that marriage can be placed on a much happier ground.

He added that we need not despair about the condition of our morals, since, looking at history, there was a period of moral relaxation at the peak of every civilization, as people moved from the country to the city. Durant pointed as examples to Athens, to Augustan Rome, and to the Rome of the Renaissance.

Durant analysed the changes which came about in the institution of marriage as the basic economy of our society changed from hunting to agriculture, to industry.

In the hunting stage, he said, men had to be greedy, because of the insecurity of their way of life. The death rate was high, and women had to be made mothers as often as possible. This, coupled with the primitive reverence and care for pregnant women, necessitated polygamy.

Then, as man settled down on the farms, woman changed from merely a biological to an economic asset, as she helped around the house and farm. "She provided man with a slave who did more than any slave would, at only the loss of her name," he said.

The children were also economic assets as soon as they were old enough to help with the chores. This made it profitable to have as many children as possible, Durant said.

Because of the economic cost of eight or nine children, and the equalization of the death rate of both sexes, monogamy became the dominant form in an agricultural society.

People married early to have many children. As a result premarital chastity was the custom. A strong religious belief added to the stability of these marriages, Durant added. Marriage became a sacrament. This was strengthened as the farmer watched the miracle of growth.

During the Industrial Revolution, people left the neighborliness of the small town for the anonymity of the city. They felt that they could do anything, Durant said.

Religion died, as factories and offices substituted for it the idea of mechanical cause and effect, and eventually the worship of science.

As religion declined, so did the moral code which it supported. Morality became a "calculus of expediency", he said; a matter of "Can I get away with it?"

This was aggravated by the fact that persons training for professions had to wait a long time before they could marry. "Thus the most developed persons married the latest and had the least children, while the least developed married the soonest and had the most children. The educators struggle to teach a class which tries to contracept itself out of society's bloodstream", said Durant.

L. Gilbreth To Discuss Teamwork

Dr. Lillian M. Gilbreth, heroine of "Cheaper by the Do.." and "Belles on Their Toes" will speak on "The Value of Teamwork; Its Place in Industry, Business and the Home" at the meeting of the Royal Canadian Institute to be held on November 17, at 8:15 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

Dr. Gilbreth believes that the answer to all problems facing us today seems to be teamwork, teamwork in the home, hospitals, factories, welfare work, and in fact, in all fields. According to Dr. Gilbreth, recognition of the importance of spiritual and human values must go hand in hand with scientific developments if the needs of the world are to be met.

Dr. Gilbreth was born in Oakland, California. Since her graduation of the University of California with the degree of B.Litt. she has received degrees from many of the outstanding universities in the United States. At present she is President of Gilbreth, Inc., consulting engineers in management and is a fully qualified industrial engineer and engineering consultant. She has also served on many committees and commissions including the War Manpower Commission, and the American Council on Education. She has also written a great many books on management, time study, and motion study, some in collaboration with other well-known authors.

New Courses Are Offered At Manitoba

Manitoba (CUP) — The University of Manitoba has introduced several new departments to its curriculum. These include the following: the Department of Judaic Studies which offers two courses, Modern Hebrew and Jewish History, The Manitoban reports. This new department is the only one of its kind in Canada and there are only four in the United States. The library is to receive a collection of Judaic works found in Europe after the war and which the Nazis had confiscated.

Art Review

Bayefsky

The current exhibition of Aba Bayefsky's work will hang in the Hart House Art Gallery until November 25, 1951. It consists of a number of black-and-white dry-points, three monotypes and a number of large oils.

Abe Bayefsky is, to our knowledge, the only Canadian painter whose work reflects almost exclusively a social consciousness. However, his motives are not social-political commercial or sensation-seeking, but purely human. He lived the life of an average Torontonian until he was exposed to both the active and the passive aspects of the war. Since that time he has been leading his free life again, but he could not escape from the cruelty and horror that exists in wars and in our post-war civilization.

The dry-points and monotypes show almost exclusively children (or is it only a boy?) living the strange D.P. lives. They are happy (in their own innocent way) and at the same time embody the social ills caused by war and the war-minded civilization of our times. There is something tragic even in a child walking happily on stilts—one can see that he is going to fall.

The drawings are technically simplified, but their meaning must be interpreted by each individual observer. The simplification of the child into the essence of what is no longer a child, but an embryo of a future man who will live in a world where wars and human suffering wait behind every corner, is frightening.

The oils, less subtle in their concention of a man as a skeleton are easier to digest. The series of "Recruiting Posters" and the pacifists interpretation of General Staff and other military necessities speak for themselves. Many people will disagree with his interpretation of the war and the army, but their objections must be raised on other than purely human grounds. The most striking paintings are those where the interpretation is left to the spectator. The boy with skeleton arms and contrasting butterflies — the boy playing with a skull-headed puppet—a skeleton playing Punch and Judy—these paintings take away our proverbial blinkers and make us see what we purposely avoid seeing.

All the paintings and drawings are purposely limited in technique, themes and symbolism. The repetition of these and the use of cynical humor give unification to the almost super-human appeal for sanity and humanity. The symbols—skeletons, butterflies, masks, bubbles, toys and spectacles are easily interpreted due to their universality. In the paintings, color is primarily for its psychological effects, both to accentuate the clamminess of horror and the paradoxical warmth of the otherwise frightfully cold symbol —the skeleton.

Mr. Bayefsky does not feed us phoney propaganda. He is a deeply moved person, using visual and intellectual means to convey his true concern with those darker aspects of life which tend to undermine its real happiness.

Mr. Bayefsky will discuss his own work on Wednesday, November 21 at 5:00 p.m.

Millard Talks On "Christian And Educ."

Mr. C. H. Millard, MPP, will speak in Hart House Debates Room this afternoon at 1:30. This is the third in a series of talks on the topic, "This Election and the Christian", sponsored by the chapel committee of Hart House. We will present the CCF point of view.

Mr. Millard has held a seat in the Ontario Legislature for many years. He was first elected in 1943, when he represented West York. Defeated in 1945 by a Conservative candidate, he was re-elected in 1948 and now stands for re-election in the same riding.

C. H. MILLARD

Since 1940, Mr. Millard has been National Director of the Canadian branch of the United Steelworkers Union.

Next week's speaker, the fourth in the series will be a representative of the Progressive Conservative party. These lectures have been designed to acquaint the campus with the various stands taken by those parties seeking seats in the new Provincial Government.

Mrs. Ross Will Speak To Baha'i

Mrs. Peggy Ross, Secretary of the Scarboro Baha'i Local Spiritual Assembly, and Secretary of the Ontario Teaching Committee of the Baha'is, of Canada, will speak at the open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group today at 1:10 p.m. in Room 64 of U.C. The subject of Mrs. Ross' talk today will be "WHY A NEW REVELATION".

Mrs. Ross decided to speak on this subject because many students have asked this question on other occasions. In discussing the topic yesterday Mrs. Ross said Baha'u'llah has provided within the teachings of His Revelation the means for establishing a universal welfare economy serving all people equitably.

He sauntered into the cafeteria, plunked his books in a pigeon hole, and lined up behind the rail. His topcoat was unbuttoned and hanging loosely. He nonchalantly glanced about the crowded room and his eye took in a lot of faces he had seen before, and just as many he hadn't.

Suddenly his gaze was arrested by a pair of particularly comely co-eds who were seated at a table near the pillar over towards the far wall. The little blond was real cute; he hadn't seen her around before. Not that her friend was missed out when they handed out the looks — it was just that he vaguely knew her and he had been told she was interested in a guy from Commerce.

His turn came, and he bought his coffee, picked up a spoon and sought a table near the pillar. A couple of his classmates, conveniently, were sitting only three tables away. He joined them and immediately made inquiries abolt the little blond. Nobody knew who she was, but all concurred in his already established opinion.

The talk shifted to yesterday's six-man game, then the Bombers, and this year's junior hockey picture. Our friend kept close scrutiny on the table by the pillar out of the corner of his eye. His big problem was how much approach to use, to walk right up to the girls and fake a reason for an introduction, or to bump into them on the stairs on the way out.

His course of action was decided for him when he heard the young lady who he had seen before say, "Let's go up to the tea dance". The little blond butted her cigarette, and they left, collecting the refunds on their coke bottles on the way out.

None of the other fellows were going to the tea dance—something about essays that were due the next day—and so he finished his coffee and left.

After he had tossed his coat over the stacked seats in the residence hall, he wandered over to the dance floor with deliberate ease of movement, at the same time adjusting his cashmere to make sure it gave him just the right degree of casualness. He surveyed the swaying dancers for a few moments until he saw her with a lanky Engineer.

He edged over to the spot where they would finish their dance, and when cut in for the next number. They introduced themselves and he found the reason why he hadn't seen her around before — she was from out of town, was just visiting her friend and had come out to see the campus.

They made small talk and danced the next ten dances. She told him how impressed she was with life at a big university, and how wonderful everything and everybody was, and how sorry she was she didn't go to college, but lived in a small town in southwestern Manitoba (whose name he had never heard before), and that the bus home was leaving at 11:30 that night.

Why thank you, she would be very grateful for a lift into town, and so would her girl friend, probably, except that her girl friend was living at the practice house, and thus wouldn't be going into town.

Just then she caught her girl friend's eye; the practice house inhabitant had her coat on and had to get back to help make dinner and thanks for the visit, and come back to Winnipeg soon.

He spurned the lift-seekers as he passed the bus stop, the little blonde sitting beside him at the wheel of his father's Pontiac. He took her downtown for supper, and she seemed to be more and more impressed with everything he hold her about himself.

After supper they got into the car and he headed back towards the campus, down Pembina highway. "Why are we going back out to the University?" she asked, her blue eyes wider than usual.

"The campus is really pretty at night," came his rapid reply. "It would be a shame for you to go back home without seeing it."

He parked behind the Arts building, and it didn't take long for them to stop talking, and become real friendly. After about two hours she reminded him of her bus, and he drove her to the depot. The bus left exactly at the scheduled hour, and they said their goodbyes. She was still combing her hair as it pulled out.

He walked back to the car, musing over the way he had with women. He had met her that afternoon and in a few hours she was eating out of his hand. No stopping him once he made up his mind to woo a young lady. Couldn't exactly put his finger on the reason for his success, but then why fight it?

As he drove away he looked at his gas gauge and noticed it was registering empty. He pulled into a filling station and called "Two dollars worth, please," to the attendant. He chuckled to himself at the lipstick on his handkerchief. As he reached into his pocket for his wallet, his hand froze and he straightened upright.

His wallet was gone.

Vic "Acta" Staff To Get Rings, New Director For Bob Revue

Because the Bob Revue was not incorporated in the constitution of the Victoria College Union last year, producer Terry Lawson was able to donate $20 from the show's profits to the Vic Drama Club. Social director Alec Gigeroff questioned the legality of the donation, as he did not think Lawson should be allowed to give away the show's profit on his own authority.

The status of the Bob Revue was explained by president John Devereux who said that Lawson had the right to walk off with the $100 profit as the show had not received a grant from the VCU and if the show had lost money, Lawson would have been responsible for any money owed.

Lawson recommended that a new producer for next year's show should be sought before December and moved a motion that his own resignation should take effect at the end of the meeting. His resignation had been tabled one month from the last meeting to enable Lawson, an occasional student, to stay with the Bob Revue as producer until the show was over.

The questions of honor rings and honorariums for the staff of Acta Victoriana were discussed at great length during the four hour meeting. It was finally decided to pass the expenditure of $200 for honor rings and to allow Acta to give a $20 honorarium to the managing editor.

The assembly decided to cut $25 from the 5T2 and 5T3 class grants because of the decrease in the budget, but at the same time increased by $20 the amount given to the Liberal Arts club. It was decided that the Liberal Arts club needed $20 to fulfil its program and that the club did not have any way to raise money from its members as every Vic student belongs to the club.

President Devereux said earlier in the discussion on the treasurer's report that it might be the time for the VCU to consider cutting the grants given to the various societies and to make the societies self-sufficient.

The three Christian clubs came under attack as it was stated that a VCU chapel committee had been formed because of their short-comings. The chapel committee was, in turn, criticised by one member of the assembly who stated that it should not be given a $100 for its work when the Churches of Toronto are so reduced in membership.

Lawyers Discuss Sex Abnormality

"The problem of the sexual psychopath is a live topic today and has even been written into the Criminal Code", Dr. Gray told a meeting of the Law Club last night. Dr. Gray, an assistant professor in psychiatry at the University and eminent authority on medical jurisprudence, was lecturing on the "Sexual Psychopath". After he had graduated in Medicine at Toronto he went to Osgoode Hall from which he graduated in 1935.

Dr. Gray defined sexual psychopaths as a group of people commonly called "sexual perverts" but whom he preferred to refer to as "sexual deviates". He pointed out that their conduct was only a deviation from the normal and that the psychiatrists viewed it quite objectively. "As anyone knows, who has read Kinsey, normal morality may be wider than what most people consider," the lecturer continued. "It may vary from country to country or from generation to generation."

Dr. Gray focused his talk on two aspects of the problem — the need for study of the individual offender and the flexibility in administration of justice with regard to the sentence passed. "Legislation in the past aimed at the protection of society by putting these deviates in jail," he said. "But many sex offenders are neither dangerous nor are they serious social nuisances."

The speaker went to on say that some of the "deviates" respond extremely well to medical and psychological treatment. "Imprisonment does nothing but remove him from circulation for a time," he added.

Dr. Gray spent most of his time reviewing case histories of sexual abnormality. The problem, he felt, was to divide those that can be treated from those that cannot. "The sexual psychopath is a variegated group," he said, "some are dangerous and do require to be put in penitentiaries, but some will benefit from treatment."

The part of the Criminal Code that dealt with sex offenders was criticised by the speaker. The psychiatric examination of offenders charged with an abnormal sex act as required by the Code could not be reliable in the short time called for and with no proper equipment. Secondly, the Code either sentences the offender to a long term or it provides for acquittal. "These are not the only two answers," Dr. Gray emphasized, "that is why there is such a group as ours." We try to restore the sex deviate to sexual normality, he said.

These psychiatric facilities have been going on for about 25 years, Dr. Gray added, and many magistrates in Toronto and the county of York know and are making use of them. "But", he concluded, "there are not enough of them throughout Canada."

Hockey Blues Chopped Again

The third player cut for the hockey Blues took place Monday night bringing the squad down to a more manageable size of 24. Two surprises were encountered in the release of two of last year's team, notably Bill Yeo and Doug Dies. It isn't that their hockey ability has deteriorated but rather that Coach Bill Wade has an over abundance of good forwards.

It is likely that even more of last year's team will end up playing in lower ranks this year.

Jack McKenzie heads the list of newcomers and is showing very well at centre between two veterans Erne Frey and Al Conboy. Another forward combination that is clicking well is the one with Pete Vernon and Norm Fox centred by another newcomer, Red Stevens who has returned to this country from playing in the Scottish league.

A hustling trio of last years' intermediates are still fighting for regular positions on the team. This line finds Sandy Davison at centre flanked by Rob Logie and Jim Wilkes. On Monday Wade experimented with another line composed of Bennett, Jack Weldrake, an ex-Marlboro, and Johnny Adams who has returned from football to don a pair of skates.

Jerry Henderson and Don Rope are two other forwards still to be considered. Rope, who played for St. Mike's Majors last year, is still busy with soccer but is expected to show up some time this week.

Seven defencemen are still vying for the four regular positions. Joe Kane and Gerry Fitzhenry are the only two holdovers from the 1950-51 intercollegiate champions. John Fingland, who played a couple of games for the Blues as a forward last year, has switched back to defence. Jim Machin, Paul Prendergast Fasan, and Moreau are the other hopefuls.

Wade has retained four men to guard the twine. Veteran Doug Orr and last year's intermediate goalie Jack Ross are the leading candidates for the position. However they will have to fight it out with Bruce Taylor and Gord Bates who played for Skule last year.

With the opening game less than a month away (Dec. 7th against McGill) the team is bearing down at their daily two hour practice sessions. Last week an unfortunate incident occurred when the wallets of several players were rifled and a total of $79.00 removed. As yet no trace of the money has been found, and it is not certain whether the blame can be put on some young rink rats who frequent the arena in quest of everything from pop bottles to broken sticks.

Pitching Sportshoes

Soccer finally got under way again after last week's rash of postponements, and three games were played yesterday on the still-soggy front campus. In the day's top match Trinity A blanked Sr. Vic 3-0 after running up a 2-0 lead in the first half. Rowan, Clarkson and Cater were the Red and Black marksmen.

Trinity B's were not so successful as their brethren as Pre-Meds handed them a 2-0 setback. Kramolc was the whole show for the doctors as he was responsible for both their tallies. In the day's other game Knox and Forestry battled to a 1-1 tie, both teams scoring in the first half. Kucosinski fired the lone Woodchoppers' goal while MacKinley scored for the Ministers on a penalty shot.

Lacrosse action saw SPS I outscore Vic I 11-3 to take over the lead in their group with four wins against one defeat. The Engineers' scoring was pretty well divided as Byrnes netted three and McKay, Dewar, Walkey and Cruise garnered two. Rush with two and Finch with one were the Scarlet and Gold marksmen.

The Knox lacrosse men kept rolling along as they downed Trin B 5-1 for their fifth straight win. Knox has now clinched their group championship. McPherson scored the hat-trick to pace the Clergymen, the others going to Graham and McWhinnie. The Crumpet-munchers' averted a shutout when Chalk whipped one past the Knox goalie.

The remaining gutted stick encounter saw Med V snow Pharmacy B under 11-0. Mal Urquart was the big gun for the Sawbones squad as he fired four tallies. Kerr with three and Wright with two were the other Meds high scorers.

Five volleyball games were carded. St. Mike's A turned back Jr. Vic 15-3, 16-14 and Jr. SPS took Trin A 16-14, 15-11. In an amazing reversal of form Wycliffe C won over Emmanuel B 5-15, 15-4, 15-2, while SPS III decisioned Dents A 15-3, 6-15, 15-4, and Jr. UC downed Med IV Yr. 10-15, 15-11, 15-4.

Baby Blues Play Queen's Saturday

For the first time in many years, the Western champion Varsity football Intermediates will meet the eastern champion Queen's Comets for the Eastern Canadian title. The Baby Blues will leave Toronto Friday afternoon. Kick-off time is slated for 2 o'clock Saturday.

The little Gaels lay claim to an unbeaten season in the Eastern division. The Blues were defeated twice this season. Cobourg edged them 4-0 in a pre-season tilt and OAC upset them last week 13-0. However, competition may be a little stiffer in the West. This fixture may be an indication of things to come. Perhaps Queen's finally have a team to lift them out of the doldrums.

Speaking Of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

Some things take a long time to die, but an Intercollegiate football season can kick up its heels and fade into the past in a matter of 48 hours. Less than four days ago the Blues won the Yates Cup and completed an undefeated season on the same afternoon, and yet, aside from a few die-hards in the Athletic Association and the team itself, it seems that the old football atmosphere on the campus has completely disappeared.

It seems hard to believe that 10,000 students can get themselves as wrapped up in something as they do in watching a football season roll by, and then forget the whole thing faster than you can tell about it.

Of course there are always the discussions through the winter about that tremendous tackle that Steve Oneschuk made in front of the timer's bench as George Klein of the Redmen threatened to break loose around the end, about the stellar line play of Marsh Hames last Saturday afternoon, about the play calling of Lic Lawson, and about the defensive plays of Bob Garside, a defensive back who has earned the respect and admiration of every ball carrier in the Intercollegiate league.

Somehow or other, this whole season seemed to be doomed to the status of an anti-climax after Varsity's defeat of of the Mustangs in the second scheduled game of the season. The Mustangs have been the symbol of Intercollegiate supremacy for more years than most of us care to recall, and to the fans at least, their manhandling by the Blues here in Toronto was something to behold.

Masterson and the team were the first to point out that beating the Mustangs was merely a step in the right direction, but the whole attitude of Blue fans for the rest of the season seemed to be, "I told you so." Even the win over the Redmen last weekend was accepted with a touch of the inevitable. There was none of the wild excitement that characterized the last Varsity championship in the 1948 season.

Perhaps we are getting, on the strength of two victories in four years, the same attitude that has been prevalent in the minds of Western students for some years back. Maybe we just take a championship for granted?

Maybe we shouldn't complain about that?

McMaster Defeated 2-0 As Intermedes Win Fifth To Clinch Championship

Yesterday afternoon the intermediate Soccer Blues floundered their way to the Intercollegiate soccer Championship by beating the McMaster Marauders 2-0 on a sloppy Front Campus. This was the fifth win for the Little Blues and clinched the title for them. At they have gone undefeated so far this season. Having beaten Western and O.A.C. twice, Varsity had only to win yesterday's game to stow the championship into the Hart House Trophy cabinet. The Intermediates play one more game against Mac, but only prestige is at stake as the little Blues will seek to remain undefeated this season.

Yesterday's game opened with both teams slithering and sliding in the mud, but the Intermediates soon got used to the conditions, and began showing the Macmen how to play the game as the short, sharp passes of the Blues had the McMaster team sliding around on their rear ends. The combination of Mat Derzai, and Al Bowler on the right wing was particularly effective as they consistently threatened the Mac goal. Occasionally the McMaster forwards got going, but they met with a strong defence in the shape of Don Rope, and Doug Quirk, and Tom McCann, the Varsity goalie, was rarely called upon.

However no goals were scored in the first half, and both teams went into the second half determined to get the first goal. It was the Blues that scored first, when Al Bowler pounced on a loose ball in a goal mouth scramble, and flicked the ball into the net to make the score 1-0.

The next chance for the Blues to add to their score came when a Mac defender fouled in the penalty area, and the Little Blues were awarded a penalty. Howie Ashburn blasted at the net, but the Mac goal keeper saved the shot and cleared the ball up the field.

The final score came when Logan got loose on the left wing and shot at the Mac goal. The Marauder goal keeper sprawled on the ground, and the ball squirted through the mud to just cross the goal line by six inches. McMaster made a few vain attempts to get back in the ball game, but failed as the whistle blew to end the game.

Mac were not without stars though as the two twins, Pete and Mike Johns played well at inside right, and centre half, with Ron MacDonald turning in a good game at left back. For the Little Blues, Don Rope and Howie Ashburn were standouts, with Mat Derzai playing well.

Sportswoman

There were four women's basketball games scheduled for the OCE gym yesterday evening. The contest between St. Hilda's I and PHE I was postponed as the Physed girls had an important meeting at Whitney Hall.

In the tilts that were run off, off, St. Hilda's Sophs were beaten by the UC Sophs 17-11 in a close contest. The score was knotted at 7-7 at the half, but the Red and White girls pulled away in the second as their passing attack began to connect. Anne Greey and Heather Chipman played well for the winners while Mimi Bell was a Standout for the Saints.

POT seconds were soundly trounced by Meds 42-9. The Medswomen took a 10-1 lead in the first quarter and kept going. Joan Elliott, Ruth McCree and Marge Platts shared the scoring for the winners, and Ruth Beaton played well for the losers.

In the final tilt, St. Mike's A defeated POT I 40-17. The Physots kept up their opponents in the first quarter but then the Milkmaidens got rolling and pulled away. Kay Shenk led the winners with a 22 point effort, while Joan Storey was good on defence for the losers.

SPORTS PROFILE

Ernie Frey

Ernie Frey this year starts his fourth season with the hockey Blues and thus becomes the senior member of the team. The hard working left winger is out for an even better season than last year when he collected 15 points to finish third in the intercollegiate scoring race behind linemates Rich Howson and Phil Arrowsmith.

The popular product of St. Andrew's College is noted for his high scoring ability and general all round consistent brand of hockey. This year coach Bill Wade is using Ernie to his best advantage on a line with Jack McKenzie and Al Conboy. In all events this trio should prove to be very bother-some to the opposing goalies.

Frey, who is finishing up his Pharmacy course this year has had his share of bad luck with Blue... In the first game of the 1948 season he broke his ankle and was sidelined for the remainder of the schedule. Besides hockey, Ernie dapples in lacrosse and was a member of the 1945 Little Big Four football champions at St. Andrew's.

Being the only married man on the team Ernie is frequently called upon to help solve his teammates' female problems. With the schedule doubled this year, the Leaside resident will have a great chance to pile up an impressive scoring record.

By DAVID PEDDIE

It is a very rare occasion, indeed, when one can see four such famous stars from the theatre world as Charles Laughton, Charles Boyer, Cedric Hardwicke and Agnes Moorehead on stage together. Yet it is through their wonderful acting that there emerged a fifth star, whose image towered over them—the big man with the large, kindly eyes and the lightly wicked smile—Bernard Shaw. In a curtain speech Mr. Laughton paid the author of DON JUAN IN HELL a fine Shavian tribute (he had Shaw in the audience's ribs). He said "If any of you came here to see us, we hope you will go home and read Shaw". Certainly the play left me feeling that Shaw was all he professed to be—a philosopher and an artist.

Shaw had a knack for putting his abstract thought into very concrete terms. Indeed, it is refreshing after studying the professional philosophers to follow the arguments in such a play as DON JUAN, arguments which refer again and again to the situation within the play in a manner that illuminates the thought by the concreteness of the situation and the characters. It is not systematic philosophy but it is very basic. There is little in it that has died with the generation to which Shaw belonged (whether the term Life Force is still in vogue or not).

It must be admitted that DON JUAN does not show Shaw, the artist, in his best light, but it certainly shows most clearly his artistry as dramatist—his ability to be profound, serious and all the time witty. The four actors merely sit in front of microphones and lecterns and say their lines, but the audience is never bored. Shaw kids them along. When things get a bit too heavy he tosses off some comic business and then turns back to the argument. He says wise things in a shocking way and then before the audience gets too indignant he laughs it all off. "I say (marriage is) the most licentious of human institutions"; the audience gasps, holds its breath. "That is the secret of its popularity"; the audience roars with laughter.

As performed on Monday night, every ounce of actors' technique was used, making every point in the argument and drawing every laugh from the dialogue. I felt cheated somewhat that the director chose to leave out two of his best laughs. I listened after the Devil's long speech which actually goes to almost three pages in the Penguin edition and which only Shaw would have dared to write, for Don Juan to say—"Pshaw", (it is guaranteed to bring down the house) but it never came. I was heart-broken. The other laugh is at the punch-line of a very long running-gag about fencing which is too long and involved to go into here, but it is a shame that it was missed.

To criticize the acting of such an illustrious group as the First Drama Quartette may seem presumptuous of a very young theatre-goer, but the performance was not perfect and I might as well say where it was not as strong as it might have been. Both Miss Moorehead, in her very thankless part, and Charles Boyer in his very exhausting part, had not enough of the Shavian attack in the first half. Admittedly the play has to rise to climax but I felt that there would have been more consistency if Mr. Boyer had really been sick of the Devil and all his tribe at the beginning and not saved all his disgust until later in the evening.

However, to do Mr. Boyer justice, when he hit the climax in probably the most impossible speech in English drama, he was superb. The perfect control of his voice, the variety of tone, the rhythm and forcefulness that could only come from a good continental actor—all became apparent. These things were there throughout of course but unfortunately we, being so deaf to such eloquence, did not notice it until the actor had such a difficult speech to give. Miss Moorehead, in spite of any criticism to the contrary, gave a charming and elegant performance that was in keeping with the whole production.

Cedric Hardwicke was the scene-stealer of the group. None of the long intellectual speeches were his; all he had to do was be very funny. Almost every line was a laugh and he got every one and a few more-milking lines as they were meant to be milked. He also used the few movements allowed the actors to the very best advantage. If this is ham-acting, why can't we have a lot more of it.

The final and most resounding praise is laid unashamedly at the feet of Charles Laughton—the director of the show and the most gentlemanly Devil that ever existed. Existed is the only word. Laughton was mincing and petulant, self-assured and urbane, intelligent and opinionated; his political speech about beating Heaven by a constitutional majority was in the grand manner. Yet so attractive was he to us all that we could not but realize why he was the perfect Tempter.

'Toban Confesses To National Hoax

Reprinted from The Manitoban

On a dull night early in October, The Manitoban's news editor screamed that he was desperately short of news. "Someone please give me a piece of sensational copy," he pleaded.

Not wanting to see the poor editor unhappy, an obliging staff member wrote the sad, sad story of 32 students at the small Nova Scotian college of Marshaven who were imprisoned following a freshie pow-wow. He gave considerable detail in the report, outlining the comments of Marshaven's police chief, Fergus MacFarlane, and of student president Ross Banquo on the incident.

In the next issue another staffer followed up the story with an even more sensational account of a jailbreak in which the imprisoned students were "sprung" by fellow college members. This was written in equally comprehensive news style with quotations from several history honors students who were against this flouting of law and order and from college president Rev. Andrew Dundoon, who was against everything.

There was only one thing wrong with the stories. The incidents did not happen. Ross Banquo, Rev. A. Dundoon, Founder's square, New Hebrides, and, in fact, the entire town of Marshaven do not exist.

The writers had expected that most students would realize this. At least one Canadian university group is picked up by police every fall and events almost identical to those described occurred in an Australian college town two years ago. But the places and names (many of them straight from Macbeth) were meant to be an obvious take-off on the Maritime Scottish. The quotes from authorities were meant to be as typed as the speeches of Good and Evil Angels in medieval morality plays.

Much to the writers' embarrassment, most Manitoba students took the stories at face value. Member papers of the Canadian University Press even picked up the story and reprinted it as regular CUP news for their readers.

The Manitoban is sorry that its innocent humor was taken so seriously. To the students of Manitoba, the members of CUP, and the nonexistent students and townsfolk of Marshaven, we offer our humble apologies.

Free Speech Is Squelched At Brooklyn

Poughkeepsie, N.Y. (Exchange) Freedom of thought and of speech is being threatened in U.S. colleges, according to the Vassar Miscellany News.

It reports that at Brooklyn College, faculty and students remain passive while a student group was removed. In the past Brooklyn College has seen the removal of the Students for Democratic Action, Labor League, the Vanguard (campus newspaper) and now the Youth Progressive of America. A few years ago there was still enough spirit to have a general campus strike when a Marxist Organization was suspended.

The National Students' Association, however, has intervened to secure an agreement by the New York Board of Regents to reconsider its policy in restricting students' rights of the press. N.S.A. has been working elsewhere in the U.S. to protect student rights. In North Carolina it helped secure repeal of segregation rules against Negroes at University Stadium.

In Ohio State it has prevailed upon Board Trusties who were using their authority to ban campus speakers, to modify their stand.

Man Bites Dog

The Engineering Society is worried about The Varsity. This particular worry comes at an opportune time.

At its meeting last night, the Society asked its Students' Administrative Council representative, Doug Sherk, to present a motion to the Council asking The Varsity to give a specific policy in writing on news reporting and publicity for anyone who might be interested. This written policy is not to be ratified and the Engineering Society, as far as we understand, merely wants to know how The Varsity handles news and publicity.

The publicity part of it is simple. About one hundred mimeographed copies of a brief outlining the policy on publicity are in The Varsity news office for anyone who wants one. This is the second printing of the publicity brief this year. It was distributed in September to all campus organization including the Engineering Society.

News is another matter. As in all things there is a policy. Stated as simply as possible it is this:

> News consists of reports of events. These reports should be accurate, unbiased, and as objective as possible. Some events, according to the principles that the editors follow, are more important than others, and are consequently given more forceful presentation.

That about covers it. The important thing of course, is the set of principles which the editors follow. These are clear for The Varsity.

The Varsity is essentially a service to the students of the University of Toronto. The responsibilities of the editor and the staff are to the student. The Varsity must take a large number of events each day and from them choose what it considers to be the most important to the community. From these it prepares reports outlining the relative value of those events for presentation in the paper each morning.

How does one decide which event is most important? One criterion is interest. A small event in point of size and number of participants may hold a wide interest.

But for the university paper there is an additonal task. It is not enough to distinguished between events which are of wide interest (such as a football game) and those of narrow interest (a meeting of the Russian Circle, perhaps). There is also the problem of picking out those events which honestly reflect the activities of a thinking community, of a university. There are events which though they may seem unimportant in a narrow view, in reality mirror important trends in student thought. To these we attempt to pay more attention.

What all this means is that an At-Home, even though it may involve hundreds of people, becomes quite unimportant as news, while the latest speech from a cabinet minister, who draws a crowd of only thirty-seven, is headline material. And if on the day that the cabinet minister speaks President Smith decides to resign because he disagrees with the Board of Governors, then the cabinet minister is out and Dr. Smith makes the headline.

Or, in another field, what students have to say about visiting Russians is more important than publicity for a campus show. And gets a different presentation.

These are the principles upon which the editors of The Varsity make their decision. The application of those principles is fluid, because the importance of events and their relation to one another is fluid. What is news on Monday is not news on Wednesday. In all cases the Editors, and in particular the Editor-in-Chief, make decisions as to what is important and therefore news. This is what they are appointed to do.

But always they keep in mind these things: (1) That theirs is a service job, that they have a deep and important responsibility to the undergraduate community at The University of Toronto for which The Varsity is published. (2) That news, by definition, must be presented as accurately, as clearly, and as interestingly as is humanly possible. (3) That news should be news and not opinion. Mistakes are made, but everyone who works for The Varsity learns early in his or her career that in the news columns you present the news, and that your opinion belongs in the editorial columns, or in signed articles.

Being human, the editors of The Varsity are prone to error, despite their constant efforts to meet these principles. We sometimes find that what we understand to be important is not always approved of by many undergraduates.

These principles are not original nor unique. They have been an integral part of The Varsity for longer than any member of the staff.

News, however, remains news. "If a dog bites a man", as the old story goes, "that's unfortunate. If a man bites a dog, that's news."

Like any newspaper worth its printer's ink, we don't make the news — we just print it.

Editor, The Varsity:

Why was last Thursday's open meeting of NFCUS called? Mr. Syd Wax, them ain speaker, claimed that the main purpose of the meeting was to discuss the broad outline of NFCUS activities in the international scene; he deplored the "sensationalism" of the Varsity which had led students to believe that the discussion would centre around the proposed visit of Russian students to Canada. Mr. Wax did not lay all his cards on the table. In the address he gave on Canadian participation in international student organizations, he proceeded to give indirectly all the arguments in favour of the NFCUS stand, at the same time claiming that any discussion of the question was not the purpose of the meeting. It became clear that his real aim was to justify, not to discuss, what might be called the NFCUS Blunder.

Some of Mr. Wax's ideas seem rather odd. As a reason for our not supporting the tour, he stated that Maritime and Western universities might be opposed. This is no reason to ask students of the University of Toronto to vote against the tour, since a referendum of Canadian universities can succeed only if students vote according to what they feel on the issue, not if htey vote to appease what may well be minority groups. If the majority of Canadian students are in favour of the tour, then NFCUS should take heart and change its stand. Why is NFCUS afraid?

We were given a variety of reasons.

We were told that the sponsoring of such a tour might tint the campus a bright pink in the eyes of downtown businessmen who would cease to help finance our studies or employ our graduates. Perhaps this is true; but it should not deter us. If there can be any home of idealism in the world today, if there can be any place where people fight for what they believe in, is it not in the universities? We are, of course, dependent on outside support; but we can do without the money of those who want to govern the thinking of university students. They can only stultify the search for truth.

We have been asked to believe that the brevity of the tour will not allow a real interchange of ideas, that we shall scarcely have time to see these students or these students us. Yet, at the same time NFCUS supporters argue that the tour is inadvisable since it may give Russian students a chance to convert muddled Canadians to Communism. Either of these arguments may contain a grain of truth; together they are vaguely contradictory. When we realize that it is not just this tour but likely the whole field of relationship with Russian students that is in question, the worth of both arguments is clearly small. Someone is throwing dust in our eyes.

We have heard that Denis Lazure had no authority to extend an invitation on behalf of Canadian students. This is regrettable, but it does not matter. It is as irrelevant as the question of financing a return tour to the Soviet Union, as the problem of how much is to be gained from this particular tour. It is a petty reason indeed for the rudeness of withdrawing an invitation which was already accepted.

We have not been told what I believe to be the real reason for the defence of the NFCUS stand: that NFCUS is terrified of admitting that it may have made a mistake. Mr. Wax wishes to save his face. There seems to be no other valid explanation for the confusion with which the whole issue has been clouded. The arguments NFCUS has given us have been dug from deep in the barrel; in general they seem to be cowardly, worthless or irrelevant. They need not concern us. What really matters is that Russian students have applied to come on a tour of the universities of our countries, a tour which need not include those universities which are not in favour, a tour which need not weaken NFCUS activities in the national field, a tour which will likely cost nobody a red, or even punt, cent. They have applied. Do we want them?

The answer to this question is critical. It is not merely this particular tour that is at stake, but possibly a large number of tours, exchanges and other worthwhile international students activities. This tour by itself may not accomplish wonders, but tours of this sort and other exchanges could not fail in the long run to be of value. For the last five years, NFCUS has given lip-service to a theoretical co-operation with the Soviet Union, but has lamented the impossibility of putting so much as a dent in the iron murtain. At last there comes a slight hope. The result: cold feet, the blame for which is shifted onto downtown businessmen and western universities whose attitude Mr. Wax considers frightful, but whose example he urges us to follow.

McGill gave the NFCUS stand a resounding defeat. Toronto should too. NFCUS should buck up.

Andrew Watson,

Moscow, Exchange—It has been decided by the Soviet Minister of Higher Education that four Soviet fighters for democracy should be sent on exchange to the University of British Columbia. These courageous citizens will waste one year at this young, but conservative, stronghold.

It is hard for the average Soviet citizen to realize how rotten and corrupt a Canadian university is, but it must be realized that a university is only a function of the society.

While at the University of British Columbia, they will see only the sons of rich capitalists, or of union leaders who have sold their followers for the money of the big industrialists. The government of the province pays large sums for the education of these young parasites who spend most of their time drinking, chasing women, or watching a game called football. In this game the sons of peasants risk their lives for athletic scholarships in the hope of acquiring the university degree which raises them into a higher class. After obtaining their degrees, it is not uncommon for them to disown their working parents as being beneath their dignity and to leave for the United States where the class system is at its highest. The one God worshipped by all Canadian students is the American dollar.

The subjects studied are designed for a parasitic nature. One of the most popular courses is called Pass Arts attended mostly by overpainted women from middle-class homes, in which such subjects are studied as Child Psychology (advanced baby-sitting) or Food Chemistry (how to cook porridge in seven different ways). When the student graduates from this course, he is a repository for second-hand dogmatic capitalistic theories which are inadequate in solving the social problems of the day. Instead of studying Marx, Engel or Stalin, the student reads about the thoughts of men such as Socrates and Plato who lived over two thousand years ago. This clearly shows how far they are behind in modern science.

In some way it is unfortunate that four Soviet students should be sent back into the dark ages, but it should be an interesting study for them and it may serve to remind us in the Soviet Union that it was only a short number of years since we were in the same miserable state.

Moritz Bowlkopf.

Editor, The Varsity:

In view of the controversy that has been raging in your paper for the past few weeks I should like to ask two questions: Do you think (1) that even if we did invite the Russian students, the Soviet Union would allow them to leave? (2) That the Soviet Union would allow Canadian University students behind the Iron Curtain?

My answer to both these questions is "No", so I suggest this discussion be dropped permanently.

Editor's Note: Reader Irvine if she had read carefully would have noticed that in both cases the official Russian answer was yes. This at least is the information given by Denis Lazure, who actually talked to the Russians in Warsaw in August.

Cite Cancelled Pep Rally Unconstitutional Action

Last Friday's cancelled Pep Rally sparked a criticism of unconstitutional action by the Executive Committee of the SAC, at last night's Council meeting.

The Pep Rally was cancelled by the Executive Committee after unknown vandals painted signs on the walls of several university buildings last Hallowe'en. The cancellation action was taken two days after a stormy Council session at which it was finally decided to hold the Rally.

"The action was unconstitutional," declared Don Bell, Forestry. He quoted the SAC Constitution, which states that the Executive Committee "shall be empowered to deal with minor routine matters in order to expedite the work of the Council, but shall have no authority where matters of genreal policy are concerned."

Bell argued that the decision to hold the pep rally, in spite of opposition from University College whose musical revue was being held the same night, was not a "minor routine matter." Therefore, he said, the Executive had no right to reverse the decision.

At one point a motion of censure on the Executive Committee was on the floor. This was withdrawn when the Council was told that if the motion passed, the Executive would be forced to resign.

Bud Trivett, Law, defended the action of the Executive Committee. "It was a forward step in student self-government," he said. "We took action ourselves, rather than leaving it to the Caput to settle."

Furthermore, Trivett said, the cancellation of a Pep Rally is not a matter of general policy, but is a specific situation. Thus it comes under the jurisdiction of the Executive.

He emphasized that the action was not taken to punish the student body, but "to show the sincerity of the great body of students who don't approve of vandalism, and have very few ways to express their disapproval."

The Executive Committee also reported the results of its investigation of the painting episode. It reported that the following facts have been determined:

1. Those responsible for the painting are a group of University students.
2. The number in this group was from seven to 15.
3. From evidence presented to the Executive Committee it is indicated that some of the students involved are from the junior years in the Faculty of Engineering. It is impossible to identify the persons involved by name or year.

Trinity College reported that four or five persons were involved in the painting of the Trinity front doors, that some of them wore finger-tip windbreakers, but no one saw their faces and they could not be identified.

Fees Down Gazette To Weekly

London (CUP)—The Western Gazette, student paper at the University of Western Ontario has been hit by the student council austerity budget. From now on it will be published only once weekly.

To be published only on Friday from now on, the size of the paper will be enlarged to twelve or as many as eighteen pages according to the need to cover all the news it has in the past, the Western Gazette said this week, announcing the change.

It is also expected that the number of issues of the paper published each year will be reduced also, the paper reported but as yet no such announcement has been made.

It would be impossible, the editor stated, to continue on a two-week basis and remain within the new budget. Consequently he announced the weekly plan will become effective immediately.

The Gazette is the first Canadian university newspaper that has been forced to change its publication schedule on account of the drop in student fees, although all student councils are operating under austerity budgets because of the lowered enrollment.

Will Translate Croat To Dutch

A list of translators will be set up by the Student Service Commission of the Students' Administrative so that manuscripts that may be of value to students can be translated. The Commission was empowered to set up the list by the SAC last night after Professor Heichelheim had suggested to the commission that a bureau of translation should be set up under the auspices of the SAC. Prof. Heichelheim felt this was properly an SAC project and not a University one and that no expert guidance is needed to organize the bureau.

The greatest number of translations would be in French, German and Italian. Additional translations would be needed in Dutch, Swedish, Danish, Norwegian, Icelandic, and Yiddish. Also required would be persons who can translate Spanish, Portugese, Roumanian, and Latin; Hungarian and Finnish; and Slavic languages of Russian, Czechoslovakian, Polish, Croatian, Serbian and Bulgarian; and in addition ancient and modern Greek, Arabic and Hebrew.

The student translators would be paid by those who would benefit from the various translations. For example if one translation would be sufficient for a group of students where each student could contribute a small amount but the total money collected would be large enough to pay the translator.

To set up the list of students the Student Service Commission will contract the heads of the various language departments and also will seek competent translators through publicity in The Varsity.

It was recognized by the committee that a formal course of study in a language does not necessarily equip one to be an expert translator and that there will be some students fluent in some of the languages who are not enrolled in a language course.

Masthead Meeting

The regular masthead meeting will be held today at 5 p.m. in the editorial office. All editors are expected to attend.

Defer Naming Radio Director – Need Co-operation

The SAC decided last night to defer the appointment of Rocky Martino, Grad, as director of the Radio Round Table discussions, until the SAC Radio Committee Chairman was assured that Martino would co-operate with station CKEY.

Paul Forestell, St. Mike's, questioned Martino's appointment on the grounds that if Harry Rasky, News Editor of CKEY, and Martino were still "not on speaking terms", the Round Table Discussions would be impossible. Rasky is the moderator of the discussion groups.

Edgar Fullar, Wyc., suggested that if Martino's appointment were deferred it would probably destroy the Round Table discussions. Graeme Ferguson, Vic, replied that the intent of the motion was to get Martino to co-operate with CKEY.

Elinor Strangways, Managing Editor of The Varsity, said that the paper had received a letter to the Editor from Martino which "commended Rasky for his ability as news editor, but suggested that experts in various fields should act as moderators of the programs." She added that Martino's letter had been in the spirit of co-operation with Rasky.

Forestell said that there would not likely be any programs over CKEY unless Rasky acted as moderator, and that in view of this letter, Martino's appointment should be deferred. He recommended that the letter in question be published immediately by The Varsity.

When contacted for comment, Martino made the following statement: "I asked The Varsity to print the letter today (Wednesday) so that the members of the SAC could read it and find out the history of the Rasky story.

"The letter dealt with past history only; it did not deal with the future. As far as I am concerned, the future is up to Harry Rasky.

"Since my attitude has been made quite clear to the Editor and the Managing Editor of The Varsity, I am surprised that references were made to the letter, but the letter was not printed today through lack of space."

Sky High Surveys

There will be an introductory ...ying week next week, states Tom ...omery, II St. Mike's, President of ...e Flying Club. During this week ...ybody interested in flying can ...e a twenty minute flight and ...ually handle the controls. The ...e for this flight will be three ...llars. The club membership is ...reasing reported Comery and ...e number now stands at about ...e, including a few co-eds.

...e club is run in conjunction ...h Central Airways at the Island ...port and its easy accessibility ...kes it a popular site for flying. ...ntral Airways offers through ...e U. of T. flying club, a govern...ent approved and subsidized ...ng course. After the student ...s obtained his license the gov...ment refunds $100 to him. This ...uld bring down the total cost of ...ining the license from approximately $285 to $185. This latter cost can be easily spread over a long period by taking only one hour or half-hour lessons each week in spare time. Central Airways also offers reduced rates to the U. of T. Flying Club. Instead of the usual rates of $12 an hour for instruction and $10 an hour for solo flying, Central offers members $10 an hour for instruction and $9 an hour solo.

Any member of the flying club has the odd adventure — and sometimes the odd misadventure. But while (above) Ron Swanson, I SPS, is taking credit for a thorough job of aircraft wrecking, he wasn't even around when it happened. The Flying Club has yet to "hang up" an aircraft, though for three years they have aided all able and interested students to pass the exams and finish the hours of flight for a licence.

Students planning to enter the R.C.A.F. after getting their license privately, get $100 when joining and another $100 when they get their wings. These amounts plus the original $100 received more than pays for the cost of learning to fly while still a student.

Another feature offered by the club are breakfast flights. These special flights start early in the morning as all the members assemble at the airport. They then fly en masse to some point such as Hamilton, Oshawa, or St. Catherines; have breakfast, relax a little and head for home.

By just flying on spare Saturdays a student could get his license in from two to four months, depending on his ability. It takes thirty hours of flying time to get the license, divided between instruction and solo. Also included in the course are classes on theory of flight, navigation, meteorology, and air regulations. A written exam set by the government follows.

Central Airways offers safety plus with their new planes, most of which are all metal. Instructor Howard Carter approves of the work that the U. of T. Flying Club is doing. Carter, who got his license by flying just in his spare time feels that the club "is a good thing".

Phone Cut Near Stop Of 'Varsity'

The Varsity almost missed getting on the campus on time yesterday morning. While a special story was being phoned in to the Oshawa plant where this paper is printed, during the night, the phones went dead. No connection could be made with Toronto.

Yesterday it was learned that the cutoff was due to two men who attempted to steal three hundred feet of metal cable by cutting the main telephone-telegraph cables between Toronto and Montreal. The thieves released the cable from a pole, which dropped the wire to the ground and then cut through the wire, near Pickering.

The loot would have been worth about $1,000 on the current black market prices. Copper is in short supply and its allocation is controlled by the government.

All contact between Toronto and Montreal was cut off. To complete the call for the special story, the long distance operator had to put the call through to Montreal and then through a northern circuit before it could reach Toronto again.

It was reported that hundreds of men were sent out to the scene today to restore temporary service.

The two men were caught with 300 feet of cable in the back of their truck.

Cooks Speak

Male Meals

Thirteen hundred males buy their meals daily in the Hart House Great Hall. Behind lovely walls there operates a giant food service that occupies three floors and employs from eighty to ninety part-time employees. At the centre of it all is Miss M. A. Eames, the Supervisor of Food Service for Hart House. With her three assistants, Mrs. M. Outerbridge, Miss P. Lloyd, and Mrs. P. McConvey (all U. of T. graduates). Miss Eames supervises the planning of menus, the buying of food and the cooking of meals.

Most of the employees have been there for a long time. The chef, who started as a general kitchen boy, and worked his way up, has been there since 1935. All of the employees are proud of the dining rooms and are enthusiastic about their jobs.

Miss Eames said that most of the students were polite and courteous. The odd exception is found, but not often. "Food Service," she said, "is a very complex business and very often a thing, which, to the outsider, seems unreasonable, is more often than not very easily explained. It would be much better if the students would only ask for that explanation. They should realize that it is our duty to serve the best in quality and to please the greatest number of students. It is not always possible to cater to the tastes of the individual. We try to serve good, nourishing meals — reasonably."

Equipment used in the various kitchens is designed to eliminate as much work as possible. Dumb waiters are used to transport the food from the preparation floor to the cafeteria. Vegetables are cooked in a huge steam machine, soup in a 75 gallon container. Potatoes are peeled and washed by machine. All pastry and cakes are "home-made" in the Hart House kitchen. Dishes are washed three times. The final rinse is by steam.

Meals at Hart House are served from 11:45 to 1:45 and from 4:45 to 6:30. Although many students do not always have a twelve o'clock lecture few of them go for lunch until 1:00. This means that there is a long line-up and slow service. Miss Eames urges the students to come in earlier and thus eliminate the long lines.

Surprisingly, most of those who eat at Hart House do not drink coffee, but milk. They prefer the most expensive dessert-layer cake and ice cream.

Fewer, however, eat at Hart House this year than last. About 600 eat lunch and 700 supper, she said. There are three dining rooms — one for undergraduates, another for grads and one overlooking the Great Hall for the faculty. The first of these is cafeteria style — the other two are not.

The amount of food consumed varies but it is always a lot. Seventy to eighty gallons of milk, twelve to fifteen gallons of ice cream, six bags of potatoes, and fifty gallons of soup are used in one day.

The menus are planed a week ahead and are carefully checked so that the meals will be varied. This is only a part of the tremendous organization that goes into every meal. Miss Eames has volunteered to take any students who are interested on a tour of the kitchens to view at first hand the deep freezer, the blitzer and the "bain marie" — only a few of the machines that are used in making the meals.

Manitobans Plan Party New Year's

Winnipeg (CUP) — The University of Manitoba student union executive has undertaken to organize a New Year's frolic for students of that university. It will be held at one of Winnipeg's leading hotels and will feature both music and professional entertainment.

This is the first such Frolic the UMSU has undertaken in ten years.

Student demand for the frolic has been at a high peak since plans for it were revealed early in October, The Manitoban said. The UMSU approved the plan but refused to vote any money for it, claiming that it should be financed entirely by students.

Subscription for the celebration will be ten dollars per couple.

Various Uses For Tweepers On Campus

What happened to the "Tweepers", those gaudy frolic sticks which hit the Varsity Campus as the finale to the 1951 Stadium Show?

Jim Broughton, III Vic, official of the Blue and White Society, gives these facts and figures for the curious mathematicians and philosophers who throng this University.

Seven hundred Tweepers were sold at their debut. On the following day, at the Queen's football game, six hundred met their happy owners.

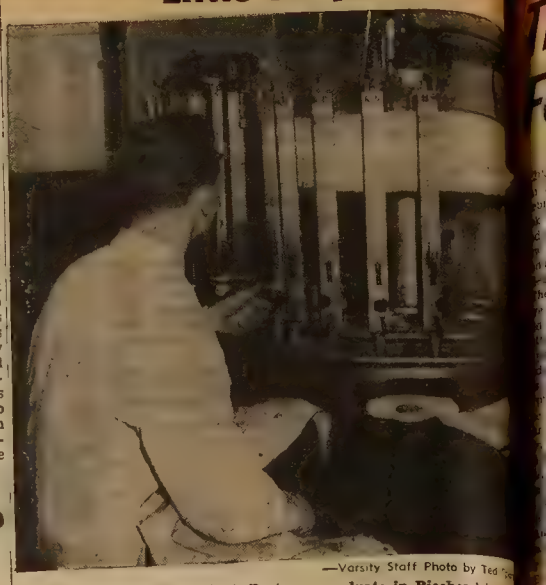
Some Tweepers were hawked by errant "newsboys" on the Western train. Finally, three hundred greeted the champion Blues last Saturday.

As was expected, U. of T. fans found a fantastic variety of uses for Tweepers. The Blue and White "fly swatters" are now regarded by many as regular features of a football weekend.

Now, after the football season, the Tweepers have become house decorations at Vic residences and at some fraternities. The Blue and White feels that the little Tweeper has met with reasonable success and looks forward to its revival next year.

Chess Champ To Challenge Campus Club

The Chess Champion of Canada, Poilias Vaitonis, will take on all comers simultaneously in a chess exhibition to be held in the Music Room, Hart House at 7:00 p.m., November 15.



Povilas Vaitonis was born in Lithuania where he learned to play chess at the age of five. After studying the humanities for four years, he entered the law school at the University of Kaunas and completed the course in 1940 at the University of Vilnius.

During the Russian and German occupation Vaitonis served as a relations manager at the Electric Power Station in Vilna after completing the compulsory military service in Kaunas. In 1944 he fled from the Russians to Sweden in a small boat and in 1949 arrived in Canada with his wife and two children.

Vaitonis has a remarkable chess record. In 1930, at the age of 19, he won the Chess Championship at the University of Kaunas and the next year he won the city championship. Although he came second in the Lithuanian Championship in 1932, he went on to win this championship in 1934, 1937, and 1938. Since then he has gained many firsts in the tournaments he has entered.

In 1950 Vaitonis won the Ontario Speed Championship in which moves are made every ten seconds. Later the same year he won the Ontario Open Championship. To add to his laurels, last Summer he won the Canadian Chess Championship held in Vancouver. This last contest had the strongest entree of any tournament ever held in Canada.

The haircut belongs to Jack Porter, a graduate in Biochemistry, and the machinery, affectionately known as a "Warburg Respirometer" is hidden in a lab in the Medical Building. The idea is to measure the gaseous effects of bacteria, which apparently have something to do with molecules, and may solve "the whole problem of organic growth." Unlike Topsy, organic growth seems to have a problem.

UC Will Debate Russian Visit

The UC Parliament is holding a debate this afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in the Junior Common Room on: "Resolved that it would be unwise to allow Soviet students to study at the University of Toronto." Speaking for the affirmative are Michael Benazon, II UC, and Don Michel, III UC. Inika Janecek and Bert Bloom, both IV UC, will oppose the motion, and David Gauthier, II UC will be the Speaker.

"Having Soviet students at the University of Toronto would give us the opportunity to study their attitudes and observe their reactions towards institutions and practices we take for granted," declared Bloom in giving his opinion of the proposed visit. "We would have the oportunity in talking to them of being able to learn something of what makes a Soviet student tick," he said, "and perhaps to allow some doubts to enter their minds as to the complete accuracy of all that with which they have been primed."

Miss Janecek in making a statement for The Varsity, remarked that the visit "would be unwise from the Russian point of view rather than the Canadian, because it isn't the Canadians who are going to fall for Communism but the Russians for Democracy once they have seen it. From the Canadian point of view it would be very good to start to impress the meaning of democracy on the undemocratic world," she said.

Speaking for the affirmative Mr. Benazon pointed out that "the purpose of bringing Russian students to Canada must surely be to increase understanding between East and West. By bringing them to a provincial university such as the University of Toronto," he continued, "we will not be achieving that purpose since it is doubtful whether Russian students would get to know more than a very few Toronto students, and moreover they could not possibly get a conception of how Canada as a whole think and live from such a narrow standpoint."

"If these students are badly picked," noted Don Michel, III UC, speaking for the government, "in the same manner Russia has picks her U.N. delegates, and have every reason for believing they would be, their visit would be no effect but to Toronto would be no efect but to increase hostility between the east and west . . .

The special book to mark the centenary was put together over the course of the summer. It was a hectic task according to all members of the editorial board. Employed in various summer jobs they were scattered at points ranging from the Atlantic to the Pacific seaboard. The result was many an anxious moment, for instance when one entire chapter was lost in the mail. Many an hour was spent in digging up historical background material and many an additional hour was spent by those still in the Province in rushing down to Toronto for conferences. Over a hundred dollars had to be spent on phone calls.

The result of this frenzied reading and intercommunicating began to take shape towards the close of the summer when the researchers eight undergraduates and about thirty grads) were able to turn over all the necessary material to a writing staff of another eight undergrads. They found they had enough to say to fill a book of more than three hundred pages.

But the funds which the Review had saved over the past few years in anticipation of the centenary, even coupled with extra donations from grads and the expected revenue of selling the books at a dollar a copy to grads, made 150 pages the maximum.

Cuts were made in each of the eight chapters which seek, with tidbits and anecdotes to recapture the spirit (particularly undergraduate) of an era. Editor Andy Watson says that the result of this condensation has been to compress each chapter into a real sparkling gem.

"Why a New Revelation" was the subject of a talk given by Mrs. Peggy Ross at the open meeing of the Baha'i Student Group yesterday. "All religions have the same essential truth," said the speaker, "but the Baha'i message has been broadened to meet man's greater capacity at this point in his evolution.

"The central theme of all the great religions is salvation and regeneration. Baha'i can project its faith into the realm of collective social action."

Using the analogy of a ladder to illustrate clearly the principle of Progressive Revelation she said that in climbing the ladder we must place our feet on every step and we must not stay long on any one step or we will block the progress of others. It was further suggested that the Revelation of Baha'u'llah is the next step on the ladder which must be taken by mankind.

SAC At A Glance

Besides criticizing the Executive Committee, setting up a translation bureau, and refusing to ratify Rocky Martino's appointment as a Radio Committee Director, at its meeting last night the Students' Administrative Council:

—decided that the Brading Debating Trophy could keep its name. A motion was made to request that the name be changed, because it was felt the trophy (for debating competition between four Canadian and four Scotch universities) would be used for advertising. Said Graeme Ferguson, Vic, "If we request this change, we will be duty bound to request the Athletic Directorate to play no more games in Molson Stadium." The motion was defeated with only one dissenting vote —and that only because the voter moved the motion.

—thanked Student Service Commissioner Irene McLellan, Nursing, for her vain attempts to hold a Feather Fair, in spite of the weather.

—commended The Varsity for the lack of editorializing in its news columns.

—heard Publications Commissioner Doug Sherk suggest that if any groups are having public relations trouble with The Varsity, they try to settle them by seeing Editor Barbara Browne.

—decided that the International Ball would be held in Hart House on December 7, under SAC sponsorship.

—decided to send $1000 to the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) as a part payment of the current fees (which amount to about $2000 for Toronto).

—decided to make grounds available so that they newly-formed SHARE relief campaign could get funds from Grey Cup parking, and promised to supply four parking attendants from each faculty.

World Gov't Ideal Must Be Practical

EAC Says Plans Begun For Carabin

At its bi-weekly meeting the External Affairs Commission heard the following from chairman of the various committees:

—that 55 women but only 21 men have applied for the Carabin Weekend. Twenty men and twenty women will be chosen to act as hosts when the University of Montreal group visits here from December 6 to 9. A committee composed of Warden Ignatieff, Graeme Ferguson, chairman of the EAC, Joan Presant, NFCUS chairman, Peter Alley, ISS (WUS) chairman, and Dorothy Leiberman, in charge of the Carabin Weekend.

—that the Host Committee is planning a small weekend at Caledon Hills farm for a small group of Foreign and Canadian students. The chairman asked that all foreign students who would be interested in this and similar activities should have their names put on a list at their college or faculty and forwarded. She also learned that there are about 500 foreign students on the Toronto campi. About 200 of them are Americans studying at St. Michael's College.

—that information about travelling overseas this summer cannot be expected before January first. Yves Pilon, permanent secretary treasurer of NFCUS is attempting to establish a travel service but will not have completed arrangements till that date.

World government is an ideal for which we must strive, Mr. M. E. Gelber told a meeting at Hillel last night. But we must consider the practical politics of the world in which we live. Mr. Gelber was speaking on "U.N. and the World Order".

Nationalistic states are jealous of their prerogatives and find it difficult to give them up for the sake of world authority, he said.

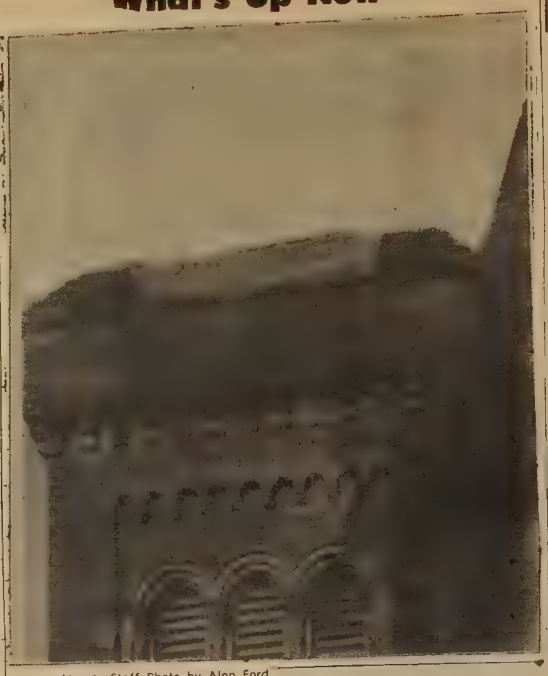
"We must face the problem of population," he said. The population of south east Asia is increasing at such a rate that it is unlikely that we can raise the standard of living appreciably by the efforts of the Colombo plan, he added. However, he continued, we are morally obligated and may not withold assistance. The real problem in south east Asia is an increasing population. Mr. Gelber wondered if it is within our power to relieve it. This economic problem is increased, he added, every time we lower the death rate.

The Russians have used the veto indiscriminately in the UN, he said, but they did not create it. The veto was suggested by the United States to secure support for the United Nations from the isolationist sectors of their population. Although the veto has harmed the the prestige of the UN, he said it was a necessary concession in order to get the membership of the major powers. The powers of the general assembly have been expanded, he added, when world peace is at stake and the Security Council is hamstrung by the veto.

Mr. Gelber said that the United Nations has no independent power, but is dependent on the support of its member nations.

Engineers Stamp Ads In Varsity

All The Varsitys delivered to Victoria, University College, Medicine and Engineering yesterday had a two-column ad for Skule Nite which had never been cleared through the advertising department and had not been paid for. However the advertising department of The Varsity was not particularly worried as the Engineers printed the ad themselves.



Ken Gradwell, IV SPS, decided two weeks ago that something should be done about the "hell-raising editorial" which appeared in The Varsity. That is something which would help advertise Skule Nite. Gradwell approached the driver who every morning brings The Varsity into Toronto from the Rotary Press in Oshawa and persuaded the driver to let him have the copies of The Varsity schedule for [illegible] at the Lansing cut-off, east of Toronto.

Somehow he managed to bring the 900 lbs. of paper to the Engineering Society Stores where 10 engineers were waiting. It took the [illegible] approximately, to stamp the copie with three rubber stamps in red black, and green inks.

The Varsitys were then carefully bundled and wrapped exactly the way they had been received from the driver and delivered to the colleges.

Later in the day, Skule Nite signs

What's Up Now

were hung from the towers of University College and Trinity. One of the engineers said that he was almost caught by Provost Seeley while hanging the sign at Trinity.

To finish a busy day, the engineers gave each of the 15 waitresses at the Elm Grill, opposite the Mining Building, tags on which were printed the words: "Skule Nite—Nov. 16 and 17".

Camera Club Opens Show Next Monday

The Hart House Camera Club will present a collection of prints in the Camera Club Rooms from November 19th to 25th. They will be on exhibition to Hart House members Monday through Saturday from 12.00 to 2.00 p.m.

The owner of the prints is Edward Julian Joplitt of Beverly Hills, California who recently showed the pictures at the Toronto Camera Club. He has also shown them in Chicago and London, England.

Mr. Joplitt is an Associate of the Royal Photographic Society and was awarded 12 merits in national competition during the past three years by this Association.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

If there weren't so many grown-up films popping out these days, a Swiss import FOUR IN A JEEP (at the Astor), might be getting a much bigger play. This is a worthy movie on an off-beat subject.

The four in a jeep have nothing to do with FOUR JILLS IN A JEEP, a Hollywood product about USO tours. Instead of curvy American pinup blondes, these four are MPs stationed in Vienna, from four different nations. This quartet make up the International Patrol which polices the small central International Zone in the city. The governing of this No Man's area is taken over by one of the four powers month by month.

This month it is Russia's turn and that is why Soviet MP Kravechenko is sitting on the jeep driver's right. The driver is American MP Long, because the US Army owns all the jeeps used by the International Patrol. In the back seat completing the foursome are Pasture of France and Stuart of Britain.

The producer of FOUR IN A JEEP, Lazar Wechsler, is also responsible for THE SEARCH, in which the young unknown Montgomery Clift starred in the story about DP children. Wechsler includes European flavor which makes FOUR IN A JEEP a happy event. What FOUR IN A JEEP says, American films could not say: the perspective is so different.

The International Patrol gets involved with a young Austrian woman (Viveca Lindfors) who is anxiously awaiting the repatriation of her POW husband from a Russian camp in Hungary. The attitudes and reactions of the four men are varied and reflect their national characteristics. More subtly, the relationships between the four occupation powers are defined in the relationships between the four in a jeep.

The POW does not return on schedule. He has escaped. The Russian military are al worked up, the plainclothes agents are alerted and Kravechenko is given "orders".

Long and Kravechenko do not get along. They had first met each other on the Elbe as the 1945 war end care. Then they had been happy if drunken friends. Later the relations had cooled. Now on patrol, the American and Russian struggle for authority while the Englishman and Frenchman watch, shrugging or trying to make peace.

I have said this picture has a European view. This is particularly shown in the final chase in which the POW escapee nearly kills himself in his panicky flight from his villain. But who is the villain? No, the urbane pleasant Frenchman naturellement. Not the cheery, cocky Tommy, not 'arf. The villain is the other two.

The Russian is actually willing to co-operate with the American, but he also has orders to carry out. The American distrusts Kravechenko and opposes him to help the hapless Viennese couple.

But the POW runs from both because both confront him with the villainy: the military uniform. The two fight each other, but he is afraid of both, even though one wants to catch him and the other to help him.

This is reminiscent of Georghiu's The Twenty-Fifth Hour. Except FOUR IN A JEEP is not so bitter, not so negatively anti all the superior forces, Russian, German, and American. In a much lighter and liberal manner, FOUR IN A JEEP shows what it feels to be a trapped European, afraid of all powers. And yet, the premise is that there can be workable co-operation and even friendship between the completely different - thinking Russian and American.

To all of us filled up with the fear of inevitable war, this attitude may sound quaint. But one comment made in FOUR IN A JEEP is a clue. The International Zone of Vienna, says an American MP officer, is one of the few places left in this world where the powers work together in co-operation. They work together because they have to.

Viveca Lindfors is excellent as the POW's wife. The four MP's, American (Ralph Meeker), Russian (Yoseph Yadin), British (Michael Medwin), and French (Dinan) are quite satisfying. The most delightful scenes are those involving the wife of the French MP. She understands only French and she is both voluble and happily Gallic in attitude.

This is a multi-lingual film, with the four speaking English to each other, but their own languages (French or Russian) to their own compatriots. Subtitles are used sparingly, only when absolutely necessary in long flows of Russian or French.

Musique de Chambre

Performing artists on Sunday evening in Hart House this week will be the Kresz-Hambourg Trio, consisting of Geza de Kresz, violin, Norah Drewitt de Kresz, piano, and Boris Hambourg, violoncello. Chamber music of this sort is not easy to come by in Toronto, and these well-known artists can be guaranteed to give a performance of high-est quality. Anyone who is fa-miliar with their performances each year with the Toronto Music Lovers' Club will testify to their excellence.

Leader of the group is Geza de Kresz, the violinist. Mr. de Kresz is of Hungarian birth, but has for many years been a Canadian citizen. He has made concert tours in Europe on numerous occasions, both as a solo artist and as first violinist of the famous Hart House Quar-tet.

The program on Sunday will consist of three works: the Trio in C minor, op. 101 by Brahms, Trio-Serenade by Paul McIntyre (a new work), and a Concerto by Jean-Philippe Rameau, early eighteenth-century French composer.

Tickets are available to members of Hart House at the hall porter's desk free of charge. Guests, including ladies may be brought on a double ticket. Concert begins at 9:00 p.m. in the Great Hall of Hart House.

Fledermaus Revamped In Broadway Style

"Opera", said Dr. Johnson, the famous eighteenth-century lexicographer, "is an exotic and irrational entertainment." Whether or not we agree with this statement as a generalization, it certainly applies to Johann Strauss' Fledermaus. Irrational it surely is—the mere fact that as in every opera, characters are continually bursting into song makes it so. Exotic it also is—its scene is laid in a place and time, in a state of society that does not, and probably never did exist. People do not pretend to be dukes and marquises and get away with it nowadays; nor is a hangover quite the delightfully musical condition it is made out to be in this opera.

It is, however, precisely because it is completely "exotic and irrational" that Fledermaus has attracted and held audiences for some three-quarters of a century. In recognizing this fact the Dietz-Kanin renovation of this opera currently playing at the Royal Alexandra scores its greatest success. No attempt has been made to rationalize any of its hilarious goings-on in terms of real life. Rather, instead of making the opera more plausible, the producers have made it less so. Not only do characters burst into song—they also burst into dance. Every bar of the score has been used to suggest stage groupings and movements in the same way as it would in producing a ballet. Some brilliant "choreography" leads to extremely amusing results, achieved solely by co-ordinating the gestures and movements of the actors with the orchestral accompaniment.

The second act particularly demonstrates the effectiveness of allowing the movements of the actors to be quite irrational, governed only by the music. A large chorus is on stage throughout most of the act, and its members, unlike those of most travelling opera-company choruses, can both sing and dance. Some striking effects are achieved, for example, in the languid number towards the end when everyone settles himself comfortably on the floor with someone of the opposite sex. Particularly clever, also, is the way the stage is cleared gracefully at the end of the act, sustaining interest (and preventing applause) right to the end of the inevitable dominant-tonic reiteration that closes the act.

Besides applying to Fledermaus the principles of good comic-opera production in these days, Messrs. Dietz and Kanin have completely scrapped the old libretto, and supplied the music with new text and lyrics. One would need to see the production several times fully to appreciate their wit; the lyrics particularly, are of a quality that would have turned W. S. Gilbert green with envy. Some of the gags in the dialogue seemed less brilliant, but this impression may well have arisen from the traditional unwillingness of a Toronto audience to let down their hair and laugh.

Although the production richly deserves the praise heaped on it by the New York critics last season, its realization here in Toronto is not always what one might desire or expect from the Metropolitan Opera Campany. (It is, of course, not the original New York cast that is performing here, but a new one recruited especially for the tour.)

It is with the orchestra that the chief fault lies. Strauss' music imperatively demands a large orchestra; he is of the age of Berlioz and Wagner, and his orchestration is designed for ensembles of similar dimension to those used by more pretentious composers. A group of about 30 musicians cannot do justice to it—inevitably, the strings will be completely overshadowed by the brass and percussion, and the result will be thin, at times even cacophonous, and a lot of interesting and amusing orchestral detail will be wasted. Since the transport of an adequate orchestra is apparently prohibitively expensive, the conductor, Kozma, should try to make the best of a bad situation, and improve the balance by judicious changing of dynamics here and there. That this is possible is demonstrated every year by Mr. Goldschmidt with the opera orchestra of the Royal Conservatory. As it is, however, Mr. Kozma has not succeeded in doing so.

The singing and action are of an almost uniformly high quality. Almost every singer's enunciation is sufficiently good to enable one to hear the words. The voices too, although not of the distinction one often associates with the Metropolitan, are good, and one never feels that the music is too much for them. Perhaps Brenda Lewis's Rosalinda and Virginia MacWatter's Adele should be singled out for special metion. Both of these ladies sang their difficult music to perfection, and succeeded in turning two stock figures of the comic opera stage into real, living personalities.

What should one say to the less than affluent student who asks, "Is this show worth going to see?" The answer depends on one's point of view. Anyone interested in seeing a slick Broadway production is well advised to go, even at the rather exorbitant prices being charged. From a strictly musical angle, the show is a disappointment.

Modern Program By Ray Dudley

Ray Dudley, pianist, gave the recital in the Hart House Wednesday afternoon series yesterday. Mr. Dudley is a first-rate technician, and accordingly, he made up his program exclusively of works demanding great technical skill. The Wanderer Fantasy by Schubert was the first work performed.

Like many of Schubert's piano works, this Fantasy gives the impression of having been conceived for orchestra and written out as a piano piece, mainly to suit the purses of the publishers of the time. Not only is it terribly difficult technically, but it sounds a little intellectual on the piano.

The climaxes have what Tovey calls a "smashed-china" effect. Mr. Dudley contended with the difficulties of this work in a thoroughly energetic, virile way, and produced a performance that stressed its dramatic unity, without worrying too much about the virtually impossible task of getting a satisfactory one.

In many ways the most interesting group was the one that followed. This consisted of contemporary works, with which Mr. Dudley feels entirely at home. "Two Conceits", by the Toronto composer John Beckwith were the first numbers in the group. They were followed by a work by the same composer, "Sonatette". Mr. Beckwith's style has undergone some modification in the four years since the "Conceits" were composed. In the earlier work he was content to strive for tonic originality; their rhythm is very orthodox and regular. In his new work he has succeeded in breaking away from the classical four-bar phrase, and the result is invigorating.

Mr. Dudley's contemporary group included with four short pieces from "Excursions" by the American, Samuel Barber. These charming pieces are based on American folk-music of various sorts, but again they owe their interest to the subtle alterations of the regular rhythm of the tunes and dances on which they are based. Particularly delightful was the Hillbilly Folk-Song. The song appears in the composition unchanged, but the cross-rhythms of the accompaniment make its accents appear to fall in the wrong places, throwing new light on the orthodox old tune.

Mr. Dudley should be commended for his brief introductions to the music he performed. It is to be expected that the artist himself will know enough about the music to be able to tell his audience something about it, but few artists seem willing to do so. Mr. Dudley is a welcome exception, and his explanations, made in a friendly, unpedantic way, added much to the enjoyment of the audience.

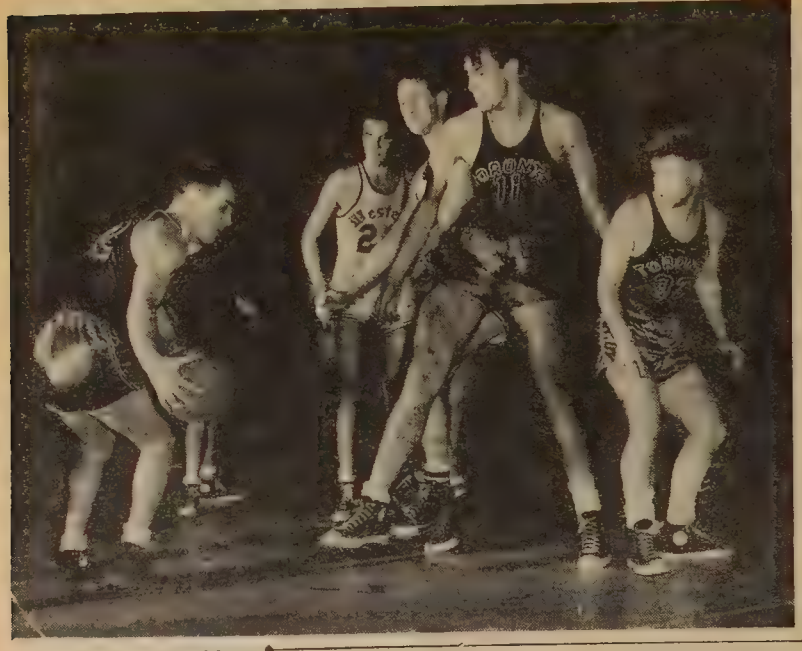
New Company Can'dian Ballet Formed Here

A new company has been formed in the country and like every new company, it has prepared a display of samples of various styles to send on the road in order to line up prospective customers. The reference is to the Canadian National Ballet Company which held its premier performance Monday evening at Eaton Auditorium.



Les Sylphides won the opening number and a fortunate selection it was. As a classic, and as a standard item on every company's repertoire, Les Sylphides serves as a yardstick whereby one group can be compared with another. The corps de ballet gave a delicately styled performance, particularly in the finale. Lois Smith and David Adams, dancing both solo and together contributed to the grace and classical simplicity of the numbers. The prelude was danced by Celia Franca, former choreographer for Sadler Wells, who is now the artistic director of the Canadian National Ballet.

The main item of the evening that followed, Salome, was choreographed by Miss Franca who has danced the title role. This was a lush and ornate melodrama, entrancing to watch. Miss Franca's Salome was a live and sensual figure, always in motion or in arrested motion.

In the Dance of the Seven Veils, she sustained excitement throughout, despite its length.

Judy Gotshalk's interperetation of Herod, was a vigorous one, and his preciseness foiled Miss Franca's fluid movements to just the right degree. As the infatuated young Syrian, David Adams played and danced his part well. Natalia Butko as the scheming Herodias did not always maintain the brilliant peaks she attained at times.

Basketball Time Again

The sight of a crowd of hopefuls trying out in the main gym at Hart House every afternoon from 5.00 to 6.30 brings back memories of the basketball season last year. This bit of action occurred during a league fixture between the Mustangs and the Blues in London last winter.

Varsity's Jack Gray is the man with the ball, while big Bud Natanson (11) is keeping George Wearring of the Mustangs in the background temporarily at least. Eddie Brennan (33) of the Blues has his eye on teammate Gray, while Bob Phibbs of the Mustangs looks on from the background.

The Mustangs won the game last year, but if the material performing in Hart House these nights is an indicator, they won't do it again.

Intermed Harrier Men Win Bring Back Yates Cup

The Intermediate Harrier team, after winning their championship at Western yesterday and finding that there was no trophy for it, went up to Thames Hall after the meet and got the Yates Cup from the Western Athletic Association instead.

The cup, which was won by the football Blues last week, was not to have been sent to Toronto till later. However, when one of the harrier team, after talking to Metras a while about sports in general and Western in particular, piped up, "Say, how about giving us the Yates Cup, eh?" Metras sent someone down the hall to get it. Much to the surprise of everyone on the team, the trophy was brought, boxed and ready to be taken away.

Noting that the "From Toronto to Western" address tags were still on the box, someone started to take them off, and Metras said, "Leave those on, you'll need them next year". A rather one-sided deal was struck whereby if the tags were torn off, the harrier man would personally have to carry the cup to Western next year if Western wins it back.

Toronto won the 5-mile cross-country race by a considerable margin over Western and OAC, placing men first, second, fifth, tenth and fourteenth. John Pike won in a fast time, 26:27, and Mal Crawford finished within ten yards of him. Doug Duncan of Western was third, Percy West (Western), fourth, Pal Johnston (Toronto), fifth. Other Varsity men were Bob Sheridan, 10th and Jim Bird, 14th.

Bobby Dale Tops In Scoring Race Jimmy Bell Fourth

Bobby Dale, Blue freshman halfback has been named the official winner of the Intercollegiate individual point scoring title. Bobby racked up five touchdowns in six games to give him 25 points, four ahead of his nearest rivals.

Cec Findlay of McGill tied Queen's Ross McKelvey for second spot, with 21 points, and Jimmy Bell, Varsity's place kicking end was fourth, as he booted three field goals and eleven converts for a total of 20 points.

Bill McFarlane's two touchdown performance on Saturday elevated him to a fifth place tie with Geoff Crain of McGill, both finishing with 15 points.

Speaking of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

Warren Stevens busted out of his office yesterday afternoon and nearly ran us down in his haste to get some place or other. "Hello" he said, "It has been a terrific season, hasn't it?" We nodded our head in agreement and spent a moment informing the worthy Athletic Director just how much easier it was writing about a winning team than making excuses for a losing one.

When next year's team was mentioned, the twinkle in Mr. Stevens' eye grew even brighter. It seems that only 9 regulars will be graduating come spring, and that prospects to fill their shoes are almost plentiful. Bruce Johnson, a freshman guard whom coach Masterson converted to an end early in the season will be the only outside wing returning to the Blues next season, but a couple of ends taking their apprenticeship with the Intermediates will be making their names known in senior Intercollegiate circles.

Alec Lawson has played his last football game for the Blues as well as Marsh Hames, a guard who turned in one of the best performances of his career against the Redmen last Saturday afternoon. Johnny Evans, team captain this fall, is graduating from Medicine this spring.

However, as Warren Stevens outlined, a complete backfield and enough linemen to give coach Masterson something to start with will be returning to action provided the team spend enough time between now and next May huddled over a text book. We must say that it is the first time in a long acquaintance that we have detected even a note of optimism in our friend Mr. Stevens who was by far the most nervous and least optimistic of any individual we have ever seen during the game between the Blues and the Redmen last weekend.

Coach Masterson of the Blues was handed quite a bouquet in this week's issue of "Saturday Night". In a feature article by George MacFarlane of the Globe and Mail sports staff he is alternately described as "one of the most colorful monetary missionaries" to the game of Canadian football, one who dislikes the Canadian game of hockey with "unreasonable intensity", and is one of the most imaginative of football strategists.

The article is an interesting one from the viewpoint of the Varsity student who has watched Masterson in action on Saturday afternoons and picked apart his strategy in the Hart House coffee shop.

A day with limited intramural action saw three soccer contests go by the boards. Knox, led by McKinlay, who scored three, blanked Wycliffe 4-0, hitting for two goals each half. Welch tallied their other marker. Senior Meds also applied the whitewash treatment to Junior SPS, beating the Skulemen 2-0. Goals by McDowell and Greenberg coming one each half, provided their margin of victory. St. Mike's and Emmanuel fought to a 1-1 draw in the other game. Kennedy of St. Mike's and Logan of Emmanuel did all the scoring in the first half.

In the lacrosse game Meds Firsts tied St. Mike's "A" squad for second place in their group with a 10-5 win. The Doctors had a 6-3 edge at the halfway mark, and added four more in the last quarter while St. Mike's only managed two. Stu Sims was the leading scorer for the winners notching three. He was backed up by Jack Gear, Bob McMillan and Denny Vince who had three apiece and Colin Kilty with the remaining one. Murphy played an outstanding game for the losing Mikemen and came up with two of their five goals.

On the volleyball front two extremely close matches took place as the schedule nears its end. Forestry downed UC Thirds 16-14 and 15-12, while Meds downed Dents "B"s by counts of 15-12 and 17-15.

Today's scheduled intramural football game between Junior Skule and Dents was called off but tomorrow there are two crucial Group Football games between undefeated Vic and Meds and UC and Senior SPS.

St. Mike's forced the play-offs to a third game when they defeated UC 24 to 20 in a hard-fought seven innings on slippery Trinity field yesterday.

The Double Blue established an early lead with 14 runs to UC's 9 by the top half of the third. The Red and White squad started to roll in the bottom half when they hit nine home.

The fourth game saw the UC gals hold the Saints to one run and then go on to hit 4 in themselves, gaining the better part of a 16 to 15 count.

In the fifth inning Therese Bauer hit a homer for St. Mike's to tie up the game and another Saint runner slid home for a scant one run margin. Mary Craw retaliated with a three-base hit with the bases loaded.

The sixth saw an inspired St. Mike's team smash in 7 runs. The UC batters were unable to connect and the game went into the seventh, the Double Blues leading 24 to 19. A determined UC squad fielded all the Saints' attempts in the last frame, but hit in only one run themselves due to the pitching arts of St. Mike's B. J. Fraser.

Therese Bauer, Nancy Prince and Phil. McEwen played well for St. Mike's, but the win was largely due to the efforts of B. J. Fraser, E. D. Bogomolny, Mary Craw and Heather Chipman were outstanding in a losing cause.

Journal Editor To Address Club On World Affairs

Max Vos, editor of the Canadian Journal of International Affairs, will address the International Relations Club on Thursday afternoon, November 15, at 4:10, at Cartwright Hall in St. Hilda's College.

Mr. Vos, author of many penetrating articles on current events, will present the IRC with a panorama of current international affairs. His topic will be "Highlights in International Affairs". A discussion period will follow.

SCIENCE NOTES

Forest Research

By ORIE LOUCKS

Everyone understands a University as a centre of higher learning. For the same reason it is a centre of research for nearly all the subjects taught at the University. Every Department at the University has to know what other research is being done in a particular field, and must be able to give advice if the others ask for it, or do new work of their own if they are able to finance it.

The Faculty of Forestry of this University is no exception. With the recent acquisition of 18,000 acres of a University Forest and the increasing importance of more research in Forestry, the University has already undertaken several projects, and is having plans for an even more extensive program along this line.

These projects include such things as planting tree seeds of different sizes from the same species to see if the size of the resulting seedling has any relation to the original seed size, and planting seedlings grown from exceptionally high quality trees, so that good seed may be obtained for seed orchards at low cost, with the hope that the plantations grown from these seedlings will be as good as the best naturally grown trees.

Probably the most interesting project at the University Forest is the undertaking of a complete management plan for the forest. This means that a long term plan covering at least 100 years or more must be laid down stating what part of the area will be cut, when it will be cut, and how it will be treated to ensure a good crop of the proper kind of trees for the next generation.

On any well-managed forest there is enough timber to cut some every year indefinitely. This is called the sustained yield method, and in order to have some direct relation to the difficulties involved in it the University has had to undertake sustained yield management of their forest.

The first step in making up the management plan is a detailed survey of all the timber on the area. This has just been completed as a practical exercise by the students in the Faculty of Forestry. Now come the problem of planning a system of roads through the area so that the timber may be hauled to a central mill. At the same time methods of planting, or a plan for the correct natural seeding must be considered. Alternatives here include such things as either planting or seeding before the cutting has been started, or either one after the cut. Also there are an indefinite number of combinations of species that must be planted in different areas according to the soil and moisture requirements of the tree neophyte.

The proper procedure in this and many other things is all part of the research problems facing the University in the matter of a management plan. Due to the rough terrain of the University Forest, and the general poor quality of the timber on it, the task is a most difficult one. If a successful solution as to what is the best way to handle it is found, it will prove that the many thousands of acres of waste land in Ontario now might some day be put to use.

McGill Debating Teams Compete In Vermont

Montreal (CUP)—Twelve novice debators won 13 of 20 debates at the annual tournament held at the University of Vermont recently. Forty-three universities took part in the event. Divided into six teams, each McGill duo debated with five colleges representing almost every campus in New England.

Subject of the debates was: "Resolved that the federal government of the United States adopt a permanent policy of price and wage control". In 1948 McGill took top honours at this yearly tournament defeating all its American opposition.

Almost all of the debaters had never entered intercollegiate competition before. McGill plans call for more intercollegiate debates between the United States and Canada this year. Highlight of the plans is the forthcoming tour of a Scottish debating team early in the new year. It will debate at McGill, Toronto, Queen's and Western in competition for the trophy established by Brading's Brewery. It carries with it a grant of $1,500 to cover each team's travelling expenses. Next year a Canadian team will visit Scotland to debate with four universities there.

Time Change In Great Hall

Dining hours in Hart House Great Hall for lunch and dinner have been extended by fifteen minutes. The Hall now opens for dinner a quarter-hour earlier at 4:45, and the lunch hour at noon has been extended from 1:30 to 1:45.

The changes were effected to avoid long queues if possible. Because more students are using the dining facilities at Hart House in the evening, the opening time for the cafeteria was advanced. Since many more students are eating at noon between 1:00 and 2:00 p.m. than during the 12:00 to 1:00 period, the lunch hour was extended by an extra quarter-hour in an attempt to avoid congestion.

CBC Satan

We have always taken for granted that the CBC was free to carry out its policies without government interference. But the events of the past few months prove the limitation of their freedom. As a result of pressure from a section of the public, their policies will be considered by the Parliamentary Committee on Radio.

This investigation is largely the result of the machinations of an organized pressure group, headed by various Catholic newspapers in Quebec, specifically "The Ensign". They have been joined, incredibly enough, by "The United Church Observer" and Dr. B. K. Sandwell. Strange bedfellows all round!

The primary object of their wrath was a series of talks given by Fred Hoyle, Cambridge mathematician and theoretical astronomist, on "The Nature of the Universe". But then, Dr. Brock Chisholm (there is no Santa Claus) and other speakers further annoyed the Christians in their talks on "Man's Last Enemy—Himself". The culmination of all this was a series by Bertrand Russell. By this time the Christians, who, if they were incoherent previously, were now totally incapable of registering their opinions with any degree of pertinence or sanity.

The basis for all their arguments seems to be, quite simply, that it is unforgivable to carry unchristian material over the CBC.

"The Ensign" called the Hoyle broadcasts "a blatant and brazen provocation of Christians, paid for by Christians". The upshot of "The United Church Observer" attack seemed to be that, however much religious programs were appreciated, unchristian opinions could not be tolerated. Sandwell made some irrelevant comment to the effect that the "CBC should not hurt people's feelings by talking about Christianity in such tones".

From such statements the non-listener would get the impression that Hoyle spent long radio hours denouncing Christianity in every conceivable manner. Actually, Hoyle as a scientist, was little concerned with religion, but rather with his theory of continuous creation. Perhaps this rapid by-pass of religion is hurt most.

After Chisholm and Cameron had been similarly charged with unchristian opinion, there was hardly enough venom left to attack Bertrand Russell. If there had been less competition, he would have called forth a blaze of rhetoric.

But the whole effect of the Christian accusations seems to be achieved by taking statements out of context and turning them into atheistical tirades. As the liberal Catholic "Prairie Messenger" observed, the speakers were scientists and "the cities accused them of making unchristian and anti-religious statements".

The whole controversy indicates the fear of an influential element of Christians of hearing other viewpoints. It is almost as if they believed that religion could not survive the so-called attacks of a series of half hour broadcasts.

And the most dangerous aspect of the whole discussion is the proposed manner in which the Concerned Christians have succeeded in dealing with the delinquent CBC. Through pressure exerted on the Parliamentary Committee on Radio, the whole matter is to come up for discussion.

Yet the CBC, if it is to function in the future as well as it has in the past, must preserve its independence of parliamentary control. While it is in every way possible to criticize the quality of its programs the question of its policy must be left for it to decide. Otherwise it might become as narrow and bigoted as certain Catholic and Protestant elements seem to desire.

OUR READERS WRITE

Radio Rumbles

Editor, The Varsity:

I think it's about time that certain ridiculous charges and implications made about myself and the Radio Committee should be cleared up. Up to now I have maintained patient silence since I felt that the smallness and nonsensity of the charges would be ignored by most people for what they were. But now I see that people like Miles Kennedy, whose letter was printed last Monday, believe these charges to be true.

First of all there is not and never was any animosity between Harry Rasky and myself. I have always had a deep respect for Mr. Rasky's ability as a writer and as a news editor. This respect was so deep that I am firmly convinced that Mr. Rasky is the finest news editor in town. But I honestly felt that Harry was not the best moderator in the world.

This was an honest criticism fully justified by reports given to me by various people. With all due deference to Mr. Rasky's ability, the position of a moderator is a difficult one that could better be handled by an expert in the field under discussion. It was my belief, right or wrong, that the best method of handling a program of this sort would be to have Harry produce the program and possibly announce it, but to have a different man act as moderator each week. This man would be either a public figure or a professor. The general idea was to have an expert in each field moderate the discussion concerning that field.

An incorrect report was printed in The Varsity. This report purported to have said:

(1) That I had already gone to the station and had Harry Rasky replaced as moderator.

(2) That I was willing to be the moderator myself.

This report was copied verbatim from a transcript of an SAC meeting. It was supposedly true. It wasn't.

No such report was given by me and I cannot see how anything other than mistakes in transcription or in interpretation could have been made.

What I really said was:

(1) No definite time had been set by Mr. Rasky and myself in deciding on a radio time for the program and that he was to take the matter up with the program director on his return from vacation. A tentative time of Sunday evening was established by myself and Mr. Rasky in consultation during the summer.

(2) That I was going to approach the station director with my idea of shifting the moderator and of inviting some noted figure as a permanent moderator. I did not say I was committed to this but merely that I was considering the idea.

(3) I did not offer to act as moderator. I think I used the expression "ten foot pole."

The second point at issue is one made in a Varsity Editorial on Monday, Nov. 5. This editorial charged that the Radio Committee was a closed group not fully representing the student body.

Nothing is farther from the truth. At the present time Radio Drama programs are being produced under Mr. Giles' direction in co-operation with the drama guilds of the four arts colleges. This does not leave out other colleges and faculties since any person on the campus may join these groups.

As for the Round Table, I think that a rundown of the programs produced last year will read like a directory of the various schools and faculties on the campus. Students appeared from all the Arts Colleges, the Grad School, SPS, Medicine, etc. As for the group who have a hand in producing these programs, all I can say is that you can't produce a program with 1,000 people helping. A group of eleven will do it this year. Membership in the group was open to any interested. It is still open. The requirement is to 'phone me and be able to speak English!

Rocky Martin,
Grad Studies.

So There!

Editor, The Varsity:

English, English, English. This is all I ever hear. Several days ago I was compelled to undergo an examination in English Composition. Needless to say I, like many others managed to obtain a mark under 50%. Is there any reason for such a grade? I think there is. First of all there were ten words to define. This to me is an absurdity. Do you know how many words there are in the English language? Well there are approximately 698,000. How just the English department is to test our knowledge by asking us to define ten of these. Many in this university were brought up in a medical, mathematical, or scientific environment. How many of the English department members can define kaleidoscope, interkinesis, and meiosis. Now don't run for your Oxford pocket dictionary Mr. Dean for I can think of many more, and also define them.

Then there was another part of the test and that was the punctuation of sentences. I doubt that I can call them sentences, for to me they were more like small paragraphs. In my life I have never came across such sentences, and never hope to. Most students in this university have been studying English for more than twelve years. They have managed to pass examinations qualifying them to attend such places of higher education. Now that we are here we are told we cannot understand or write English. Yet this rare English department can correct our errors by a series of approximately ten lectures. If I graduate after this I certainly hope that I do not have to use such sentences as these in order to prove that I have a university education.

Another task we were compelled to do was to write a precis. It is everyday I find postgraduates running about writing one or two precis. Nothing better to do than to write a precis to pass the time away. That is what I always say. My father graduated from university many years ago and he still writes a precis before retiring in the evening.

A university education in my estimation is the learning of practical knowledge plus some of the greater literature of the centuries. Its use, I may state is useless. How popular one is every time he meets a friend and comes out with "Do you know that Browning's Fra Lippo is ——". It is my suggestion that the department of English teach us to read and write according to OUR needs and not according to THEIRS. I might also suggest that not all students in the university are enrolled in that sacred course of HONOUR ENGLISH.

John Crang,
III UC.

They were a handsome group of young navy, army, and airforce students. All perfection of military drill was theirs; nothing was missing. In them one could surely see the finer aspects of life. These stalwarts prepare themselves for the, (Oh we really hope it won't, but just in case) possibility of war.

Bravely stood the naval Captain at his post. "Bombard the beach for two hundred yards," he called. And great guns rearranged the grains of sand. The signal came, the squadron roared down upon the small island, and witth complete abandon made desolate tthe offending piece of ground. Then the soldiers courageously walked through the world of desolation and crushed the little life that now remained. But in the midst three men survived; the soldiers neared them now.

Wait! What is their nationality? We must know this, for how can we condemn, if we know not the nationality? Are these three men German, "kill them"; English "save them". No! No! you are all mixed up. All we are allowed to save today are U.N. members and kill only Koreans and Chinese. We can't kill the Russians because we are not at war with them yet. We must consider Germans, Italians, Japanese might be for us next time.

"Teacher, couldn't we just keep the same nationalities always on the same side? I'm tired of always having to change my mind. Please Teacher, tell me whom to hate and whom to love, whom to kill and whom to save, and let them remain stable."

No, no, my boy, your comprehension of the economic and political factors which govern this matter, I fear, is very small. Let me enumerate a few significant points. First, you must understand that for hundreds of years there has been a term called "balance of power" which has been as significant as our present term, freedom.

This balance of power causes all nations to unite against the strongest nation at that time in existence. This alliance proceeds to demolish the great nation, until its significance is less than one other nation, which new petition receives the combined forces against herself, and is in turn demolished. The odd period of time between wars is necessary that the recently crushed nation may again be built up in order to join the allies in destroying its successor, (i.e., Germany today).

This shows why we must not only know the nationality of the three men on the island, but also we must have cognizance of the particular time or era. For example had the three men been Lower Slobovians, then we must know it is between 1914-18 "save them"; 1941-45, "kill them"; (looking into the future 1953-72 "save them"; 1972-74, "kill them."

Yes the three services made a beautiful show. How much do they receive a month? One hundred fifty-seven dollars, during summer training. But surely some persons are easier to kill than others. So the price or wage should vary according to the particular time and nationality that required killing—but they do make a fine figure, out there on a field of snow all standing at attention.

How does it come that the fine University men should spend time—far better spent on philosophical considerations — learning how to protect themselves against a mere term, "balance of power."

Do you remember the look on his face just before the blood oozed out from a little hole in the heart?

Union Start

—Varsity Staff Photos by Ted Sparrow.

At its first meeting of the year, the SAC Student Union Committee rejected a proposal to renovate the old observatory, pictured above, into a student union building. In the lower picture, the Committee's chairman, Cliff Wilson, Architecture, is seen reading the report which proposed a student and alumni canvass to raise the necessary money to build the union. The observatory may be used yet—as a campaign headquarters for the fund drive.

Seek OK For Campaigning As Union Plans Forge On

By IAN MONTAGNES

Wednesday night saw what may well be the greatest forward step taken towards the erection of a Memorial Student Union Building since a Union Committee was first formed on the SAC, three years ago.

At its Wednesday meeting, the Council passed a resolution to immediately investigate all ways and means in which money can be raised. Plans include a campaign among the students and graduates, to find the funds which have always been the stumbling block in Union plans.

The Council is going to ask the University authorities for permission to start a collection amongst the student body for the building. More important, should the University agree to such a proposal, it would be a commitment from the administration on its approval of a co-educational union on the campus.

So far such approval has been wanting. Last year the University had an expert in such unions come up from the United States to investigate the situation on the Toronto campus. His report was submitted to the University last spring, but no action has been reported on it. The report was described by Bill Gibson, last year's Union Committee Chairman, as containing little new material, as "just saying with authority what the Council had said before."

The report (by Edgar Whiting) stressed that it is the responsibility of the administration "to provide adequate facilities for extra-curricular activities for all students." It also said that for business reasons the need is for an all-Varsity co-educational union as opposed to separate college or faculty unions.

Proposed site for the new building would be on the plot south of the east wing of Hart House, so that the kitchen facilities of the men's union could be used in the new building.

The decision, Wednesday night, is the first step taken by students towards raising money for the Union. Up till now the main student work has been in drawing up plans for the building, while the financial end has been left to the University.

Two years ago, it was estimated that the cost of the smallest union possible would be about $600,000. President Smith intimated at that time that the University would be able to raise that amount from the surplus in the building fund. Since then the cost has gone up, as building costs have skyrocketed.

Last year, however, Dr. Smith told the Council that the money he had suggested could be used for the Union was almost completely gone. Rising building costs had cut the surplus down to $100,000 and that would be needed for buildings already under construction, he said.

This seemed to leave the student union without any funds. A general feeling of depression set in. Now the students themselves are seeking permission to go out after the money.

The Student Union Committee hopes to raise money both from the student body and the graduates. In order to interest the grads, it was suggested, Wednesday, that in addition to office space for the Council, the proposed union could contain offices for the Alumni Association, and accommodation for graduates.

Even though the money collected this year might not be large, it would be a start, the Council decided. A trust fund for the union could be set up with the money.

The idea of a Student Union dates back four years to the 1947-48 session, when the Council approved a proposal that a student union be built on a campus as a memorial to the University dead. It was first suggested that it be built on St. George Street. However, that site was dropped because it would conflict with Hart House as a cntre of campus activities, and would mean duplication of the Hart House kitchen facilities. For these reasons the site was moved to one adjacent to Hart House.

The union first proposed would have included separate and co-ed lounges, check rooms, cafeteria, coffee shop, private dining room, and a theatre or auditorium. It was also to have housed the offices of The Varsity, Torontonensis, and the services of the Council.

Ignorance Main Enemy Of Peace Says Voss

In the recent Gallup poll in the United States a majority of Americans did not know who Dean Acheson was, and thought that Canada was one of the American states, declared Mr. Max Voss, editor of the Canadian Journal of International Affairs, who spoke to the International Relations Club yesterday on "Highlights in International Affairs."

Mr. Voss used this illustration as an example of the almost unbelievable ignorance of many Canadians and Americans, and went on to emphasize that this ignorance is the main enemy of mankind . . . the ignorance breeds hate and hate nourishes war, he said.

Mr. Voss' address touched on four main 'highlights': the Korean situation, the Middle East, the British elections and the Gallup Poll taken recently in the U.S.A.

"What interests me most about the Korean peace talks," he said, is the attitude of mind that both sides have gotten into." The alteration in the cease-fire line demanded by the Chinese and North Korean representatives are not tremendously important to them except that failure would mean a loss of face This fear of losing prestige, he continued, means less to the western world than to the Oriental. He pointed out that we must "stop talking and then talk about it." Although he recognized, on the other hand, that this would allow the communists to stall discussions until they were ready for a new offensive, he claimed that if the fighting continues during the truce it will go on as long as one side has a rifle left in his hand.

Mr. Voss considers the real danger in Korea to be that "each side has given up the hope of understanding the mental processes of the other . . . and lines of communication have been broken down. This," he said, "is frightening to me."

In weighing the arguments on both sides of the situation in Iran, Mr. Voss noted the many good works of the Anglo-American Oil Company, but said that there is no doubt that they took more out of Iran than they put in. However he does not believe that the "sudden fervour of self-conscious nationalism" in this country was fermented by the Communists. He contrasted this to the Egyptian national feeling which he described as "artificially excited and hysterical".

"The Arab world is dynamite," he concluded: Burma and Pakistan would probably side with Egypt if it came to an open quarrel and this would split the British empire wide open. To avoid this "most dangerous occasion for war," he stressed the necessity of concilliating the Arab world.

JCR Untidiness On Lit Agenda

The University College Literary and Athletic Society open meeting will be held next Tuesday, November 20, at 7:30 at the JCR. This meeting, according to Lit Director Al Strauss, IV UC, should provide quite a few interesting results.

There are two important constitutional amendments to be presented, one concerning publications, the other concerning the permanent executive. The amendment about publications will make the secretary constitutionally responsible for the issuing of publications. The other amendment will limit the length of office of the permanent executive to five years.

The question of Russian students visiting Canada will also be brought up. A motion to the effect whether Russian students be permitted to make a tour of Canadian Universities will be presented, a discussion will follow and then a vote. Dave Rose IV UC, President of the Lit feels that since, "UC contains so many diverse elements, since it is the largest arts college, and since it is non-sectarian, that the vote taken will be the most representative vote possible.". It was also added that an "enthusiastic interest is anticipated" and that this matter will be taken up "early in the meeting." The UC Arts Ball will also come under consideration and Al Strauss stated "I will defend the poor working man who can't afford a suit of tails." Questions of decorations and how many orchestras will also come up about the UC Arts Ball.

The cleanliness of the JCR (Junior Common Room) will come under attack and Strauss states that "the JCR standing Committee will give its first intelligent report in 23 years."

The freshman president will present a motion to illustrate UC's enthusiasm toward the freshmen orientation program.

An important event during the evening will be the president's report. A statement of UC's position with regard to the recent cancellation of the pep rally will be issued. A committee will also be formed to decide a possible tangible gift to the college.

This will be an important meeting with regard to UC policy-forming so a good attendance is expected.

Re-imprisonment If Geneer Errant

The office of the all-Varsity prosecutor issued a formal statement today clarifying the charges which had been laid against N. Geneer, occupation Skuleman, accused of the barbarous bombing of the Law School float, which has aroused the ire and indignation of the entire campus.

The all-Varsity prosecutor (whose identity has been kept secret because of fear of attempts on his life) when issuing his statement warned Geneer that any attempt to leave the country would result in his being retaken under custody and again confined in the dungeons of Hart House. Geneer is quoted as replying: "Leave the country. Ha! They don't scare me. They know where the K.C.R. is, don't they?"

The all-Varsity prosecutor's statement continued with the following listing of the charges which Geneer faces. Attempted murder of Gloria May Swansong; willful and malicious damage of School of Law property; conspiracy to defame the good name of the University.

Meanwhile reliable international observers in Cairo claim a definite parallel between the bombing and recent outbreaks of assassination in the Moslem world. Law School officials hope that this will not become an international incident — at least no more violent than Korea.

It is also rumored that all dungeon accommodation under Hart House tower has been taken up with a new shipment of winter turnip and peanut and raisin salad which was stored today, completely filling all space generally used for all suspects.

Warden Nickle I. Ignition-Off, when queried about the presence of dungeons under Hart House, stated: "They were provided in the days when organization of political cells was a popular undergraduate activity, and they were not provided as a bar to student freedom of impression." He further categorically denied the stocking of turnips in the dungeons, pointing out that the very existence of a squash committee gives the lie to N. Geneer's allegation.

Xmas Greetings!

All West Indians on the campus who are interested in sending Christmas or New Year's greetings to their relatives and friends via their local radio stations are asked to contact Miss Viner, care of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, MI 5481, local 380, as early as possible. As this program is scheduled to be produced on Monday at 7 p.m. Miss Viner would appreciate it if all the people concerned would contact her immediately.

Face Lifting

—Varsity Staff Photos by Ted Sparrow.

These portraits all hang in Strachan Hall, in Trinity College. The face-lifting was an ingenious prank of Trinity students. The faces were neatly hung with small pieces of scotch tape to hold them in place. They were left hanging so all Trinity students would have an opportunity to see them.

The pirate is the Honorable and Right Reverend John Strachan, D.D., LL.D., founder of Trinity College University and first Bishop of Toronto. His face was damaged once before when a student threw a beer (?) bottle and the face had to be repainted. The tramp is the Reverend George Whitaker, M.A., first Provost. The face is described as "Weary Willy," and is from a Kellogg's Corn Flakes box. The monkey is Chief Justice Sir John Beverley Robinson, first chancellor of Trinity College University.

The pictures were all taken by Ted Sparrow on Wednesday. The portraits hang one on each side of the head table, and one on the west wall of Strachan Hall.

Probe Lack of Christianity On Campus of Western U.

The University of Western Ontario is going to be investigated by the National Church body on charges of barring religious representatives from its campus.

The Canadian Council of Churches decided to make the investigation at its annual meeting in Montreal yesterday, after charges by the Students' Christian Movement.

SCM National Secretary Rev. H. L. Puxley said that the bar doesn't mean students are prevented from joining the SCM or professing their religion, but "it means that any one with a religious message is not given access to the Western campus."

"I have waged every kind of possible warfare to change the situation at Western as this problem is more important to us than the cold war or the Iron Curtain," the SCM Secretary continued.

The charge was made during a discussion of the low ebb of Christian knowledge among the general public and among the students. Puxley was attending the annual conference of the Church Council as a delegate, as well as in his campus position.

It was finally decided to refer the matter to the executive of the Council for investigation, on a motion by Rt. Rev. A. R. Beverley, Anglican Bishop of Toronto.

During another part of the discussion, Mr. Puxley remarked that 70 per cent of non-Roman Catholic students claimed no church connection, and of the remaining 30 per cent, only a minority make any active profession of their faith.

Dr. Winnifred Thomas, Toronto, suggested that churches divert some of their mission funds for work among students. As a result of the discussion, the Council adopted a motion recommending that churches raise their allocations to the SCM by 25 per cent in the coming year.

Russian Student Visit Here Gets Unofficial UC Support

The UC Parliament yesterday defeated the resolution that it would be unwise to allow Soviet students to study at the University of Toronto, by a vote of 64-9. In the forced elections which followed, Vern Turner, IV UC, was chosen leader of the opposition. The UC Parliament is an unofficial body. The results of this debate will not influence the decision.

The first speaker for the affirmative, Don Michel, II UC, declared that nothing but hostility would come from a meeting with Russian exchange students since there is no basis for a compromise for the two different "minds" as they now exist.

"We have nothing to fear," stated Bert Bloom, IV UC, "let us weigh the relative folly of failing to invite them thus providing propaganda for them." Bloom went on to say that we should display our views and better widen what goes on in the Communist mind.

Grant Gibson, I UC, supporting the affirmative view, deplored the necessity of importing students from behind the Iron Curtain when we have communists close at hand. "You can have the Soviet Union and I'll take the student union," said Gibson in an aside remark.

The second speaker for the government, Michael Benazon, II UC, said the Russian students would feel out of place in this narrow, provincial, conservative sort of university. "Can you imagine those students visiting the JCR at noon?" he said. Benazon added that the expense and language barriers would present great difficulties and that no one wants to invite communist students to his home with the RCMP hiding across the street.

Inika Janicek, IV UC, and the second speaker for the opposition, replied that if this is really a democratic country there is no reason for the police to watch us. Miss Janicek declared that there would be no language barrier for the visiting students, as most students from eastern Europe know two or three languages.

When Vern Turner, IV UC, rose to speak for the affirmative, he upset proceedings by declaring the government viewpoint indefensible and then crossed the floor to join the opposition.

From the opposition side of the House, Ian Montagnes, III UC, stated that there must be a spirit of internationalism if there is to be no war. The gesture of extending the invitation is important to show that we are still open to cooperation, added Montagnes.

In a reply to a request to clarify the purpose of the debate, Al Strauss, IV UC, stated that the debate was merely for the purpose of debating and for the interest of the topic. The official feeling of University College towards the question of whether or not to invite Soviet students to study at U o T will be determined by the vote of the UC men's government on Tuesday, Nov. 20, and the vote of the WUA on Thursday, Nov. 22.

Federation Meet For St. Mike's

Almost fifty delegates representing some fifteen Catholic Colleges and Universities across Canada arrived at St. Mike's yesterday for the Seventh Annual Conference of the Canadian Federation of Catholic College students.

The Federation, usually called CFCCS was started at St. Mike's in 1946 and affiliated with Pax Romana, the International Movement of Catholic students, at Rheims, France, during this last summer. Suzanne McGrath, who graduated from Loretto College last year, represented the CFCCS at Rheims.

The main aims of the Federation are the sponsoring and furthering of close relations between Catholic Students and the defence of the interests of all Catholic students.

Some of the highlights on the agenda and program for this year's conference are a banquet at which Professor L. E. M. Lynch will speak on "the role of a Catholic in the University," discussions on Pax Romana, and an address by Bernard Ducret, General Secretary of Pax Romana. Mr. Ducret, from Fribourg, Switzerland, will speak on the "Role of CFCCS in Pax Romana."

The conference will continue until Sunday night when the new executive will be elected.

Retreat

On November 22 to 24 the annual retreat for university students will be held at Newman Hall. Retreat master, Rev. T. F. Tierney, C.S.P., emphasizes the purpose of a retreat, to provide for the student a chance to make a spiritual inventory of his life, and analyze in his own conscience how he stands in relation to God.

Lady in the Chair

Women moved another step forward in their plans for domination of the University of Toronto Wednesday night, when a woman took over the Chair at the meeting of the Students' Administrative Council. This is seen by many students to merely reinforce the strategic position gained by the "weaker" sex when they took over the senior masthead of The Varsity. The changeover came about when both the regular chairman, Dr. McBirnie, and SAC president Syd Wax were absent, so that Vice-President Valinda Burrus had to take over.

Norman Penner, LPP Condemns CCF Policy

Norman Penner, LPP candidate for York South, charged that "the policies of the leaders of the CCF have only confused, discouraged, and divided the people in Ontario and have opened the way for the strengthening of the two old-line parties." Penner further maintained that the CCF, Liberals, and Conservatives all agreed on the fundamental issues in the election and that there was no real difference between the three parties. "Indeed," he said, "the contest seems very artificial."

Penner was speaking at a meeting of the campus Labor Progressive Club. His topic was "Ontario: The LPP and The CCF".

The LPP candidate went on to say that the "issue of peace or war" had no part in the platforms of the three parties. "As far as they are concerned," he added, "this campaign may have been conducted in 1925." This is a far cry from the CCF Regina manifesto of 1939 Penner said, that opposed "imperialist wars."

Referring to the three parties, Penner asked how they could make "such fantastic promises when so much money is going into an economy that is geared to war. . ."

In the labor movement the CCF has carried out a policy of raiding, the speaker said. "Those unions who did not endorse the CCF as the political arm of labor were expelled as Communist dominated," he continued. "Charlie Millard even admits that he spent $550,000 in trying to break the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers."

Penner said that the LPP would support the CCF when and if they work for unity in the labor movement. "A stand for peace and labor unity was the only effective alternative to the Liberals and Tories," he declared. Penner has made an offer to Jolliffe, the Ontario CCF leader and candidate in York South, to withdraw from the running if Jolliffe took such a stand for peace and unity. Three CCFers, he concluded, have already supported peace by negotiation, and opposed rearmament, and as a result have received Labor Progressive support.

Ghitta Caiserman's "Boy With A Chicken," as shown above, is one of the eight pictures being considered for purchase by the Art Committee of Hart House. The others in the exhibition are: "Figure Study" by Grant MacDonald; "The Weeders" by Raquel Levis; "Leaside — Still Life" by Paraskeva Clark; "Still Life" by Sidney H. Watson; "Au Coeur de Rocher" by Paul-Emile Borduas; "Pastorale En Rose" by Andre Bieler and "Okanagan Valley" by Bruno Bobak.

These paintings were recently shown at the Toronto Art Gallery in the "Women's Committee 5th Annual Sale of Canadian Painting" and will be displayed in the Map Room only, until Wednesday, November 21st.

Members are requested to make their first, second and third choices of these paintings on the slips provided.

Bread, Candy In Slide Rules At Skule Nite

"Calculation Capers," the title given to this year's presentation of the annual Skule Nite, will feature calculation by many different means. The most prominent method will be various inversions, conversions and reversions of that ancient and venerable weapon of the Engineer, the slide rule. The slide rules to be used in this year's show are the product of both the ingenuity of Skulemen and the co-operation of several local bakeries and candy manufacturers.

There will be candy slide rules, slide rules that fold, bread slide rules, and slide rules that work all by themselves. There will even be some ordinary Log Log Duplex Decitrig Scalor.

In past years Engineers have been asked to eat marshmallows in large quantities to further the cause of Skule Nite; they have been forced to drink copious quantities of that brew that has made available to the campus the new debating trophy; they have consumed gallons of soup, water and other liquids too numerous t omention — all to help make Skule Nite a success. But none has ever been asked to make the sacrifice, the ultimate sacrifice, that one poor Engineer will make five times during this coming weekend.

For all those whose curiosity will not contain itself, the Engineering Society has made available several tickets to the Friday and Saturday night shows. They are on sale in the Hart House box office, the SAC office, and the Engineering Society Stores.

Philosophy With Riddles

Riddles are a sort of a question with no agreed method of solving them; therefore riddles are philosophy, said Professor Sparshott at the first annual meeting of the University of Toronto Philosophical Society at Wymilwood on Wednesday night. He stated that philosophy is an art or capacity, dealing convincingly with problems to which no satisfactory solution has been found.

He listed seven different types of riddles, some of which could be used to embarrass the person asked. Some riddles of this type could be evaded, while other could not, and some could even be turned against the poser.

Another type depends on puns, such as: "Where was Moses when the lights went out?" "In the dark."

Some riddles involve trickery. Others, such as: "Have you heard the one about the Englishman, the Irishman, and the Scotsman?" Nobody can answer until they know which "one", but really means, "I am going to tell you the one about . . ." This type of question arouses interest and expectation in the other person.

Professor Sparshott said that passwords are like the Sphinx' riddle, where, if the right answer is not given, the guesser dies. There is one right answer to a password and that answer must be known by the person asked! he cannot guess.

Questions and answers play a big part in life and philosophy, said the professor. The normal way of testing someone is to ask questions, since people feel that they must answer them.

Encore L'Affaire Ti-Coq

A penetrating article on the failure of Ti-Coq on Broadway and its relation to the rest of Canadian Drama.

By ROBERT GEORGE

Witness L'affair Ti-coq. You all remember L'affair Ti-coq even those who aggressively avoid what little theatre Canada has. It was badly-hooed in all papers and hashed over with embarrassment or relish by every periodical with a spurious claim to a drama critic. Ti-coq is a play with a Canadian author and a Canadian theme and setting. As such it is a rare commodity. However, the really outstanding feature of this play is that it was given a full scale professional production which ran for many months to Canadian audiences and a few performances for American audiences. The fact that Ti-coq was given such a performance and even managed to reach, (but not to grasp), Broadway, marks it of great significance in Canadian theatre development. But l'affaire Ti-coq goes beyond this. It is especially important because the history of this play sheds a powerful light on the Canadian theatre scene.

Mr. Gratien Gelinas, professionally known as Fridolin, wrote a play of Canadian subject and setting. Fridolin had in the past done practically everything connected with the theatre and had also pursued a very successful radio career as writer, director and actor. With experience, money and a fairly talented group of actors he produced a play named Ti-coq. Think back. Did you ever hear of him at this stage of his career? Not likely. Although his contribution to Canadian theatre had been of quantity and quality, he was rarely ever mentioned by critics and commentators even in our neighboring province. Whether this was because he worked in the medium of the French language or a result of a general apathy of Canadians in recognizing their own talent is hard to say. It is probable that both elements were responsible for his anonymity. The play was given in Montreal and Quebec, and was popular in both cities. In the former it set a sensational record, (for Canadian theatre), of two hundred consecutive performances.

After a year the author reintroduced his play to the Montreal audience in an English translation and began to repeat his former success. Did you ever hear about him then? No. Neither he nor his play had been discovered or appreciated by the dead representatives of the Canadian press. It is worth noting that while Fridolin and his play were a Canadian success they were not worth reporting outside of the province in which that success was made. It was just another example of the refusal of the Canadian public to even consider its own talent. But then what happened? This Canadian product became associated with the fabulous name of the United States, New York and yes — Broadway. Think of it. Broadway was to accept a Canadian play.

Follow the Leader

Now it was considered worth mentioning by the press, i.e., worthy of notice to the Canadian public. All the newspapers ran sensational feature articles with plenty of photographs on the man who had written the play that was going to Broadway.

Saturday Night plastered his portrait on the front of its magazine and blew up his achievements in style. The other periodicals followed suit. There is only one serious newspaper drama critic in Toronto and he mentioned the play with the average regularity of every third column for over three months. L'affaire Ti-coq had begun. It became loud and noisy. On the strength of this publicity the Royal Alexandra theatre was able to sell out completely a week's performance of the play—a rare event in the box-office history of that theatre.

This was the glorious height of L'affaire Ti-coq with the press, public and the critics praising and flattering the new play. Everyone felt that L'affaire Ti-coq was significant, that it would act as a catalyst for the previously stunted growth of Canadian theatre. There was new hope for Canadian actors. There was an incentive now for Canadian authors: a Canadian play was going to Broadway.

Degree-Bound

Gratien Gelinas was presented with an honorary degree last spring by the University of Toronto, on the grounds of his dramatic achievements. He is seen above in academic garb, in the procession to Convocation Hall.

Study In Irony

The rest of L'affaire Ti-coq is a study in irony. The climax occurred when the play was presented on Broadway. And here we had the first ironical twist. Broadway, which had made the play Ti-coq for Canadians, now chose to break it. Abiding by their own standards of artistic merit the Broadway critics almost unanimously panned the play. After three performances it closed. They didn't like the awkward change from dramatic comedy to melodrama. They realized the disparity of style in writing and acting between the two halves of the play. They felt that the realism of the first half reverted to a stylized performance in a second. They commended the charm and understanding treatment of the first half but accused the author of becoming theatrically glib in the second. They questioned whether the author had sacrificed his integrity of characterization in his second act portrayal of Marie Ange. They felt that there was not sufficient clarity in the performance because of the poor linguistic ability of the French speaking cast in an English performance. There were other criticisms, but it is important to note that the play was rejected for artistic reasons, i.e., for not standing up to the ideals or at least the averages of the playwriting craft. It was not rejected because the critics couldn't understand or didn't sympathize with the Quebec cultural traditions and divorce laws.

And so Ti-coq was finished on Broadway. What was the significance of this? Well, it obviously seemed an insult to the appreciative intellect of Canadian audiences and critics. After all they had gone overboard in their applause and critical acclaim. They had made so much noise that there was no turning back. Enforcing their tight little minds with anti-American prejudice and fantastic excuses they tried to give an explanation of the play's failure after its glorious Canadian acceptance.

New York critics were besieged with childish, angry letters from Canadians who declared that Broadway's refusal of the play proved conclusively that New York was insidious and decadent. Others cried aloud that they had been insulted beyond repair by these critics and several claimed that they would boycot any future American plays on tour in Canada. These petty mean actions of the public were rivalled only by the critics who now attempted to save face. This was done in a variety of nauseating ways. Our most prominent newspaper critic blamed poor publicity, which of course had no effect on the critical opinion which broke the play. He went on to say that Fridolin was unduly nervous on opening night. This of course was probably true. But his nervousness didn't affect the play writing which remained constant and was the main target of the critics' attack. In succeeding columns he went so far as to suggest that the failure might be attributed to a jinx on the Broadhurst theatre where the play was performed.

At this point I avoided reading any more explanations. A certain radio critic had given a good review of the play in comparison to his usual caustic comment. After the play's defeat he blandly announced that, although his previous review had been favorable, privately he had thought otherwise.

Misunderstood ?

These and other comments were hard to take. But the worst result of this attempt at face-saving was the famous Canadian excuse that "nobody understands us." This post mortem excuse was supported as much by Fridolin himself as his critical undertakers. He came back to Canada claiming that the critical approval of his play depended on the acceptance of the last act. The acceptance of the last act in turn depended on a sympathetic understanding of French-Canadian manners and morals. Now this point is important. The Canadian public presents a poor theatre audience (or for that matter a poor audience to any of the arts) and, as might be expected, there is a dearth of intelligent, informed and sympathetic critics to guide this public. The meagre support of a public numbering a million in greater Toronto for the few productions we have and a careful examination of our few pseudo-critics will support this claim.

However let's forget these two factions of the theatre and go back to the one I am discussing—the playwright. In this case it is Fridolin. Did he learn anything from L'affaire Ti-coq? When he proposed to make a grand Canadian tour, he found that there weren't the theatres to do it. He also ruefuly admitted that there was too great a disparity of opinion in the public appreciation and critical comment received in Quebec, Ontario and New York. But there is a more important point than these. Ti-coq is not the play it was touted to be, but it is not a bad play. No beginning drama author need be ashamed of a work of this caliber. In other words, we have a playwright in our midst. But he, ignoring the point that his play was severely censured on the standards of the playwrighting craft, joined in with the public and critics to the old Canadian wail of "nobody understands us."

Now let me make it clear that I do not hold the Broadway critics as gods hovering over the domain of Thespus. However, it must be admitted that the Broadway circle of critics reviews about ninety productions a year and that most of these presentations are original. In other words, they earn their daily bread by criticizing new plays as to direction, acting, decor and especially on the dramatic qualities of the script. How many plays does the Canadian critic review a year? Very few. How many are new, i.e., how many does he review within the first few months of their struggle for existence? Practically none. I therefore claim that, although they are by no means infallible, from the standpoint of experience, (if only that), we might do well to listen to what New York critics had to say. It would be of even more advantage for himself, as well as his public, if Fridolin had listened. But no, he shed his tears, roared his defiance and moaned his loss.

One of the most expressive faces in the Canadian limelight is the one above — call him Gratien Gelinas, Fridolin or Ti-Coq as you will. He was photographed at a press conference where he expressed the opinion that if "Ti-Coq" had received better advance publicity, and the right financial set-up, it would probably have been a success on Broadway.

At this point we come very close to home. For reasons which escape me, the University of Toronto presented Gelinas with an honorary degree last spring. Now it has always been my idea that university degrees, at least honorary degrees, were not given away like quiz show prizes. Let's assume they aren't. Then what is M. Gelinas' claim to such honour? Is it his past endeavours and successes in Quebec? Possibly, but you must remember that his work in Quebec went practically unnoticed by press, critics and public, i.e., he was not yet associated with the magic name of the USA. Why then the degree last fall? Oh no. It couldn't be—but is it? Were the powers that be in this university intimidated by the hot air and ballyhoo that surrounded L'affaire Ti-coq? Did our great sanctuary of wisdom, like our public and critics, succumb to the glamorous influence of the play's Broadway connection? But Ti-coq flopped on Broadway. Why then the degree? Fridolin has beaten his head against the brick wall of public apathy to further the progress of Canadian theatre. He has written an admittedly attractive play. However, as already stated, most of his work has been unknown and, further, his play is not of any exceptional merit. Was the university attracted and intimidated by all this noise? And, in view of the play's failure,—was this degree also a consolation prize.

Matter of Degree

I take my pen from the acid ink and consider a moment. These are impertinent and blasphemous terms. I had better stop. However, this university has, with a remarkable lack of insight and with aggressive ignorance of the Canadian theatre scene, refused and consistently refused to establish a chair of drama on this campus. Is this then their way of recognizing the importance, the significance, of a potential Canadian theatre? Their way of supporting our theatre, it seems, will be like the rest of the mob.

And so, I have a word for those on the campus who think of something besides themselves. And especially, I address those who might be interested in the theatre. Go ahead. Strive for your goal. If you manage to be recognized by some faction outside of Canada then Canadians in turn, shocked by the possibility of talent in their midst, will acclaim and support you. But what if you fail in this other country? Never mind, you can come back to Canada and sob with the rest that "nobody understands us." But look up. Better days ahead. The University of Toronto might give you an honorary degree. Mind you, they won't admit your possible existence or make any attempt to help you in the initial stages of your career. If you want to act, then do it to the detriment of your studies. If you want to study direction, then that's just to bad. If you look for training in playwrighting, then that's too bad also. You won't even find a good course in the history of the theatre at this institution. But don't let that get you down. These matters are trivial. Think of that possible degree. Struggle and fight.

L'affaire "Ti-Coq" has more significance than that centering on the play itself. It sheds a powerful, searching light on the Canadian threatre scene—its public, press, critics, and even the attitude of our own university. And what does the glare show up? Something tragic? No, the word tragedy could never be applied to a situation as cheaply ironical as this. If we try to classify it, in dramatic terms, we will have to revert to the field of comedy—low comedy. L'affaire Ti-Coq and the situation of our Canadian theatre is, in terms of the drama, a farce—and a bitter farce at that.

VIC BEAT MEDS, UC TIE SPS

Vic Clinch First Place By Beating Meds 18-0 Goodfellow Scores Two

The unbeaten Victoria college football squad breezed to another triumph yesterday afternoon as they trounced the Medical twelve 18-0. The Medsmen just didn't have it. Coach Lew Fick sent on his first and second string without any worries and they both performed equally as well.

Vic half Ebbie Goodfellow led his teammates with a brilliant two touchdown performance. He and John Bond were great offensively, tearing off long gains off-tackle and around the end on pitch outs. Mal Frazor was also going well until he aggravated an old injury in the second half.

The Doctors never even came close to scoring a major except late in the second quarter when Hevenor's kick went off the side of his foot at the Vic 25 yard line. Wheeler threw a pass intended for Stipec which was incomplete and then the half ended.

The Medsmen finally had success with an aerial attack which they had been trying to get under way throughout the game in the second half. Andy Copolino threw three strikes in a row to Sudetz for three first downs but it was too late. Jones played a good defensive game for Meds at the right secondary position.

Victoria's first touchdown came early in the first quarter when tiny Tony Lobraico fell on a Meds fumbie at the seven. Frazor carried to the one and then Hevenor took it over but the play was called back because of an offside. Goodfellow took a pitchout from Fowler on the next play and went over standing up.

Just after the second half was under way, Goudie intercepted a Meds pass and took it to their 37. Frazor and Lodge carried for a first down and then Bond scampered 25 yards around right end to pay dirt.

Goodfellow concluded another Vic march from the Meds 35 with his second touchdown of the day. Art "Sugarfoot" Williams converted all three Vic Majors.

Don Bond is seen in one of his good runbacks in yesterday's Vic-Meds game, as he got by this unidentified tackler. Bond also scored one of the Scarlet and Gold touchdowns as his team defeated the Medsmen 18-0 and on the strength of this win clinched first place in Group 1 again this season.

UC Softballers Beat St. Mike's In Final Game

UC girls won the intra-mural softball championship yesterday when they defeated a determined St. Mike's team, 18-12 at Trinity field.

The first two innings saw both teams playing cautious ball with two runs apiece by the end of the second. In the third frame, St. Mikes' batters were unable to connect, but UC, inspired by a homer smashed by Heather Chipman, walloped in 12 runs to put the game on ice.

The next two innings saw the Saints' atempts to break into the scoring squashed by the Red and White fielders, with the PS squad batting in three runs in the bottom of the fifth.

The Double Blue started to click in the sixth frame hitting in three runs and holding the UC gals down to one. By the seventh inning the Saints hit their stride banging in seven before the Red and White team came to their senses.

Edith Bogomonly and Heather Chipman both hit homers for the winners while Therese Bauer, St. Mike's catcher, and Nancy Primeau turned in steady performances for the losers.

Speaking Of Sport

By DAVID ROTENBERG

The Intramural football schedule is now entering its final week and it is about time to look at the playoff picture as it is shaping up.

On the strength of yesterday's 18-0 win over Meds 1, Victoria's Scarlet and Gold clinched first place in Group I and the right to meet the Group III winners, Junior SPS, in the semi-finals. The Vicsters now have four wins and one tie for nine points, three more than UC.

The 6-6 tie yesterday between UC and Senior SPS, has really complicated matters. The present standings show the Redmen in second place with six points, and the Engineers in third, one point behind. Both teams have one more game to play, but the UC squad have the advantage as they meet the winless Medsmen while Skule must take on Vic.

If UC win their final game, or if SPS lose, then the Artsmen will have the final playoff position sewed up. If UC lose and SPS win then the Engineers will enter the post-season play against the Group II winners. But if the Redmen tie and the Engineers win or the UC team lose while the Skulemen tie, then there will be a tie for second spot in Group I and a special sudden death game will be necessary.

The situation in Group II is almost as complicated, but it can all be solved this afternoon. Right now Trinity is on top with seven points with St. Mike's three points behind, and both teams have two games remaining. These two squads meet today and a win or a tie will clinch the group title for the Buttery boys. But if the Irish can come through, they will pull up to within one point of the Red and Black, and both teams will meet the winless Forestry crew next week.

The Mikemen take on the Woodchoppers on Tuesday and if they win or tie this one (and it will only be played if they win today) then Trinity will play Forestry a week today. The possibilities in this group are too numerous to go into detail.

If (here we go again), Trinity win this afternoon, and Group I doesn't end up in a tie, then the semi-finals will take place next Thursday, with the finals the following Monday. Here the schedule makers run into another problem and that is the Grey Cup final. The semis are usually held as a doubleheader in the Stadium, but with the big game on there next Saturday, the Bloor Bowl must lie unused for the three previous days, which will force the intramural teams onto the back campus.

But if St. Mike's win today or Group I ends in a tie, then the semi-finals will not be until a week from Monday and the finals the following Thursday, and the Stadium will be available for all of these contests.

The ony thing that is definite is that Victoria meet Junior SPS in the semi-finals. After that it is anybody's guess.

Goberis' Last Play Kick Gives Redmen 6-6 Draw Brown, Mowat Get TD's

By FRANK QUINLAN

The Red and White footballers from UC roared back with a last minute single to tie SPS 6-6 yesterday on the back campus. The Engineers were on the brink of elimination; a loss would have given the second play-off spot to the UC team. UC can still cinch the coveted spot by beating Meds next Monday; they have a one-point lead over the Skulemen who tackle Vic next week.

It was hard for the Engineers to accept the tie as only 25 or 30 seconds stood between them and a win, but that was all the time UC's Charlie Goberis needed to boot the ball over the deadline and gave the Redmen the tie. At that it took him two kicks to do it, as his first boot from the 40 rolled over the goal line, and SPS elected to return the kick, which turned out to be unwise. Enough time remained in the game for Goberis to hoof one over from the 20.

The Skulemen drew first blood in the second quarter, when Keith Mowat plunged over from the 10 to climax an SPS march from deep in their own territory. Prendergast and Ella had ripped through the UC line almost at will to set up the touchdown play. Kerr's convert made the score 6-0. Skule threatened again before the end of the half when Mowat recovered a UC bobble on the latter's 40. A pass put them in the 25 but UC held and the Engineers tried a field goal. The UC line charged through and blocked the kick just as the whistle blew.

UC stepped up their offensive in the second half after Richardson returned SPS' kick-off to the 20. On the next play he dangled 20 yards around end behind good blocking. Ralph Brown, a consistent ground-gainer all day, tried the other end and found it to his liking as he rolled off a 25-yard gain. SPS brought a halt to UC's march when Ella intercepted Peebles' pass on his own 20. After Brown returned a Skule kick to his own 50, a pass-out went awry in the UC backfield and members of both teams kicked and dribbled the ball down to the 25 where UC managed to nab it.

A blocked kick in the fourth quarter led to the UC major. After a good UC boot put the Engineers on their 3, the Redmen broke through to block the kick and recover on the 7. Brown bounced through for the TD on the next play, but Peebles' try was low to make the score 6-5 for the Yellow and Blue.

UC got a break when another blocked SPS boot forced them to kick over again from deep in their own end. With the minute flag waving, the UC'ers made a determined drive, which culminated in Goberis' point. The disappointed Skulemen had time for one desperation pass which went incomplete as the whistle sounded to end the game.

Prendergast, Ella, Bowie, and Sinder played well for the Engineers with the first two in particular standing out. John Riddell spearheaded a hard-charging SPS line that blocked four UC kicks. Brown was UC's best with Richardson running him a close second. Playing-coach Byron Peebles played his usual good game for UC until he was taken out in the fourth quarter with a shoulder separation.

Intermede Blues Off To Get Title

The Intermediate football Blues, champions of their own league this fall, entrain this afternoon for Kingston in an attempt to add the Canadian Intermediate Intercollegiate title to their collection of jewellery. The RMC Cup, last played for in 1935, was won by the Guelph Aggies.

The Baby Blues will meet the Queen's University Intermediate team, who are undefeated in their league this fall. The Eastern League includes RMC, who finished in second spot behind the Gaels, the McGill Intermediates, Ottawa University, Madonald College, and St. Patrick's College in Ottawa.

Two of the chief threats on the Intermediate Gales are backfielders McKelvey, younger brother of the famous Ross who made a name for himself in Senior Intercollegiate competition this fall, and Earl Surphlis, a graduate of East York High School here in Toronto.

The Blues will be saddled with a couple of injuries for the game tomorrow afternoon. Quarterback Doug Geekie is sporting a bad ankle from the game with the Aggies last weekend and will be on the sidelines. Al George, Baby Blue linesman, is a bruised speciman after playing with the Senior Blues against the Redmen last weekend and is a doubtful starter. Bill McKenna, guard with the Intermediate Blues, will be playing with a cast on his broken wrist. McKenna played the last game in the same condition and found that his play was not hampered at all by the plaster of Paris on one arm.

Varsity Juniors Win Water Polo

The Ontario Water Polo League began its schedule in Hart House pool last night, with the Varsity Juniors registering a 26-0 triumph over a completely outclassed Central YMCA B team. The Blue swimmers took a 14-0 lead in the first quarter of the contest and just coasted in from there.

The Varsity team was superior to their opponents in every department. On the forward line, Bill McIlroy and Bernie Langer led the scoring, and helped the Blues to rack up the highest water polo score in many years.

On defence, Bob McKenzie, Bill Bulk and Al Roger turned in mid-season performances, and kept the Y team from getting many clear shots on goal. Hart Robbins, rookie goalie, registered his first shutout for the Blues.

Pitching Sportshoes

There was one game in intramural soccer yesterday. Russell scored the lone goal of the contest to give Sr. U.C. a 1-0 victory over the S.P.S. Srs.

On the volleyball scene there was plenty of action with six games carded. S.P.S. V came back after losing the first game 15-7 and won the set 17-15 and 15-11 from Pre-meds I.

Jr. Vic was swamped by Dents A as the Dentists ran up 15-2 and 15-4 scores. Pre-meds II yr. took the first from Law 15-7 but lost the series 15-12 and 15-7. S.P.S. IV walked over Architecture 15-4 and 15-6. Vic IV beat Wycliffe C 6-15, 15-4 and 15-7. In the last game of the day St. Mike's D edged Wycliffe B, losing the first 13-15 and then winning the next 15-9 and the close saw-off 15-13.

In lacrosse, the action was featured by a pair of shut-outs. Dents took Meds III 7-0 and Vic III blanked Meds IV 3-0. For Meds in the first game, Darling was top man with 4 goals assisted by Philips, Angus and Shirer scored for the Vicmen.

By DAVE PEDDIE

When students put on one-act plays such as the U.T.D.C. did last Tuesday and Wednesday, it is very easy for the critic to say that they were all bad. But even though the were generally bad I must admit that I enjoyed them very much. The mistakes and blunders were never too serious and the actors were obviously still learning and trying themselves out.

However, looking back on all six plays, there are some general criticisms that must seriously be made. The worst fault on the whole was that too little work had gone into the shows. With the sole exception of, I think, HELENA'S HUSBAND, all the plays looked like they needed another week of rehearsal so that people could become used to their lines and movements. In many of the movements especially, the actors looked a little dubious about their positions. Usually their doubts were well founded for they were either awkward or in somebody's way. Another major fault was the speaking. Nothing can infuriate an audience more than not knowing what is being said, and unfortunately this was often the case. Either the actors were not speaking loud enough, as in X=O, or they were speaking too quickly and sloppily. This last was most obvious in The Spartan Girl which was very funny when understood, but alas that was seldom.

It seems to me that these one-act plays could be much better if time and effort were given to them. There seems to be plenty of good plays that give students a chance to do something worth while without the responsibility of a three-act play. There were good things done but not all together in one play.

The setting of X=O before the walls of Troy was superb and the atmosphere created by the playing was in keeping with the play but no individual stood out from the setting. The acting of Margaret Griffin as Doris in Fumed Oak was realistic and very consistent. One usually expects an accent or an attitude to fail somewhere, sometime, but Doris was always Doris. The best acting of The Spartan Girl was by Ron Williams but the others all caught the spirit of the play and seemed to be having a wonderful time but, as mentioned already, they didn't want to share it.

On Wednesday night, the highlight was a fine performance of a farmer's wife by Marilyn Campkin in Susan Glaspell's Trifles. This play too, had good pacing and build-up to the climax. The Purple Doorknob was a pleasant little comedy that was not outstanding but good. The last play of the evening, Helena's Husband, was the smoothest — with no blunders and everyone playing together. Judith Cunningham was very funnyand carried off the acting laurels here.

As I said — it was bad but it was fun and I think that we can get just as much entertainment out of such a bill of one-acters as out of any full-length play produced by students.

that the only honourable stand was the one taken by UBC and McGill. I do not think it is likely that the Russians would arrive with atomic bombs in their pockets, he said, nor that Canadians (from what I have seen of them) are likely to come back from Moscow converted to Communism. We live in a world of "fear and hysteria," he added. "I really think that if the traffic cop at King and Yonge were proved to be a Communist we would feel honor-bound to disobey his laws."

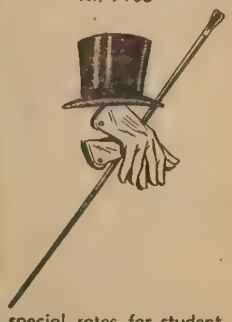
Lieutenant Amadee Mannheim seems engrossed with figures — digits, that is — and utterly oblivious to the charms of Miss Fifi de la Rue, in a scene from Skule Nite depicting an engineer's conception of the birth of the slide-rule. Irene Flemwelling and Eric Jones, the dazzling young woman and bright young man above, are featured in the Parisian Cafe scene from Skule Nite '52 playing Friday and Saturday at Hart House Theatre. Other attractions are calypso, magic and, of course, The Machine.



Moderation Vs Abstinence

The Engineers, of forty-beer fame, will be put in the unexpected position of defending total abstinence in a debate with the St. Joseph's College Debating Congress, "Resolved that temperance is achieved through moderation and not through total abstinence". The debate will be held at St. Joseph's College on Nov. 21 at 8:00 p.m. in the Common Room. St. Joseph's, having extended the invitation, will uphold the government and this is the reason the engineers find themselves in unfamiliar territory.

Final arrangements for the speakers will be made through Jeff Hyde and Anne McGinn. Students from every faculty are invited and a large turnout is expected for this big event. Miss McGinn will be in the chair.

Straight Facts

We are going to write about the Russians again. Not at any length, nor in loud voices, but to state as simply as possible the questions which should be answered by all colleges and faculties throughout the university.

Despite Victoria College's statements to the contrary, there appears to be some misunderstanding as to precisely what the students are expected to decide upon. And because we believe the issue to be an important one, it seems eminently desirable to avoid any confusion.

Here, then, are the questions as presented to the Students' Administrative Council by External Affairs Chairman Graeme Ferguson last Wednesday:

1. Are you in favour of having Russian students visit Canadian universities, specifically the University of Toronto.

2. Should the University of Toronto ask the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) to re-invite the students this year.

3. Alternately, should we ask NFCUS to invite the Russian students next year.

The first question is clearly a matter of principle, whether or not we are in favour of NFCUS sponsoring a visit of Russian students to Canada.

As to the second point, it should be explained that it is still possible to re-invite the Russian students this year, at a meeting between Western Student Unions and the International Union of Students to be held this December. But first the Executive of NFCUS must be asked to re-open the question and to ask each university member to hold a referendum on whether or not they favour such a visit. The University of McGill has already requested that the issue be re-opened; our support would greatly strengthen their stand.

Dependent upon rapid action, there is still a strong possibility that the Russians could visit Canada this year. If this is not successful, however, the alternative of asking NFCUS to invite the Russian students next year could be adopted.

There still appears to be some confusion about the nature of the proposed visit itself. So we will conclude with a few facts about these aspects.

1. The Russian students, with the permission of their national student union, have already accepted the invitation.

2. The proposed visit, not exchange, would last about four weeks.

3. About 15 Soviet students would be included in the visit, some cultural representatives, some student leaders.

4. Neither NFCUS nor universities separately are under any financial obligation. The Russians would pay their own way by giving cultural performances in music and ballet. Any deficit would be made up by the Russian student union.

So there they are, not all the facts, not any of the arguments, but the main points which may somehow have been passed over by many people.

From now on the question is in the lap of the gods, which, in this case happen to be the students of the University of Toronto who have not yet decided.

Catcalls

Editor, The Varsity:

I wish to reply to the author of the Champus Cat (Nov. 15), with regard to his satire concerning the triservice parade on the campus and the purpose of the three armed services represented by those students parading on Nov. 10.

To begin with, I would uphold his right to publicly hold his opinion though he has given it in blissful ignorance or with deliberate purpose. His inaccurate report on the rates of pay is relatively unimportant in view of the deeper ignorance his article boldly proclaims.

I defy him to find one of the students enlisted in the three services who is there to uphold any aggressive "balance of power."

I beg to suggest that those enlisted in the University Armed Services' schemes are in those services because the very privileges which we all enjoy on this campus, and in our home communities are dependent upon the survival of what we loosely sum up as "The Canadian Way of Life"—of academic and political freedom, and all that such a Way means to Canadians.

We are aware that forces within this world to-day would gladly subvert or stamp out that way of life.

Some of the students in these Services are veterans who learned first-hand the real hell of war. Neither they nor the other Students who are "part-time soldiers, sailors or airmen" want such hell on earth again. Training exercises with live ammunition, rockets, and flame-throwers are ghastly and as close as we want to get to such hell as war obviously is.

Why then do we study principles and tactics of war? Because we now that you cannot begin to lecture to the barbarian at your country's gates in "philosophic considerations" (such as the Champus Cat so nobly upheld).

If barbarians—indeed any aggressors of any sort—ever knock at the gates of Canada, or threaten her way of life by acts of violence, then let us pray that at least some of Canada's sons are ready to put "philosophic considerations" aside, and deal with the Enemy on on his own terms!

Editor, The Varsity:

I have in the past received certain shocks resulting from read articles in The Varsity. However, I must admit that none were qui great as the one I received on reading yesterday's "Champus C whose good name thereby suffers in my opinion. In my three year this institution, till now, I have apparently been suffering under misapprehension that the "Champus Cat" was designed to be amusing little article containing bits of social and campus satire a articles of mild amusement. Apparently it has now become a curtain anonymity behind which certain "philosophical intellectuals" can h and hurl their barbs of derision at a much larger element of stude than themselves who have given themselves up whether rightly wrongly to training themselves for the defence of our country in e that war, which none of us is fool enough to wish for, does a threaten us.

That wars are a foolish and ridiculous attempt to solve wo problems goes without saying amongst people with common sense. S who do participate in practical training in the ways whereby they help protect their country and their ideals and way of life are me showing a little practical realism in their approach to the probl No one wants war but we must be ready should it come upon u believe that our society, that is, Western civilization, is the foun from which the ideals of a democratic way of life may be spread other peoples of the world who do not get benefit from such a sys Should we sit back and attempt to appease any "philosophical consid ations" such outside powers as may choose to overrun us or is it be to be prepared to repulse such attacks on our home and our way of l

If the author of this article (who so discreetly withholds his na can devise a way for achieving world peace by "philosophical consid ations," I suggest that he present it to the United Nations that he hereafter be known for all posterity as "The Great Peacemaker hardly think that the ex-servicemen who have formed an appreci percentage of the student body in the past few years and some of wh still form one of the better elements of the campus would appre being as good as told they were fools for ever opposing the Axis pow in the recent conflict, but rather they should have sat and "turned other cheek" to this threat to our way of life and involved them "philosophical considerations."

The allusion to the paid hirelings for killing to which the au seems to reduce all the armed services betrays a lack of knowledge the essential facts and of their aims, in fact it betrays a lack of ab to see beyond the end of his nose.

I believe strongly that such articles should not come under "Champus Cat" column and that they should be signed by the name of the author. Along with it ,more practical suggestions sho be made whereby "philosophical considerations" can solve wor lems rather than indulging in a tirade of ridicule at what our count at present, considers the answer to the problem.

The Rasky Story

Editor, The Varsity,

Honest! I'm not a bad guy.

Next time anyone says to you "Do Unto Others as You Would Have Them Do to You" . . . hide from view . . . or shoot him dead. It just doesn't pay.

Let me explain . . . and to do that I'd better go back to the beginning . . . when I was a student just like you.

When I was having a good time, not working too hard, and attending the odd lecture (and some of them were odd) I got involved with the Radio Committee. As a matter of fact, I was a member of the first radio committee that there ever was on the campus.

I found that producing a radio program was not an easy job. Luckily at that time, working on the committee, was a gentleman named Ross McLean, who was working for CKEY, while attending college. Because of his station affiliation, we were able to produce some pretty good shows. Most of us realized that we would never have been able to do anything much without an "inside man" . . .

Anyway, when I got involved in radio, I thought it would be an excellent idea to give you students a helping hand. I persuaded my boss that we might do well to carry a university program on our station. Since students and professors spend a good deal of time discussing things, we thought it would be a fine idea to have a discussion-group on the air, a round-table discussion.

I decided to give my time free to produce and moderate these shows. I realized, unhappily, that I am neither the best producer nor the best moderator in this world, but I knew that there would be no such show unless, I personally did a major part of the work.

I gave up an evening a week and two or three afternoons to arrange these programs. I did it because I thought what I was doing would be appreciated . . . so I thought. In fact when I was finished, I thought perhaps the SAC would send me a small present, maybe a stop-watch to produce its shows, or even a letter of thanks.

Instead, I picked up The Varsity one day, to read all sorts of nasty things about myself. Not being the nasty type, to say the least, I was shocked.

Then someone said I was having a feud with Rocky Martino. Not being the feuding type, I was shocked again.

Really, I'm not mad at anybody.

I invented the idea of the "Minds and Men Show," I gave my time, and my energy, I g no thanks, so perhaps you might say, I'm a little put out at being dragged all over the front pa and the back page (to mention nothing of a few inside pages) o The Varsity.

If the SAC likes, I'd be happy to act as moderator again, and it has expressed that desire. If the SAC likes, I'd be happy t act as producer, and train a few students for the job while I'm at it.

What is more, I'd like to help the radio committee in any way I can. Perhaps we might do a couple of special dramatic shows after the first of the year. But please, please, if the radio committee and the SAC are having difficulties, I do wish they'd leave me out of it.

I will operate with whoever the SAC sees fit to name as director of radio round-tables, only if I am assured that there will be no more internal difficulties. Is that asking too much?

As I said in the beginning. Honest! I'm not a bad guy.

Pax Romana

CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

Catholic Gathering Confers On Peace

Rosaire Beaule, the 21-year-old McGill law student who was elected president of Pax Romana at Rheims, France, last summer, told the delegates to the Canadian Federation of Catholic College Students (CFCCS) conference at St. Mike's on Friday that it was the duty of Catholics and of all Christians to unite in a world shaken by forces of evil and defend their beliefs.

He said that this evil resulted because of the fact that Christians and the remainder of the world have become materialistic.

Beaule addressed the conference on the role of the CFCCS in Pax Romana, the international movement of Catholic students. The Federation of Canadian Students joined Pax Romana at the annual assembly at Rheims last August when delegates from over 70 national organizations elected Beaule as president to succeed another Canadian, Dr. Claude Macdonald.

The revival of spiritual values and the spreading of Catholic thought is, in Beaule's opinion, a more practical way to work for peace than are peace councils. He stressed these two actions as positive means to be used in fighting communism on a practical basis.

However Beaule said that while the Federation should work internationally, it should not forget that Canada is two nations with different cultural backgrounds and that there was a need for better understanding between Catholics of the two groups. He felt that the Canadians should conciliate what they have in their own nation and that Catholics would not have the influence in Canada that they should have as long as contacts between English and French-speaking are as few as they are.

M. Bernard Ducret, General Secretary of Pax Romana also spoke on the role of the Canadian Federation in Pax Romana. The annual assembly of Pax Romana will be held in Canada next August when delegates from 82 nations will come to Toronto for a business meeting. This will be followed by a conference at Montreal with closing ceremonies at Laval University.

RC Students Choose Exec From Coast

A "Bring Christ Back To Christmas" campaign will be sponsored this year by the Canadian Federation of Catholic College students. The CFCCS meeting at St. Mike's decided to sponsor the campaign which was started by Mount St. Vincent College last year, with the hope that it would be as successful on other Canadian campii as it was at this Maritime co-ed college.

The Seventh Annual Conference of the federation elected three students from the Maritimes for the top executive positions. The new president is Margaret Martin from Mount St. Vincent and the secretary-treasurer will be Ann Streeter from the same college, with John Mullaley from St. Dunstan's College, Charlottetown as vice-president. The next annual conference will be held at Mount St. Vincent in Halifax.

More than fifty observers and delegates from central and eastern Canada attended the conference. Amongst the colleges and universities represented were Assumption, Windsor; Breccia, London; Loyola, Montreal; Marionapolis, Montreal; Notre Dame, Ottawa; St. Dunstan's, Charlottetown; and St. Francis Xavier, Antigonish.

M. Bernard Ducret came from Fribourg, Switzerland to visit Canada this year in preparation for the coming annual assembly of Pax Romana which will be held in Canada. Rosaire Beaule, president of Pax Romana, is seated on his right.

If . . .

. . . we had a Student Union less conversation would be carried on in the Library reading room.

Mount Saint Vincent Reps

College Story

Ten girls from Mount Saint Vincent College are among those delegates and observers who are attending the Canadian Federation of Catholic College Students at St. Michael's College.

Mt. St. Vincent is an all-girls' college three miles outside of Halifax, Nova Scotia. It is the only independent women's college in the Dominion of Canada. It has its own charter and is not affiliated with any university.

Women professors, part of the order, "Sisters of Charity", teach there. Subjects taught at the college include: Nursing, arts, home economics, secretarial science (a commercial course without the statistics), a course in music which follows that taught at the Toronto Conservatory of Music, and post-graduate work in Library Science and Education. The former subject provides training to become a librarian, the latter provides the training necessary to become a teacher.

Students from the British West Indies, Mexico, Canada and the United States attend the college.

Last year the Mt. St. Vincent library was destroyed by fire and 30,000 books were burned in the blaze. A new, modern library has been constructed in its place. The School of Library Science previously mentioned is a part of this library. In response to an appeal sent out to colleges and universities all over the United States and Canada, 25,000 books were donated to Mt. St. Vincent in the past year to help replace, in part, those books lost in the fire.

On their way to Toronto the girls stayed overnight at Ottawa. While they were there they visited Madame St. Laurent at tthe official residence. Madame St. Laurent attended Mt. St. Vincent when it was an academy.

The majority of girls board at the college and like it. Mary and Theresa Cossitt, delegates, gave an emphatic "no" when asked if they wouldn't like to attend a co-educational college. Several other girls from Mt. St. Vincent standing nearby unanimously agreed.

The girls have not seen too much of the city because they have been busy at the convention. However, they are staying in Toronto two extra days for that purpose. For their stay in Toronto they are living at St. Mike's College and some private homes.

Singing Austrians Revisit Canada

The advance scout for a group of Austrian student singers visited the Toronto campus Friday, to make tentative plans for his group's arrival in this city early in January.

The twenty Austrians who form the Third Goodwill Tour of Austrian Students and Teachers to North America will be giving concerts in Toronto on January 6, 7 and 8. They hope to give three performances of folksongs here: one at the university, one for a city-wide audience, and another for the Save-the-Children Fund.

Purpose of the Goodwill Tour is to effect an interchange of ideas between Austrian and North American students, so that both can get to know the other better. The students are a non-profit organization, who pay their way across the country on the money from their concerts.

The group has made three tours, during which an estimated half-million people have seen them. They are the first foreign troupe to entertain the American Armed Forces with the USO.

In their program this year they sing four different groups of folksongs, each representing a different season and place. Most of the Austrian districts are represented in these songs, which are grouped under the headings: Spring—Under the Maypole; Summer—At the Harvest Festival; Autumn—In Vienna; and Winter—At a Peasant Wedding.

At present the Austrians are playing in the New England States. On Dec. 11 and 12 they will make an advance visit to Montreal, where they will sing at McGill University.

While in Canada they are under the auspices of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS).

In early January a group of Austrian students and teachers will perform some of their native folksongs at the University. In the picture at the right, the group's advance scout, Gerald Fitz, is showing Ann Fricker, I Trin., some of the features of the coming performance. Fitz, himself an Austrian, is a 23-year-old student in economics.

English Failures Shocked Faculty

The results of the University College Pass English examinations were made known last week. "The results startled the Department of English," said Mr. Woodhouse, Professor of English at UC. "They were much worse than expected."

The purpose of the examinations were, first, to get some indication of what degree of knowledge of English the average undergrad possesses; and secondly, to enable the Department to provide help for those who most obviously need special instruction.

The University administration wants to give undergrads the type of English training they need and hence this information was necessary, said Professor Woodhouse, who as head of the department set the examination.

Plans were made to have five instructors groups of approximately twenty-five students each, for those who failed to get above fifty percent. Because of the poor results ten groups are indicated. Thus the plan was altered so that only the people who received under thirty-three percent will be included in the classes. Moreover, the original number of twenty-five per group has been increased to thirty-five. This shows the considerably lower standard than was anticipated.

Mr. Woodhouse stressed that there was no hostility or cruelty intended in the examinations. It was an an attempt to help students who need help."

Just what the long-standing effects may be on this revelation of the inability of so many students to cope with English Language is not known. However, Dr. Bissel, said. "It involves a serious consideration of the role of English in the University."

Kingston Cadi Cancels Vote For Students

Kingston, (CUP) — A Kingston county court judge has ruled that no student at Queen's University may vote except in the riding where his parents live. The ruling has brought protests from students at Queen's, the majority of whom will be deprived of a vote in the forthcoming provincial election.

A Kingston lawyer who voluntarily represented the students in their appeal against the ruling explained that students spent about seven months in Kingston, which virtually amounts to permanent residence in the city.

He added that the ruling rendering thousands of students ineligible to vote was not the purpose of the Election Act.

A Difference Of Opinion

The Editors of Le Quartier Latin, student newspaper at the University of Montreal, were fired last week by the Student Council. One of the reasons given for the dismissal was a special issue devoted to the Royal Tour containing both uncomplimentary and satirical material.

In this article, reprinted from the McGill Daily, the Canadian University Press Editor, John Cunningham outlines some of the material contained in that issue.

The Varsity said, "The University is proud to play host to the Royal Couple. We wish that it were possible for them to stay longer .Such a happy occasion will long be remembered at the University." The Queen's Journal said, "She is a welcome and charming guest . . . From Queen's we send to her our warmest wish for a pleasant stay in Canada. Our only regret with Canadians across the nation — is that she cannot stay longer." The Sheaf (U. of Sask.) said, "The British Monarchy represents something more than mere kingship; the Crown is a symbol of unity within a free commonwealth of nations. As Canadians we proudly hold membership in that Commonwealth and warmly receive these Royal personalities."

Le Quartier Latin of the University of Montreal in its Royal Visit issue said, "They will bring back our enthusiasm to England as homage to the Empire. Our applause will be deposited in the vaults of the Bank of England as securities with large dividends. With this they can hope for the survival of the Commonwealth; the association organized not for the common good of its members (as its pompous title suggests) for for the maintenance of the political power of that little over-populated island."

If the views expressed in this issue were the views of the editors, then these editors are extremely nationalistic. In the whole issue there was not one story that wasn't liberally sprinkled with personal opinions. In the last paragraph of their page one story Le Quartier Latin said, "The role of the English Princess sent by the English Government leaves no doubt for anyone, even if her coming has cost people the equivalent of a good reduction in educational fees. The Nationalists think of the Royal Visit in 1939 and the Imperialists regard it as a re-enforcement of unity around the British Royal Family and they are both right. England realizes finally that she is losing her supremacy and she is trying by all means to get out of the crisis evoked in the little island."

Le Quartier Latin continued, "That's why people say it is all proaganda but nobody listens. There is no danger in propaganda when you know the motives of those who make it. That is why we permit ourselves to like the English Princess by politeness towards a foreign, but friendly power."

The Quartier Latin in every one of its [illegible] struck a note comparable to Le Devoir's attitude toward the Royal Visit; that of welcoming the couple but at the same time reminding everyone that they represent a foreign power.

In a cartoon the French-Canadian is depicted as a puppet in a Little Lord Fauntelroy suit, kissing proffered hand of the Princess and at the same time clutching a Fleur-de-Lis behind his back. The Princess is depicted with a grotesque smile on her face and holding the hand of her husband who in turn is hiding a Union Jack behind his back. This cartoon was used is illustrate an article titled, "Good-bye to Mythology."

The paper's editorial said, "We respect instinctively these last representatives of an old monarchy. Of course there are also about ten million dollars being spent by the government (on the Royal Tour) but it isn't decent to speak about that."

"It is important that we be not dupes. We aren't naive and we can't be bought with smiles and radio and newspaper propaganda. Our people are beginning to think that Canada has attained maturity and that tutorships are always costly. We believe before all in the independence of Canada and when politeness requires, it is with an unbelieving smile that we bow before the Crown."

Le Quartier Latin in reference to Le Carabin, student newspaper of Laval University said, "Le Carabin declared that we should welcome the Princess with proper respect to her authority." "After all!" the Quartier Latin says, "Up to what point should one ignore the history of one's country. The Commonwealth, after a long evolution, has become a free association of independent countries. It is more a question of receiving her as a representative of past splendour, just as we would receive any other well-born person."

In story after story the writers freely expressed their own personal opinions of the Royal Family and the Commonwealth which were all in a nationalistic vain. They quoted the circumstances surrounding previous Royal Visits to Canada and find in the present one similarity to the Royal Visit of 1939.

New Library

Montreal (CUP) — The McGill University library, which turned over its profits to the Students' Society will now finance a lending library of lighter books from those same profits.

The library will be made up entirely up of new and recent books that may be borrowed for leisure reading. With the $650 profit that will be used to begin the scheme, the bookstore will be able to buy about 2,000 books to start, the McGill Daily announced, reporting on the move.

A special room in the new library building will be set aside for this lending library. The books will be put on open shelves from which the students may select what they wish to borrow.

Since the bookstore's profits are expected to increase this year, ready money will be available to form the starting collection and to increase it.

Torontonensis Requires Help Says Editor

"This year's edition of Toronto[illegible]nensis will have campus-wide appeal for undergrads of all years," said Torontonensis Editor, Wil[illegible] Mackenzie, IV Meds. For the past three issues, the former editors have gradually converted Torontonensis from a graduating class memento to a true university year book which is of interest to all members of the student body, he added.

The policy of the current editor is to extend this program, producing a permanent diary in picture and story of student life at Varsity this year, said Mackenzie. The aim of the editors is to include the pictures of all students in all campus activities at all levels from class to intercollegiate. How nearly this end is attained will depend upon the co-operation of those students who have taken pictures of their own class and college affairs as well as all-Varsity events.

Despite increased production costs, the price to the student will be the same as last year until December 15. That is three dollars, but after that date, the subscription will be upped fifty cents. The sale of subscriptions will begin this week.

This will be editor Mackenzie's first appearance in an editorial post on Torontonensis but he is not a newcomer to student publications, having spent four years on The Varsity, three as a masthead member.

A small nucleus of the editorial staff has been formed, but there is room for all students interested in producing an all-university yearbook. Help is needed in make-up, editing, writing and publicity. Previous experience helps but is not essential and all who are interested should contact the editor as soon as possible either at ME. 4463 in the evenings or at the Torontonensis office at 119 St. George Street between 1:15 and 2:00 p.m.

MOCK TRIAL

Geneer Faces Trial

The All-Varsity prosecutors, Sopha and Rosen, announced last night that the case for the prosecution was ready and that the trial of N. Geneer would take place Wednesday evening at seven o'clock in the Junior Common Room of University College. Geneer is being accused of attempted murder, malicious domage and conspiracy to defame the good name of the University. These charges arose out of an alleged explosion under the School of Law float on Homecoming Week-end.

New international complications are indicated by the discovery that recent graduates of the Lenin School of Molotov Cocktail-Mixing of Stalingrad may attempt to enter this country. It is not known how these gents will seek entrance to Canada but intelligence sources anticipate that their mission will be cultural liquidation.

When questioned about possible implication, N. Geneer said, "It is not true that I did not deny that I did not attend the Lenin School of Molotov Cocktail Mixing." Agents of the Submerive Squad have been re-investigating the recent bed outbreak of undercover activities on the campus.

The Varsity has been advised by the Engineering Society that it has retained the services of the top-flight firm of Giraudy, Blenkarn, Trivett, Billen, Coo and Associates to conduct E. Geneer's defence.

Summing up the defence in a comprehensive statement defence council stated that they had considered it almost inevitable on the evidence which might be produced that a case could be made out which would possibly have the effect of proving the inaccuracy of certain allegations which might be construed as implicating their client providing an honest jury could be impanelled and a sober judgment obtained. However the former is in some doubt.

Meanwhile from the Campus Courting House steadfastly refused to divulge the name or whereabouts of the presiding judge on the theory that he might be intimated before his time had come to try the case.

A motion to exclude the public from the trial on the grounds of public immorals and public prejudice was refused today by His Honour E. Lectrode of the Circuit Court. "The curse of Justice must be available to all the people," he said, "and any featherbedding should be aired."

Trinity Men Uphold Tour By Russians

Trinity College men have decided after three sessions on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of last week that they approve the principles of the National Federation of Canadian University Students inviting Russian students to visit Canada.

At the session on Thursday it was decided that after approving the principle of the visit, they should decide what organization should be in charge of the visit and what form the visit should take. NFCUS was chosen as the organization despite objection that NFCUS should leave the International field to the International Students' Service and imlit its activities to sending delegates to international conferences where they would represent Canada.

A motion, proposed by Peter Alley, IV Trinity, was passed listing five preferences for the type of exchange which Trinity men felt was desirable. The motion stated that any action should be reciprocal, an exchange of study years was preferable to tours but that a one way tour was preferable to no action at all. The fifth point was that NFCUS should press for a tour this year, if possible, or any other following year.

Houynhnhnms

Varsity Literary Issue

Each year The Varsity publishes a Literary Issue. And each year the deadline is set for Christmas time, but because of the lack of entries it appears late in the spring. This year the deadline has been set for January 10. The Varsity editor, Miss Barbara Browne has stated that no Literary Issue will be published if sufficient entries are not made by this time, and if the entries do not come up to the standards set by the judges.

Last year prizes were awarded for serious and light verse and for short stories. Honourable mention was the only prize given in the essay section as it contained just two entries.

As the judges considered the photography entries "few" and "poor" examples from the Hart House Camera Club's display were used.

Entries are welcomed in prose, fiction and non-fiction (essay and short stories), poetry, light and serious, and photography, as well as a new field this year, cartooning.

Contributions will be accepted (accompanied by an ATL card) in The Varsity news office, basement of University College at any time. It is desirable that these be typed at sixty-six spaces.

Dentanics

"Fresh attractiveness" were the words used by last year's editor Frank Moritsugu in describing the comely young things of the Dentantics chorus line. This year will prove no exception to the rule. Three of the smiling beauties in the form of (l. to r.) Shirley Fuller, Libby Bray and Margo Claremont are shown above as they go through one of their routines. A limited number of tickets have been alloted for campus sale and they are expected to go fast. With tickets going on sale today at Hart House Theatre box office it is recommended that they be obtained early.

Music Review

Soap Opera Pops

Last Friday night, Andre Kostelanetz, vaunted American conductor, led the TSO in the regular Pop Concert before a packed house. The source of Mr. Kostelanetz' success has always been a puzzle to me. If this concert is to be used as any criterion, it certainly is not his musical abilities. Rather, his fame seems to rest on the ignorance and bad taste of the public. The case in point was his performance of the Eine Kleine Nachtmusik, Mozart's faultless serenade. Never have I heard a more uninteresting, perfunctory, and insensitive interpretation of this delightful work. Throughout, but especially in the second and fourth movements, the dynamics were harshly exaggerated, the sforzandos sounding like pistol shots, the pianos barely audible. The second movement gushed with nauseating sentiment; it is marked "Romanza" but it does not mean the modern American soap opera conception of romance. The Minuet, the third movement received a brutal treatment, with the violins sawing, the cellos hacking. It was a trying experience.

The other major work on the program was the Rhapsody in Blue, Gershwin's uneven and rather incoherent work. Kostelanetz gave it the full smaltzy treatment, with Leo Barkin, as pianist, accompanying the baton. Barkin, who played with a score, gave an indifferent, unimaginative performance; he read his music and that was all there was to it. It seemed to be someone practising rather than performing. In some of the cadenza passages, Mr. Barkin's rhythm was bad.

Kostelanetz exhumed Gershwin's Cuban Overture, a work which has fallen into obscurity and which received its radio premiere last Friday night. It is a dull and pretentious work and should be reburied. The rest of the concert consisted of some Bizet inconsequentialities, Romberg and Victor Herbert banalities, and a moribund Strauss waltz, Tales of the Vienna Woods, that was given the last twist of the knife. When is the Pop orchestra going to stop playing the worthless Romberg-Herbert trash and hackneyed Strauss waltzes? Let us have an end to this pandering to bad taste, this facile condescension that attempts to cajole people into listening to serious music.

The whole concert was marked by listless, mechanical playing and general indifference. The only thing passable was the performance of Berlioz' Roman Carnival Overture. Some may think, perhaps, that I have been hypercritical, and say: "After all, it is only a Pop concert." This approach to music is naive. Music should always be treated seriously and sensitively, no matter what the standard of the audience is. Poor performances kill the art of music.

William Kotcheff.

DETECTIVE STORY (at Shea's and Eglinton) almost did not carry over into a second week's run. The drums for the succeeding feature, a technicolor musical, have been rolling for a week now, more or less breathing down DETECTIVE STORY'S uneasy neck.

This has happened to other worthwhile pictures too. THE WINSLOW BOY got a fast axe at the very same Shea's Theatre. INTRUDER IN THE DUST is a cause célèbre now. And TERESA was the latest example. All above-average films that went so fast we hardly noticed they had come.

There is something wrong here. It is the response of the audience through the box office, of course. But breaking this down, there are several possible reasons: Inadequate or misleading publicity, the wrong kind of audience (i.e., wrong theatre since locally we have a vague cultural hierarchy among the movie houses), an unpalatable theme or unpopular treatment of a theme (again a qualitative probing of the audience).

This impressive William Wyler adaptation of the Sidney Kingsley play is a fine film. It deserves a high place in the Hollywood Renaissance, the current crop of pictures which assume that there are enough moviegoers who want intelligent and adult themes and attitudes in their movies.

Like the film adaptation of A STREETCAR NAMED DESIRE, the concessions of DETECTIVE STORY to Hollywood tastes and morality are few. But even than SREETCAR, the evening DETECTIVE SORY audience I was in showed much restlessness and candy-wrapper crackling even in the tensest scenes. And when the principals were showing stress and emotion, the audience obviously felt embarrassed. DETECTIVE STORY seems guaranteed to lose money.

The funny thing is that the heavy scenes in the film are mostly well-acted, not maudlinly postured and sobbed. But the audience at Shea's didn't like, although the closeness of the popcorn concession to the body of the threatre may be one aggravating factor. (There was stir and fuss during the SEVEN DAYS TO NOON also, although not to the same degree.)

DETECTIVE STORY is an above-average product because director William Wyler and his very capable cast tackle the play as if they were convinced it were Shakespeare. I personally feel the play is too neatly-contrived, and the ending obvious and long-drawn. But just the same, this drama of a day in a New York detective's life and the examination of his pathological hatred and treatment of criminal suspects is an absorbing one. And Wyler develops mood and subtle insight with his concentration on pace and sensitive performance, especially from the bit performers.

As the tormented sadist dick, Kirk Douglas is convincing. His contribution is the usual Douglas version of a man, struggling with an internal storm of emotions, but he toes the line between sincerity and hamminess quite well. Eleanor Parker is quite satisfactory as his wife. William Bendix plays the nice tough Irishman his usual competent way.

The soundness of the film comes from the contribution of the character actors. Most of the detectives are familiar Hollywood faces and their expression of dull routineness is effective. But the audience forgets its restlessness when two Broadway actors do their bits, Joseph Wiseman is a four-time loser, and Lee Grant as the shoplifter who apologizes for putting her particular officer to all his troubles. Horace McMahon is interesting as the detective lieutenant.

The biggest reason for the reluctance of the audience to accept DETECTIVE STORY may be the leisurely pace that director Wyler has established for the play. Action erupts often, but when the principals get all involved in their problems, the screen patiently waits with them through their mental tortures. This may explain Horace McMahon's moments of weakness in an otherwise impressive portrait, weakness which may be due to the director's insistence on heavy atmposhere. And American audiences are conditioned to fast-moving films in this age of mechanical progress.

But there may be a simpler reason for bad audiences. When it is recalled how much titles affect audiences (TICKET TO TOMAHAWK and ACE IN THE HOLE were changed by money-wise exhibitors), perhaps DETECTIVE STORY suggested some slam-bang cops-and-robber epic of the Alan Ladd type. It so, the leisurely mood of the film, so essential to the play's theme, would naturally make people fidget. Like TERESA, DETECTIVE STORY is an art house film.

Last Tuesday night was spent at one of the lectures on Film and Society in the University Extension series. This series is directed by Albert A. Shea, former member of staffs of both this university and University of Manitoba. He is a mass communications expert, and was on the staff of the ISS seminar at Bretton.

The particular lecture was on "Documentary" and given by National Film Board producer Sydney Newman. Newman is responsible for the commercial NFB works such as Canada Carries On, and he illustrated his lecture with some of his works, including the recent PENITENTIARY, and excerpts from a sensitive British documentary by Humphrey Jennings, FIRES WERE STARTED.

This is midway in the Film lectures, and those to come include Gerald Pratley on the Development of Film Narrative, a panel of Toronto critics on The Film and Public Taste, Lou Applebaum on Music For the Movies, and a visit to the Queensway Studios of Capitol Film Productions.

A discussion period follows the lecture and the films, and last night, lecturer Newman was bombarded with various questions on documentary and the National Film Board. Next year, a further series on film lectures is promised by Shea.

Ottawa Back In the Black

Ottawa, (CUP)—The student federation of the University of Ottawa has bounced back into solvency and activity, the Fulcrum reported last week.

All activities had been cancelled for the first few weeks of the year because of a huge debt that the federation had accumulated.

However The Fulcrum has announced that the federation has purchased a new student house at a cost of $19,000 upon which $16,000 has already been paid.

Campus Show

Skule Nite '52

By JACK GRAY

Thinking back over it I find it isn't as difficult to say some nice things about Skule Nite '52 as I was afraid it might be. Because among the things that the Engineers dreamed up for their annual musical revue this year there are a couple of highlights, one that I had more or less expected, one that I had only hoped for in the small, dark parts of my mind that I ordinarily don't discuss.

The first was the sets. Dave Powrie produced some better-than-average sets for Skule Nite last year, as well as sets for some other campus productions. This year he didn't quite manage to reach the heights he attained last season, but the sets were still much better than average. This I think was true of all the sets, which managed to combine his talents as a designer with the mechanical needs of the show.

The other highlight was part of the Conception number, and for the first time this year managed to get across some of the magic that I have been looking for in campus shows. To say that it was professional, or that we could drag out the superlatives would be something less than intellectual integrity will allow, but it managed to be pleasing, charming and entertaining, a feat that few numbers have managed in campus shows so far this year

The Filles de Paris and Miss Helen Spicer came in about the middle of the Conception number. Miss Spicer has a pleasant voice which I am totally incompetent to say anything intelligent about. I liked her song and her manner. The Filles de Paris, Joan Elliot, Audrey Koehler, Carol McKinlay, Leila Niemi, Jane Phillips, Norene Pye, Marjorie Sewell and Alice Strand, did a dance which was essentially simple, and suited to their amateur talents. No ballet here, just uncomplicated precision routines which they managed to keep up to. The costumes were wonderful, the planning well and intelligently done. No other part of Skule Nite '52 came across to the audience so well.

Most of the rest of Skule Nite was a lost cause. Education produced two good songs. But the skit suffered from over-writing. Prof. Log Log, a playful take-off on a well-known Skule professor, got an enthusiastic reception which was slowly and surely killed by the length of time he was kept in front of the spotlights. The songs were the only thing that saved the number. The lyrics (Bill Tiller and Mike Harrison for the Opening Song and Hyde, Hayman, Selby and Harrison for the Slide-Rule Song) were imaginative and full of fun. They were well delivered by the male chorus.

Conception started out well, but began to come apart at the seams too early and with the exception of the production number noted above didn't get anywhere. Why? It had no plot (that I noticed), it wandered, it skirted the sex-women-sex scene we have seen too much of, and eventually led to a machine. By that time it had died a quiet death.

From here on the show just quietly went to pieces: it dragged (one and a half hours), and in the final act really stopped once or twice. (I saw the second show on Friday night.)

I liked: Des Buolt's Calypso song in Conception although I was a bit surprised to see a Calypso singer in Paris (listed as a "Gypsy Vendor"); Frank Yamada's magic, because I always want to be fooled by magicians and can't hold it against them even when I'm not; Brown, Cameron and Hayman doing a relaxed Come and Nestle.

And although Skule has made a tradition of machines, Friday night's traffic jam, which saw three machines cluttering up the stage and stopping the show and not being that amusing will, I hope, lead next year's Skule Nite producer to junk the idea.

Beep! Beep!

Commissar Nicholoff Bigbullski (Bob Greene) showed how Russia rewards great inventions such as the mechanized marvel being demonstrated by Hankoff Fordski (Bill Evans) in this scene from Skule Nite. Another highlight in this set was a Skule-dominated peace council.

BC Article Rouses Ire

Vancouver (CUP)—The Ubyssey, undergrad paper at the University of British Columbia, has aroused the wrath of the university's Board of Governors following an editorial described as irresponsible writing by the board, asking for a breakdown of the budget. The paper has been actively campaigning to find out the reasons for the increase in fees imposed at the beginning of the present session.

Such a breakdown was promised by the university's president, Dr. MacKenzie.

The Board of Governors has asked UBC's student council to take some action in this matter.

Commented the Ubyssey editorially: that it was never the intention of the paper to cast any reflections on the knowledge and judgments of the Board. The only purpose was to obtain fulfillment of a promise we felt that had not been adequately fulfilled as yet.

"The Board of Governors is to be commended for this move," continued the editorial. "They have not demanded the removal of students responsible, but have requested the students to solve their own problems."

The editorial also admitted its injudicious use of language in writing the editorial asking for the breakdown.

SECONDS MAKE HISTORY

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

It has been a long time since a figure has entered the Canadian sports scene amid as much fanfare and departed amid as much abuse as George Ratterman, ex-Notre Dame star who played this past season with the Montreal Alouettes.

Ratterman left the New York Yankees, for whom he had played one season, and signed with the Alouettes for a reported $17,000 plus a $5,000 a year job in a broker's office. Towards the end of the season, in which the Als sank quickly to the bottom of the standings, the high-priced quarterback announced that he was returning to the Yankees at the end of the season.

It was a very business-like move to say the least. Since the National Football League's schedule does not begin until the Canadian season is more than half over, Ratterman was able to earn a full season's salary with the Alouettes plus an additional half-season's pay with the Yanks.

Ranked fourth among the NFL passers last year, while completing 140 passes in 194 tries for a total gain of 2251 yards, an average of 16.01 yards per attempt (which is the criterion they grade the passers by down there), Gorgeous George was expected to take the opposition apart on every outing. When the Alouettes won four games and lost eight to wind up in the cellar only two years after Frank Filchok had quarterbacked them to the Grey Cup, Ratterman was looed upon as the let-down of the year.

About the best that was generally said of him was that he wasn't able to adjust himself to the Canadian game. The worst (the worst that is printable, that is) was that he was directly responsible for the Als flopping. Canadian papers quoted him as saying he couldn't adjust himself to our game, but when he got down to New York he said he was misquoted and the only reason he left was that he missed the good old USA.

The reason the Alouettes failed this year was not that Ratterman couldn't adjust himself to Canadian football, but that Ratterman couldn't adjust himself to a poor team. The Montreal backfield was the best in the nation; on the line it was a different story. From tackle to tackle, they had two good two-way linemen, Ray Cicia and Herb Trawick, plus another in Clary McGeary who arrived late in the season, and a couple of good defensive linemen in Chambers and Keys. Behind this they had one or two Canadian defensive linemen, but no offensive support strength. Ratterman was no the only instance this year of the effect on good passers of frequent smearings by 250 pound linemen; look at the Dekdebrun case.

Even when his linemen were protecting him, he had no exceptional receivers, though Yonakor showed well at times. Many times in the games here he would throw the ball as the receiver was breaking only to find that the receiver hadn't shaken off the defender covering him. As it was, Ratterman completed 41.6 percent of his heaves. If you could count complete the passes dropped by Toohey, Manastersky, etc., it probably would have been 61.6.

Although other things, like his faking, did not seem to be up to what they must have been in the States, we fail to see how any quarterback could have kept the Als out of the cellar this year.

Baby Blues Bounce Gaels 12-6 For First Time Title In Toronto

BY BRUCE NORTH

Riding on the bullseye passing arm of quarterback Gerry Fitzhenry, the Baby Blues drove to the Dominion Intercollegiate Championship last Saturday afternoon as they defeated Queen's Comets 12-6. It was a spectacular game played on a mucky gridiron which made Fitzhenry's passing feats all the more sensational. However Queen's had an equal to Fitzhenry in Al Poutanen who played a tremendous game both offensively and defensively.

The Comets' line played inspired ball. Players like Biddell, Hawkins, Hircock and Big. Connell were all defensive standouts. But the Queen's coach admitted afterwards that Toronto was the hardest hitting team they had played all season. This is the first Dominion championship the Toronto Intermediates have ever won.

Both Varsity touchdowns came from passes by Fitzhenry. Another Fitzhenry toss put the ball on the Queen's five yard line but the Blues were unable to take it over.

Queen's looked as good, if not better, than the Blues along the ground. Bill Surphlis, Al Kocman and Dick James were all going great guns on off-tackle slants and around the end on pitchouts. These three men were also tackling viciously from their secondary positions on defence.

Queen's quarterback Al Poutanen was a quadruple threat man. He was a capable field general as the Blues learned only too well from the Comets' ground attack. He carried the ball himself several times with great success. Although he didn't have too much success in the air for the first three-quarters of the game, he spear-headed a pass attack in the last quarter that almost upset the Blues' applecart. He was also one of the leading men in the tackling department.

But the Blues had the better team.

Varsity took an early 1-0 lead in the first quarter when Uhrynuk was rouged after receiving Burley's kick behind the goal line. The Blues must have lost at least 40 or 50 yards in questionable penalties in the first quarter and may have lost a possible touchdown.

A few minutes later there was a bad snap to Burley on the third down and he was nailed on the centre stripe. Kocman and McKelvey went for 21 and 7 yards respectively. After an incomplete pass, Burley was rouged on Surphlis' kick but it was called back because Queen's was holding.

Varsity took over on their own 16 but were forced to kick. Surphlis then made a very heady play. He received Burley's punt on the Varsity 35 and returned the kick over the dead ball line to tie the game at one-all.

Half way through the third quarter Dick James started the Comets on the way to their only major with a forty yard run from his own ten. Queen's were forced to kick after two more plays. Ford received the punt and tried to make a lateral as he was being tackled. The ball fell to the ground and Joe Labuda fell on it at the Varsity 33. The Comets marched to the Toronto one yard line on a series of plays and captain Bert Elford took it over on an off-tackle smash. Beaton's convert attempt failed.

It was kind of agonizing to watch Queen's pound away for that major and then see Varsity get it back with ridiculous ease.

Late in the third quarter the Blues had first down on their own 42. Burley went through centre for 10. Then Fitzhenry faded back and threw a long looper to "Nobby" Milne who snagged it at the Queen's 25 and outsped the only Comet near him to the goal line. Milne also did some nice open field tackling.

Early in the fourth quarter Varsity marched from their own 30 to the 55. Fitzhenry tossed another long low one to Lansky who went to the five. But the next two plays failed and Burley hoofed another point.

Not much later, Varsity intercepted a pass on the Queen's 37. Fitzhenry passed to Lansky for a first down and then to Ron Fleming over the goal line for the second major. Both Varsity convert attempts failed.

Sports Staffers

With a lapse in Intercollegiate sport at hand, there is an urgent need for sports reporters interested in covering hockey, lacrosse, wrestling, boxing, etc., on the Intramural level.

Will all those who have signified their interest in writing sports for The Varsity please drop into the office during noon hour this week and either get in touch with Assistant Editor Mal Crawford or sign up in the Sports Book on the Sports Desk for one or more stories?

Intramural hockey in particular demands an increased reporting staff, and the help of all those interested will be appreciated.

Six-Man Football At U. of Manitoba

Winnipeg, (CUP)—The six-man football season at the University of Manitoba wound up last week with the squad from the Faculty of Medicine edging past the Law team for the championship by a 16-12 count.

Unable to support the regular 12 man game in Inter-faculty competition, the University of Manitoba instituted the six-man game some years ago and both spectator and player interest has been increasing each season. The unfortunate Law squad placed two men on the all-star team, but that did not seem to phase the Medics who followed their own all-star halfback, Jerry Holman, to the championship.

NORM FOX

Sports Profile

By BARRY THOMAS

One thing that Coach Bill Wade has this year for his senior hockey team is an abundance of good forwards, of which one is veteran Norm Fax who is returning to senior ice wars for a third time. The hard shooting right winger who played Varsity Junior "B" in his freshman year will be a potent factor in the Blues' attempt to retain their intercollegiate championship laurels.

Normie, who will be 22 late this month, had an impressive total of 15 points in his first year of senior competition and placed among the top three Varsity scorers. Last year, while not so effective in the goal getting department, he proved to be one of the main defensive standbys of the team and was used frequently to kill penalties.

This year he is playing on a line with Red Stevens and Pete Vernon who have shown very well so far to date in practice. As Varsity Fox concentrates on hockey only but at U.T.S. he played football for the first team. The 155 pounder who is in his graduating year in C.&F. expects to later become an actuary.

All indications point to the Lions that with the aid of a good playmaker such as Stevens, Fox should be in for a very successful year with the Blues.

Crumpeters Win Over Double Blues 16-6 Cop Playoff Spot With Undefeated Year

By FRANCIS QUINLAN

Trinity College, one of last year's Mulock Cup finalists, made its way into the play-offs last Friday by downing St. Mike's 16-6. The win gave the Red and Black an undefeated season with four wins and a tie for a total of nine points; St. Mike's was second in the Group, and Forestry third.

It was a much closer game than the score would indicate, as Trinity was clinging to a 10-6 margin until the last few seconds when a fumbled kick gave them another major. The lead changed hands three times during the contest which up to the final minute looked like it could have gone either way.

Trinity relied mainly on its terrific passing combination of passer Doug Andison and receivers Corcoran and Jarvis and the running of Thomas and Steedman. St. Mike's used a new double wing formation that looked pitiful in the first half and unstoppable in the second.

Trinity came very close to a major in the first quarter when they marched from their own 35 to the SMC 8 only to lose the ball on a fumble. Steedman started off the drive with a plunge to his own 50, and an Andison-to-Jarvis pass was good on the St. Mike's 43. Two plays later Thomas took a pass on the eight to put the Red and Black in scoring position, but Decker recovered a bobble on the 18 to end the threat.

The Buttery Boys were not to be denied and came back in the second quarter to go out in front 5-0. After taking possession of the ball on the centre stripe, the Trinity boys drove for a first down on the 43. Corcoran made a finger-type catch on the 30, and on the next play Andison passed again, this time to Meredith, and it was good for a touchdown. The convert try was not good.

St. Mike's finally began to look like a team in the second half as Johnny Miller, Dave Winters, and Bob Singleton swept for long gains behind some superlative blocking. Miller set the ball rolling as he raced 25 yards to the Trinity 48, and followed it up with a drive to the 40. Singleton carried twice to the 17, and Winters twisted and turned to the one. After a line plunge was piled up for no gain, Winters went over for a major. Heughen's convert put the Double Blue out in front 6-5.

The fourth quarter saw Trinity take the lead again as Pete Jarvis took Andison's toss into the end zone to climax a march of almost 100 yards. Three St. Mike's penalties and a 20 yard pass completion were the important factors in the drive. The convert attempt wasn't good and the score remained 10-6 in Trinity's favour.

St. Mike's ground attack couldn't seem to get back into stride after that as they never got past the Red and Black 40-yard line. With less than a minute left Trinity kicked over the Double Blue line, and the safety man fumbled. Jarvis dove on the ball for the final touchdown. Andison converted to make the score 16-6 as the whistle blew.

Jarvis and Andison were Trinity's best while Winters and Miller stood out for the Mikemen. Trinity has a fast, alert team with a fair line and a good backfield as during the season they piled up 53 points to 19 for their opponents. Whether they take the Cup or not, they can be depended upon to put up a good fight. Their opponent is not known yet; they will meet either UC or Sr. SPS

Pitching Sportshoes

Intramural sports action last Friday was limited to a couple of soccer games and one volleyball match. In soccer, St. Mike's blanked Sr. Meds 3-0 on goals by Rope, Walls, and Martin. The other game was also a shut-out as SPS Meds downed SPS thirds 1-0. Deck's first goal won for the Doctors.

The Volleyball game saw Sr. SPS take a three-game set from Jr. SPS 15-10, 11-15, 15-8.

Life, Pigs And Stuff

By IAN CUNNINGHAM

Guts and ganglions,
These you are.
Tangled tubes and twisted tissues,
These you are.
Brain, heart, lungs and ovaries,
These you are.
But, dear, although I dabble and dissect,
I have not found the soul which you infects.

This is life, not the magazine, but the phenomenon. To begin logically, we would need to know what life is and then go on from there. But asking "What is life?" is much like asking "What is a pig?" As the canny Scotsman replied:

"Och mon, dinna fuss yere sel', pigs is pigs and there's naethin mare ye need to knae."

So life is life. Biologists, however, define life as being the property of anything that grows, reproduces, and adjusts to its environment.

From this definition, we see that a human being possesses the quality of life. The anatomist, physiologist, and biochemist state that human beings are machines, the properties of which may be investigated in the same manner as the physicist can explain a motor car or an adding machine. Of course it isn't quite that simple, for man—unlike other machines—has been evolving and improving for about a billion years.

Sensitive people like poets, philosophers, and theologians claim that man is not on the same level as a clock or a popcorn maker. By their techniques they have discovered a certain something—a soul, personality, consciousness, or mind—that lurks somewhere in the dark unknown of the brain.

Biologists sneer at the idea. The soul has never blunted a needle or caused a pointer to twitch. If you can't see, weigh, or measure a thing, then ignore it. Some biologists, however, have whispered that they may have run across this X factor occasionally in their investigations.

Among the most unexpected people it has become popular to assume the existence of the mind. Thus, even in the most conservative medical journals articles are printed on how the mind can affect blood pressure, stomach ulcers, asthma, depression, and other ailments. In the past, this understanding of the mind's influence on health was termed "horse sense." Today it is known as psychosomatic medicine, which implies that some interaction between mind and body exists.

How could such an entity as mind develop from a machine? Some have said that mind or consciousness is an extraneous by-product of the workings of the body. George Santayana described it as "a lyric cry in the midst of business." If we assume the existence and influence of the mind, we must accept the fact that some ghostly ethereal thing is moving good solid bone and muscle.

If the concept of mind is here to stay, we should seek its dwelling place. Shakespeare asks,

"Tell me where is fancy bred:
Or in the heart or in the head?
How begat, how nourished?"

Descartes thought it lived in the pineal gland at the base of the brain. This theory has been rejected, but it still is impossible to point to any anatomical site in the brain and say that consciousness resides there. Consciousness nevertheless can be altered by cutting fibres that run to the frontal lobes of the brain. Psychiatrists use this technique in the treatment of certain mental disorders.

Scientific knowledge concerning the mind has been very slight. Some scientists believe that living organisms have some spiritual essence in them that reaches its height of development in the human mind. Others, however, believe that through further investigation of life processes they will be able to explain consciousness in terms of chemistry and physics.

Pot-bellied

Many students have been bemoaning the passing of the old rural school-house days when they gathered round the old pot-bellied stove to eat their lunch, study or just chat. Present day hot-water radiators and air-registers don't seem to attract the students to gossip round them while warming their toes.

But at the Physical and Occupational Therapy Huts, 6 Devinshire Place, the stove still reigns, (in fact is essential to heating part of the building).

De Margerie Cites Apathy

Ottawa (CUP)—Deep regret at student apathy toward NFCUS was expressed recently by Jean de Margerie, president of the national student body. Speaking to the students of Carleton College, de Margerie attributed this apathy to lack of knowledge as to the purpose and accomplishments of NFCUS since its inception.

"Our job within the next few years," he said, "will be to convince Canadians that university training is a 'must' for the advancement of the country and its citizens. We must make people realize that students are all-important to the nation and that NFCUS represents over 45,000 Canadian students."

Please, Santa

—Cartoon by Hugh Niblock.

Santaless Us

We believe in Santa Claus. But we doubt that we are representing student opinion in doing so. We believe in the Santa Claus parade. But we doubt whether many undergraduates even cared to see it.

Yet this year the parade route seemed to make a special attempt to reach the student body. It passed along Hoskin Ave. We suspect that anyone trying to cross the street would only feel that the traffic menace had taken on fantastic proportions, that after many harassing experiences they now suffered from hallucinations.

Aside from these traffic weavers, few undergraduates would have an excuse to go to the parade. There may have been some who attended, notebooks in hand, to study the sociological implications of the Eatonian ritual. But we doubt that they had much fun.

We regret that Santa Claus has been relegated to children (and, vicariously, their parents). Between these two groups there is only a limbo of unbelievers.

Young people take a great deal of pride in rejecting the idea of Santa Claus. It is almost a sign of growing up, and since most children are in a terrific hurry to become adults, they are apt to throw all sorts of beliefs out the window without question.

And along with Santa Claus, go all the elves, gnomes, fairies and goblins which made childhood an exciting effair.

We are told that there is no such person as Santa Claus, but rather we must think of the Christmas spirit. And instead of thinking of God as an old man with a great flowing beard and gnarled hands, we are told that He is an Infinite Force. Now "spirit" and "Force" are awfully hard things to visualize, but this seems to be considered a tribute to the adult mind. We object.

This desire to reject everything that empirically we cannot know is a very dangerous tendency of the modern world. Surely it is extraordinarily dull to take for granted that there is nothing more than meets the eye, that reality is spread in front of you like a rice pudding with nothing underneath but more rice pudding. Not only dull but false.

We would suggest that people who attempt to distill the supernatural world into pure ideas, will eventually abstract it out of existence. We are all for God and Santa Claus and the supernatural world and any tendency to destroy its reality we regard as subversive.

Reality without the supernatural would be as dull as rice pudding without raisins.

Comment

The other day we were startled to hear the Engineering Song blare forth from a campaign truck for J. B. Salsberg. Different words but similar effect. We trust there is no political affiliation between the Faculty of Engineering and the LPP . . . Last Saturday's "Daily Star" failed to include a Poll on Ontario political opinions. Although a regular feature, we wonder whether it was dropped because the Liberal had fallen behind the CCF to third place in the political ratrace.

What Price the Press ?

The Prostitute

Is Adultery confined to the headlines? The chief prostitute is the wolf in sheep's clothing, the abuser of words within words and words without words. In the second of three articles, the writer looks into the loaded line of news in the magazine.

By WILLIAM GLENESK

When Hans Richter produced his unique Dreams That Money Can Buy in film, he cast a shadow of light on the three arch makers of dreams in print — Reader's Digest, Life, and Time. Like Paramount News, these three play the role of "the eyes and ears of the world", but add one more, the mind. And perhaps the heart. They play to the "thousands who influence the millions", the crowd that is not the crowd, the exclusive majority.

Published in Pleasantville, N.Y., the Reader's Digest ironically paints only a pleasant world, a sky without clouds where nothing succeeds like sucess. In the pattern prescribed in the Digest we are dared to be Daniels in the lion's den and baited beyond the impossible. Look at the Digest covers. "Science Rebuilds a Farm in One Day", "She Opened the Eyes of Texas", "Do it Themselves? Impossible!", "Take a Cow To College and Make It Pay." By means of subtle contraction and tailored-to-fit features, the Digest designs its contents to design the reader. Where the pages were made to the reader's order, now the reader is made to order. And it's just because "Life's Like That." Life in the digestive tube is just a bowl of cherries, but the editors have removed the stones and after a retouching here and there, the cherries are preserved in print. In The Mechanical Bride, Dr. H. M. McLuhan states the formula: "Since there's a heap of goodness, beauty, and power in everybody and everything, let's extract it and then box it, bottle it or can it, and hurry to market. The smart little pig went to market, the dumb little pig stayed home. But if some accident should keep the smart little pig at home, then bet your boots that little old home is going to bloom out into a $100,000 business, at least, and provide a lesson of comfort and solace to the entire community." The Digest reader steps subconsciously into a strait-jacket, and the dollarized success formula "destroys human autonomy, freezes perception, and sterilizes judgment."

Caught in the tension of a dog-eat-dog economy, where his pulse beats with the stock exchange, and his eye dulls with the spectrum of propaganda, the man in the street cries for a medicine to cure his ills. Like Blanche in A Streetcar Named Desire, he sighs: "I don't want reality, I want magic." And Reader's Digest waves the aesthetic wand.

Typical of those "different" millions who keep step with the smart set in swallowing Time and Life is the crack: "The only thing he knows about life is that It comes every week." Until its coming the reader lives in a suspended picture world of crime exposure, body exposure, and double exposure of his own conscious and sub-conscious soul to dose upon dose of popular science mixed with a liberal spoonful of religious art. Is Life objective? In a recent ad in Time the caption reads: "Life . . . graphically reports the world's events . . . and vividly pictures the democratic way of life. . . . It has become an ambassador of goodwill throughout the free world — and an advertising showcase for products made by free men." Note the frank admissions contained in the words "vividly", "democratic", "ambassador", and "free." Life has influence in interpreting the world to its 20,000,000 readers in painting the pictures in their heads.

With the eye-witness photographer we go to a party, whether a college fraternity or the White House, and with week after week of pictorial tours backstage at the farm, the Pentagon and the theatre, the Life addict is led by the nose into a selected series of vignettes of American life, with lighting by the Republicans on the side.

But Time stalks in by the back door. In a person-to-person, terse, tense confidential line, Time draws close to its reader, breaks down resistance with a "be in the know" chuckle, then slips in the dope. But the Time dope is not obvious or explicit. It is concealed and implicit in the lines. Its philosophy, its doctrines and opinions are submerged. As Dr. McLuhan states: "Like the clever ads, they do not argue with their readers. They wallop the subconscious instead." The Time editor keeps the light and shade of the news event just out of focus as he sets his stage of words to achieve the planned effect.

Time re-creates unity out of diversity. In its page on People, Time turns the kaleidoscope of alternate comedy and tragedy on celebrities, and a parade of "inside stories" stimulates the curious stimulus-seeking mind in the Time technique "sight by one man for one map." By means of the sharp simile and homely metaphor juxtaposed with fact, Time masterminds the reader with stereotype suggestion, and we behold the glistening artifice of the decorated Christmas tree, the reality of its branches fused in a unity of coloured lights. Each week a star shines at the tree's top: Ben Fairless, Joe McCarthy, Winston Churchill ad infinitum — a miniature life history with all the trimmings of a private confession that even Maria Monk would envy.

For its superior, exclusive audience, Time reverts to the ballad narratieon of events, a linear, episodic revelation of selected news, so ordered and contrived to give the effect of an intellectual, brazen, punching peep-show, with no punches pulled. Time gives a lift and a let-down in a single phrase. The "lift" is into its concocted stream of current history, which in fact is concurrent, and your interest is kindled with a sly dig in the ribs. The "let-down" is when your reason submits to the dig, and a tickle of anaesthesia is nudged in.

On just how aware you are of Time's skill with the anaesthetic depends whether that tickle gives vent to a traumatic laugh, and you are caught up in the "Ballet Luce." Time marches on.

I would like to draw to the attention of the readers of The Varsity the appalling condition under which the white mice in the basement of Victoria College are trying to raise families. Varsity Stadium resounds at this time of the year to the which and whoosh of flashing skates throwing a spray during a hockey game. Jack Weldrake and Dave Stevens, shown above, are forwards on the Varsity Blues team. Hockey has never caused as great a stir on the Toronto campus as much as other big-time sports but a goodly portion of the campus find excitement in cheering the skating five on to inter-Varsity glory.

Resident Students Voteless Though on Thursday's List

Although their names may be on the voters' list, university students living away from home won't be allowed to vote in the Toronto ridings in Thursday's provincial election, it was announced last night.

However, candidates for the two major Ontario political parties say they are in favor of keeping the resident students on the voters' list, and one candidate states he will work to keep them there.

The Chief Electoral Officer for Ontario, Major Alex Lewis, said last night that university students may vote only in the electoral riding where their permanent residence is located. They cannot vote at a temporary residence, he said.

In spite of this ruling, many of the university residences, including Knox College and Burwash Hall, have had their residents included on the voters' list. Students living in residence are liable to be challenged when they appear at the polls Thursday, and their right to vote in that riding cancelled.

The Election Act clause in question states that to vote a person must "ordinarily be a resident of a city, town or township over 10,000 in population at the date of issue of the writ of election." The question, according to one law student, is whether or not the students were "ordinarily" residents of their university residences when the writ was issued Oct. 6.

The Returning Officer for St. Patrick's District, which includes the majority of university residences, was not available for comment last night. However, according to one Vic student, some of the resident students were included on the voters' list with his knowledge.

John Rutherford, Vic CCF Organizer, said that when Burwash Hall residents were not included on the first voters' list, he saw the Returning Officer, Marvin Turk, who had them added.

The CCF candidate for St. Patrick's said last night (through his official agent) that he would be working to keep the names of the students on the voters' list. He added it might help if they swore the residence was their home.

Kelso Roberts, the Progressive Conservative candidate, commented that if a student has been enumerated and his name appears on the voters' list, he should make every effort to vote. "My advice to the students is to present themselves at the polls if their names appear on the list."

The Liberal candidate, Walt Mackenzie, would only state that he would follow any decision made by Major Lewis.

Oil Question Topic At Brading Trophy Preliminary Trials

Preliminary debating trials for the Brading Trophy Debating team will take place at Brennan Hall, St. Michael's College on Nov. 26, from 4-6 p.m. The winners will compete with a representative team from four Scottish universities early in January.

The prospective Varsity team members will present 15-minute speeches for or against the motion, "It is resolved that the Iranian government was justified in nationalizing Iran's oil industry". Four faculty judges will choose the two debators of the highest calibre to represent U. of T. in the Canadian playdowns.

Similar tryouts will be held at Queen's, McGill and Western to choose debators to send to the semi-final debates to be held at Brennan Hall Dec. 8. Each two-man team will be accompanied by a faculty judge from its own university, but will be judged by the three faculty members of the competing universities.

The teams will speak as a unit for or against an as-yet-undecided motion. The highest aggregate score will decide the team to compete with a similarly chosen team from Scotland. The Scottish debaters, students at one of Edinburgh, Aberdeen, St. Andrews or Glasgow Universities, will tour the four participating Canadian universities in January, 1952, in a series of unofficial debates similar to the one above. The debate held at the university of the Canadian champions will officially decide the winners of the newly donated Brading Trophy.

The trophy, and the $1,500 attached to it for travelling expenses, have been donated by the Canadian Breweries ltd., which this year will sponsor the three-man Scottish team on its trip to Canada. If this year's debates prove a success, a Canadian debating team will go to Scotland in 1953.

A group of McGill students interested in debating made the arrangements for the trophy. However the organization on the individual campi has been left to the debating unions of the four universities. In Toronto the University of Toronto Debating Union, a committee of the SAC, has arranged for the preliminary trials and the subsequent playdowns as part of its task as co-ordinator of campus debating. Commissioner of Debates, Charles Hanley, said that these trials are a sample of many. Tours are planned to Chicago and Boston and also a series of debates through the Inter-University Debating Union—debates with Carleton College, Western, OAC, Queen's, Osgoode Hall and McMaster.

McGill Apathy At Low Ebb

Montreal (CUP) — Student apathy is at a low ebb at McGill. Nominations have been received for only three out of 12 posts on the Student Executive Council (corresponding to the Ctudents' Administrative Council).

The President of the SEC said, "This is a great reflection on student interest in their own government. Students forget that there must be some management behind the privileges they enjoy. There is a tendency to take student government for granted."

Social Workers OK Tour

A motion in favor of inviting Russian students to visit Canada was passed 27 to 5 by the Social Work Student Association (SWoSA).

President Irving Mann told students that the purpose of this meeting was to discuss whether Russian students should be invited to tour Canadian universities (particularly U. of T.), or attend them on exchange. Another question was whether NFCUS should be asked to invite the Russian students either this year or next, if it was decided that they should be invited.

The main arguments in favor of the invitation were that university students as potential leaders in Canadian communities should listen to what Russian students might have to say and to find out exactly what is the situation behind the iron curtain. There is also the remote chance that the Russian students might look objectively at our situation and report it truthfully to their fellow students.

Even though the Russian students were hand-picked there would be a chance to see and hear them. They could be judged not only on the basis of what they say but also on our personal evaluation of them. Such a visit would at least slightly enlighten us and at most lead to an understanding of Russia.

It was pointed out NFCUS as a member of the Canadian Co-ordinating Committee of Youth Groups would be able to call on other member organizations for help. It was felt generally that in refusing to allow Russian students to come to Canada, we are guilty of the very thing that is criticized in Russia.

The arguments against allowing Russian students to visit centered about the feeling that it would do no good because the hand-picked students would see, hear, say, and report only what the USSR wanted them to. If might do real harm if the press so distorted the details of the visit that even more ill and unreasoned feeling engendered among the Canadian people.

Then a discussion was held to see whether SWoSA was in favor of asking NFCUS to invite the Russian students this year or next. It was decided that because a visit would involve fuch preparation, no time limit would be put on the request but that NFCUS be asked to begin preparations immediately.

Arts Balls? Russians? Clean Up?

The second open meeting of the UC Literary and Athletic Society will be held tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the JCR. Among the questions to be considered at the meeting will be the question of whether or not to have a formal Arts Ball. The dance will be held on January 25 in a Monte Carlo atmosphere and the Lit Social Director, Victor Beube, advocates that it be formal.

A new idea for selling tickets for the UC Arts Ball is also to be discussed at the meeting—some tickets to be sold for .50c, $1.00, $1.50 and $3.00 depending on how lucky you are.

After discussing a motion on the advisability of allowing Russian students to study at the University of Toronto a vote will be taken to indicate the feelings of the Lit. towards the question.

Also of prime importance on the agenda will be the question of how to clean up the JCR. The Lit will even go to the extent of barring men from the Junior Common Room or closing it. "This ne plus in swinish living cannot go on," said Beube.

The first year president, Martin Siegal, will introduce a motion in regard to UC's part in the freshmen orientation program. An informal get-together is being planned for Friday in the Women's Union for freshmen in all faculties.

To Be Shorn

Haircuts by appointment now cost the "long hair" 90 cents in the Hart House barber shop. The minimum price for a shearing is now 75 cents after the increase last spring. Compared to the rest of the tonsorial world, though, the prices in the shop just around the corner from the Art Gallery are still at a minimum.

LONGEST NAME

Twenty Cents Worth

This is the first of a series of articles on the Canadian national student body. Following news style, the lead article answer four basic questions: What? Who? Where? Why? The second article, on the organization's national policy, will appear tomorrow.

What ?

The Canadian National Student Body is known as the National Federation of Canadian University Students, or NFCUS, or (if you prefer a more phonetic form) Nifcus.

NFCUS bears the doubtful distinction of having the longest name (in number of letters) of any of the national student unions which will be attending the Edinburgh Conference next month. There is only one which beats it—The National Union of Students of England, Wales and Northern Ireland—but no one ever calls this anything but the British National Union of Students.

Therefore it seems the first thing for which students have to be thankful to NFCUS is that its initial are phonetically pronounceable.

Who ?

Everyone belongs to NFCUS, whether they realize it or not. Even if you don't approve of the principle of the organization, you still pay your fees when you pay your incidental fees in the fall.

Twenty cents of your $5.00 student's council fees goes to the national headquarters of NFCUS in Ottawa. The only way to stop payment of this money (which comes to about $2,200 from the Toronto campus) is to refuse to vote it out of SAC funds. This means a complete break with the national body.

Some people have decided to get along without NFCUS. Queen's has been out of the organization for two years now. And Manitoba is threatening to leave, because the UMSU (that's their student council) budget can't afford it.

However, as long as the "dynamic spirit of internationalism" recently mentioned by Syd Wax lasts on this campus, Toronto isn't likely to withdraw.

And anyway, $1,000 of our NFCUS fee is already in Ottawa.

Where ?

Eighteen universities belong to NFCUS, and they stretch from British Columbia in the west to Dalhousie in the east.

They have been divided into four regions: the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, and the West. Each region elects a Regional Vice-President. In addition the entire country elects a President. These five people sit on the National Executive.

This year a sixth member may be added to that body. There is a constitutional amendment going the rounds to make the Chairman of the International Activities Commission a voting member of the Executive.

This makes the NFCUS Chairman at the University of Manitoba see red. He is afraid that it will upset the whole regional organization of NFCUS. But Toronto thinks it's a good idea.

Why ?

It seems to be the fashion nowadays for groups of similar people to band together in larger organizations. The Canadian Manufacturers have done it. Unions do it. Canadian universities have done it. And the Canadian university students have done it.

Just as the other larger groups have formed national bodies, so the students formed NFCUS. The reason is fairly obvious. A group of 45,000 (the present national university population) is going to be heard much more than a group of 11,000 (as at Toronto), or 1,100, or 110. In other words, NFCUS is a pressure group, to represent Canadian students wherever their interests are at stake.

Looking at it on a higher plane, another purpose of NFCUS is to allow an interchange of students and ideas between the different sections of Canada. This it does through Canadian regional exchanges, and exchanges between Canadian and American universities.

The all-Canadian side of this has proved highly successful in the past. Several students from other parts of Canada are studying at Toronto under this scheme.

Whether or not NFCUS' lobby action has been successful will be discussed in a later article. However, in the early years of its formation, the national body certainly did get down to work. Among other things it arranged special student railway rates at Christmas, organized Canadian University Press (now a separate organization, although NFCUS continually discusses it at the annual conference), got discounts on sporting goods for students, and organized a national debating competition (to which Toronto is just returning this year, after many years' abence).

Since the war, NFCUS has not achieved a great deal of a practical nature. One of the most outstanding works has been a 19-page booklet entitled "So You're Going to Europe," which describes everything a prospective world-traveller might need to know: passports, where to stay, hostel groups, etc.

It presented a brief to the Massey Commission on the Arts, Letters and Sciences regarding the need for more financial aid to students. It is working on a national drama festival and a national seminar. For the past two years Toronto was investigating text book prices, to discover ways of lowering them; the mandate has now passed to a western university.

Since the war, international activities (such as the Stockholm and Edinburgh Conference of Western Student Unions) have been of great interest in NFCUS: — have even stolen the limelight away from the national work. The Canadian body has slowly grown in stature until now it is beginning to take a leading role in world student affairs. The most recent example of this, of course, is the now notorious "Russian question".

At present NFCUS is working on a number of projects which, if completed and impiemented, will be a great boon to the Canadian student. The only trouble is that too often three-year-old projects (such as the text price investigation and the seminar) are no further ahead than when they were first begun.

Col. Nifcus Bloop Witness At Mock Trial Wednesday

His Honour Paul H. Mills will be the presiding judge at the trial of N. Geneer which will be staged on Wednesday night in the Junior Common Room at seven o'clock, the office of the All-Varsity prosecutor announced today.

Great difficulty was experienced in obtaining a judge who was partial, a spokesman said. Judge Mills being both an engineer and a lawyer is partial to both sides and can sit on the case with equanimity. A graduate of this University Judge Mills is lecturing in Engineering Law in the Faculty of Applied Science and Engineering.

War No Use - Pacifist Claims

"Until a sufficiently large number of our citizens come to the point of saying, 'I will not support our country in the event of war', the pacifist movement will not be effective," stated Reverend J. Lovell Smith at the Campus Fellowship for Reconciliation Club meeting yesterday.

Speaking to twenty students at Emmanuel College, Reverend Smith, minister at the Church of All Nations, indicated that he had been a pacifist since 1918, after serving as a Canadian army officer in Europe.

Reverend Smith presented the reasons for his aversion to war under the headings of practical, patriotic and moral reasons. "Not a single aim of the First World War was accomplished," said Smith, "for Democracy is no safer". The speaker then praised the idea in Harry Fosdick's statement: "The only thing a nation learns by being defeated in war is not to be defeated again."

Anglican Dean Talks on China

Life behind the Bamboo Curtain" will be the subject of an address by the Very Rev. A. C. S. Hewett, MA, DD, Dean of Holy Trinity Cathedral, Shanghai, China to the United Nations Club this Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock in University College Women's Union.

The Dean arrived in Toronto last Wednesday on his way from Shanghai to England. Dean Trivett, a graduate of this University, has spent the past 31 years in China, remaining there throughout the Japanese occupation.

The UN Club is at present studying the problem of "the admission of Communist China to the U.N." in preparation for a model security council meeting to be held on Wednesday evening, December 5th. Members of the Club have divided into committees, each committee studying the problem from the point of view of one of the member countries of the security council.

On December 5th, the committees will table resolutions in the model security council. A vote will be taken to decide the order in which resolutions will be discussed. A spokesman for each committee (elected by that committee) will speak as the representative of the country which that committee has been studying. There will therefore be eleven representatives eligible to speak and vote on each resolution.

The group has already heard a broad outline of the tremendous problem which faces us in the far East from Mr. Ali Tayeb of Karachi, Pakistan. On Thursday the U. N. Club will be able to hear at first hand, a report of conditions inside Communist China and learn something of their approach to the non-Communist Occident.

Art Exhibition Will Highlight Masterpieces

The second annual All-Varsity Night at the Art Gallery is being sponsored by the Blue and White Society on Thursday, November 29, at 8 p.m. Admission will be free to all students.

The Junior Committee of the Art Gallery, in conjunction with the Blue and White Society, has planned a special evening programme. Included will be tours of the current showings, The Royal Canadian Academy and the old Masters' Exhibit from the Museum; demonstrations by three artists painting in their individual styles; an opportunity for everyone to try his hand at painting at clay modelling; and films of the Cistine Chapel and the Borgia family.

The aim of this event is to stimulate student interest in the cultural facilities available outside the campus. This is part of the general function of the Blue and White Society.

UC Play

Plaideurs On Tour

The annual University College French Play "Les Plaideurs" by Jean Racine will be presented in Hart House Theatre on Wednesday, November 21. The play is to be taken, sets, costumes, and all to McMaster, the University of Ottawa, and the University of Montreal after its initial presentation here.

Let Plaideurs, the only comedy ever written by Racine, is a witty mockery of the legal practices of the day and of plaideurs of pdaintiffs who were happy only when filing a suit. Its great popularity seems to indicate that the author could have been as successful in the field of comedy as he is in that of classical tragedy.

The sets, termed "Magnificent" by Mr. Finch and "Eye-knocking" by the Wardrobe Mistress were designed by Hubert Fielden-Briggs. The costumes were especially made for this play by Mrs. Vicien Keogh, who has made a particular study of the dress of the 17th century.

Principal Jeanneret commented that "Les Plaideurs" should be seen by everyone interested in classical comedy of the Moliere school.

Musicale

Pianist Noman Dahl, a student in the Senior School of the Royal Conservatory of Music, will perform at the next mid-day Recital given in the East Common Room of Hart House next Wednesday at 1:30 p.m.

Dahl, who hails from the west, studied for three years at the University of Saskatchewan. This summer, while in Europe, he performed over the Norwegian radio network.

All Hart House members are invited to attend.

Canon Milford

Bishop Neill Will Not Head Varsity Mission

Canon Milford, Chief Missioner in next January's University Christian Mission is now Chancellor of Lincoln Cathedral. Canon Milford carries on for Bishop Neill, who conducted the Varsity Mission in 1949, and who had to cancel his coming to Toronto in 1952.

Last year Milford preached at a Varsity church service, and led a group of professors at the Hart House Farm on the purpose of a university. In Britain he has worked with Sir Walter Moberley, author of Crisis in the University. When asked to lead the mission at Varsity in 1952, the Canon warned: "I am very, very English." He is a graduate of Magdalene College, Oxford, in Litterae Humaniores.

At Cambridge the Canon graduated in theology, and thence went to St. John's College, Agra, India, as a lecturer in philosophy. From 1935 to 1938 he was Study Secretary of the British SCM, and from there was appointed Vicar of St. Mary's, the University Church at Oxford. Milford has written two pamphlets: A Christian Philosophy of Sex, and Freedom and Discipline, and he is currently writing a work on the Atonement. Latest report on Dick Milford is that he will discuss his debate in England with philosopher Gilbert Ryle. The Canon, I believe, has a sense of humour, and is a whiz at question and answer sessions.

With Milford will be a bevy of associate speakers from Canada and the United States.

What ruins a war film more than anything else is phoniness. And the newest entry locally, FORCE OF ARMS (at the Imperial) is a bad film because it is essentially phony.

It is hard to place the blame for this insincerity, but I suspect the original story by World War II correspondent Richard Tregaksis may be the major fault. Quite probably this is not an intentional slant on Tregaksis' part, but his work (a war novel, Stronger Than Fear, is another example) has tended to be superficial, a bringing-together of all battle clichés into a phony development.

But at least, in Stronger Than Fear, which deals with the last stages of the battle in Germany, the hero falls in action. As FORCE OF ARMS ground on, my partner said: "He's going to die, isn't he?" referring to hero Bill Holden. But he couldn't die, because after all he was such a clean-cut American boy and he was loved by a clean-cut American girl (Nancy Olson) who virtuously repulsed his advances at the early stages of their acquaintance. The repulsing showed that she was a good girl, and good girls don't get hurt in a picture like this one, not permanently that is.

There is more than just kinship in titles between FORCE OF ARMS and A Farewell to Arms. The hero is a tough, well-educated, self-sacrificing sergeant in the Italian campaign. He meets the WAC lieutenant at a rest camp and falls in love. Back in action, now as a field commission lootie, he is more cautious because he must return to Her. His buddy dies, and guilt preys on the hero because he did not make what would have been a futile attempt to save his friend. Out of this theme could have come a tremendous movie.

But from the opening scene, which is a skirmish with a German position on an Italian hill, there is an air of studio unreality. This unreality keeps on cancelling out the effectiveness of the battle scenes, even if actual combat shots are pasted in. And as the movie goes on, the principals are so articulate when worrying about each other's futures and such-like stuff, that the talk sounds more like a bull session in the Plaza Room between campus intellectuals. (The screenplay by Orin Jannings may be to blame here, or it may be still the Tregaksis touch.)

The story also suffers from an over-obvious sequence of events. Never do we wonder what is going to happen next. It always happens the way we know it is going to. So we know the hero is not really dead, although everyone in the film acts as if he was. And he isn't either.

To add to the shoddiness, the film is underlined by one of the most cliché-ridden musical scores in Hollywood history. Herbert Whittaker has mentioned "My Buddy" in the tense hospital scene when the soldier and his WAC meet after he has been wounded. A further deftness is the booming signature of Beethoven's Fifth when the victorious Allies march into Rome. But there are a million of 'em.

And in the ending, the bells ring out in glorious clanging. "It's for the victory," says the girl, her muddy ecstatic face uplifted in joy and relief. "No, it's for us, you and me," corrects the unshaven hero, and so it ends happily ever after. Except that he has a permanent bad leg, and she's going to have a baby.

It is to the credit of William Holden and Nancy Olson that, despite all this corny muck, their performances are earnest and sincere. Frank Lovejoy is thrown away as the major-buddy who is killed.

Director Michael Curtiz should stick to fables about Young Men With A Horn. And writer Richard Tregaksis and Warner Brothers' head composer Max Steiner should drop dead.

I suppose it should be said also that FORCE OF ARMS isn't quite "the greatest love story every told."

Redooo vegetarians

Editor, The Varsity:

The Canadian Communists would be no more worthy of attention than the vegetarians or the Bloc Populaire if it were not for the fact that they are the intellectual agents for a foreign nation, controlling an international "party" which is opposed to the liberal democratic tradition. Because they are admitted representatives of this movement we must give them a refutation rather than a treatment even when it is manifestly clear that the latter is needed.

To the illiberal totalitarian mind the truth is that which the authority (such as the leader, the party or the book) says is true. A Communist believes that South Korea started the war there on the infallible authority of the party.

One method of refuting the Communists is to point out the difference between the truth as defined by the party hierarchy and the truth as most reasonable people see it as they look around them. I am not naive enough to believe that we can destroy the faith of the Communist in that way but we can at least keep the record straight and prevent him from confusing us.

Last Thursday, Shirley Endicott, the leading Communist on the campus, chaired a meeting at UC during which Norman Penner, former leader of the Young Communist League, discussed "the crisis in the CCF" and the provincial election. Mr. Penner spoke very eloquently about the "right wing leadership of Jolliffe and Coldwell". He argued that they were supporting "the war policies of the St. Laurent government". Most of us at the meeting have heard this line time and time again but before long something new had been added, a revolt in the ranks of the Ontario CCF. He named three CCF MPP's who have opposed the "war" policies of their party and were receiving Communist support in the provincial election. His whole speech consisted of lies, half-truths and slander (all of which he and Miss Endicott sincerely believed as loyal party members with intelligent and well-disciplined minds) but this last part was so fantastic that I thought I would check it. Friday at Bloor Collegiate, two of these MPP's appeared on a public platform with their warmongering leader. (I am being sarcastic, don't quote me out of context.)

After the meeting I spoke to Lloyd Fell, MPP for Parkdale and Harry Walters, MPP for Bracondale and told them about Mr. Penner's little speech at UC.

Their comments were very interesting. Both men, needless to say, want peace and not war. Walters does not disagree with CCF foreign policy and did not ask for nor does he want Communist support. The same goes for Fell who says that he has had to toss Communist "peace" delegations out of his house and if Penner continues to use his name to support Communist foreign policy he will take legal action.

Before closing, I would remind Miss Endicott and her small band of party faithfuls that it would be more judicious to have guest speakers talk about the glories of life in the USSR and in the party's New Dictatorships of Eastern Europe. The trouble about talking about happenings in the old hog town is that we can check up.

Jack Rutherford,
Vic CCF Organizer.

Packed peace pact

Editor, The Varsity:

Mr. Shepherd in his letter to The Varsity Nov. 13 asks "Peace and What? Mr. Anderson". I must attempt to answer.

There are different areas to which the word peace applies: international, national, and personal. Let us concern ourselves with the first of these.

By peace I mean absence of armed conflict between nations, but more than this negativism. Peace stands for a relationship of trust and goodwill between nations. Peace means bilateral disarmament with inspection. Peace means the destruction of atomic bombs and outlawing their production and the production of gas and bacteria for war. Peace means trade and cultural exchanges between all countries. Peace means non-interference by force of arms, economic power or social pressures on the internal affairs of other nations. Peace means freedom from fear, from want, freedom of religion and speech, freedom from war propaganda (i.e., licence of speech).

I will be surprised if Mr. Shepherd disagrees radically with the above definitions, but he may be surprised to know that it is derived directly from the Warsaw Nine Points of the World Peace Congress. It is to this kind of peace that the Appeal for a Five Power Peace Pact is directed.

We haven't peace today by this definition. How are we, the ordinary folk, to achieve it? Can you, Mr. Shepherd, suggest a better way than petitioning the Five Great Powers to get together and sign a Pact of Peace and then sit down and negotiate until the conditions of the definition are realized—or machinery set up for their realization?

Please note I only used the nasty little word (my unashamed obsession) 15 times.

The King's english

Editor, The Varsity:

We have been humbled . . . ? What does kaleidoscope mean? Like Becky Sharpe, we threw our dictionary out the window after leaving school. But alas! — already we have erred, for our reference to poor Becky is faintly reminiscent of Mr. Crang's pedant who discoursed at great length on Browning's Fra Lippo, without so much as a "Pleased ta meetcha!"

We feel that Mr. Crang believes practicality to be the spice of life—maybe so, but what is he doing in a liberal arts course? He feels that the English department assumes too much in setting a composition test. Perhaps he would prefer a course in some foreign language to the one offered by the English department. If Mr. Crang learned Italian, he could always switch to that, taking advantage of an awkward situation, and probably his conversation as, when an English sentence became a paragraph (rather like this one), the punctuation foggy, and such words as "interkinesis" inappropriate.

After reading Mr. Crang's letter, we feel that this question "Is there any reason for such grade?" should have been rhet cal. (See Oxford Dictionary abridged edition.) Answers infinite! However, we co thize with (the fact that he compelled to write a precis. on the other hand, we should be grateful to the precis, for of inestimable value in cu one from the common erro spurting forth "sound and signifying nothing." (Shucks other allusion.) For nigh on years, we have been labouring der the delusion that we expanding our vocabulary cultivating our intellect. Whe cruel dose of reality was Crang's letter! We have been ing our practical instincts sleep—a sleep by such word kaleidoscope and meiosis. We promoted, in our shaken tion to say "Hence, loathed ancholy," but we won't.

In closing, we should like point out earnestly that it is our policy to contradict the viewpoint—with so many dances in the offing—but we re ly believed Mr. Crang's letter something up with which could not put.

Cont'd

Editor, The Varsity:

I should like to express a f points in opposition to the v taken by Mr. Crang in his let to the Editor. I think he shou be personally ashamed of failure in the English Compos tion examination and in his la of concern over his own lan guage. Although I admit that t ten words chosen by the Engli Department cannot be represen tative of all, I will venture to state that those words and other like them are written, read and spoken more often in all types o literature and conversation than Kaleidoscope, interkinesis and meiosis. Even to discuss strictly scientific and mathematical subjects one must have recourse to the non-technical words of the language.

What exactly did Mr. Crang learn in his twelve years of Eng lish if not at least some punc tuation? It, alas, is an essential part of our written language whether in scientific journals o philosophical treatises. As fo writing a precis, has Mr. Crang never had to read a book an pick out the important ideas in it?

In everyday conversation on does not have to and is not ex pected to discuss Browning an Milton, but to express one's opi ions in a sensible, logical, intel ligible and gramatically correct way. If there was no grammar and there won't be if no on ever learns any, where would the English language be or, in fact where would civilization be?

The student in Honour Eng lish and the student in a prac tical course profess an equal rig in their country and, therefor should equally be expected t know at least the fundamenta of its language. This is a mini mum requirement for any intel gent and educated citizen n mater what field he may be en gaged in.

Par Lagerkvist – '51 Winner Of Nobel Literature Prize

"Barabbas" — Par Lagerkvist, Random House, 1951, $2.00.

Last week Par Lagerkvist, the Swedish playwright, poet, essayist, short-story writer, and novelist, was awarded the 1951 Nobel prize for literature (which, incidentally, amounted to over 32,000 dollars).

Apparently the award was presented for Lagerkvist's earlier work, because his latest novel, "Barabbas", seems scarcely worthy of such an honour as the Nobel prize.

Perhaps the idea for "Barabbas" was conceived without the influence of recent American novels, but it appears to be a product of the trend to deal with obscure Biblical personalities. The success of Lloyd Douglas' "The Robe" created a swift succession of novels whose subjects varied from Pilate's wife and the daughter of Jairus to Luke, the apostle. It must be conceded that these topics are of interest, because often one finds himself trying to reconstruct the life of a character who appears briefly on the stage of history. Now, one may save himself some mental stress and merely wait until a novelist writes a book on the subject.

The New Testament mentions Barabbas as the condemned thief who is released in place of Jesus at the time of the Passover feast. The Biblical account makes it clear that the shouts of the mob saved Barabbas from crucifixion in preference to freeing the man who claimed to be the son of God. But Lagerkvist provides his hero with a guilty conscience without attempting to explain why Barabbas, who had nothing to do with his own release much less with Jesus' crucifixion, should feel responsible.

The author also makes extensive use of unconvincing coincidence to place Barabbas in places desirable for the movement of the theme which deals with the spiritual anguish springing from the aforementioned guilt complex. Barabbas runs into the disgruntled apostles even when seeking to avoid them. He is present at the sepulchre when Christ is freed from the tomb by "an angel in a mantle of fire . . . rushing down from heaven with arm outstretched like the point of a speare." He watches angry scribes stoning the Christian martyrs, and stumbles unsuspectingly into an underground meeting of the disciples. The final stroke of fortune places him in a Roman dungeon with Saint Peter.

The character, Barabbas, is as dead throughout the novel as if he had been crucified, rather than freed, in the first chapter. Lagerkvist never gives us a good look into the mind he is trying to reveal. Instead, we are given a vague impression that something is troubling Barabbas, and that it is probably this incomprehensible feeling of guilt. Most of our hazy insights into the anguished mind are provided through glimpses into the thoughts of Babbbas' friends. The author uses up six pages describing the opinions of a portly prostitute who is upset because Barabbas has degenerated from an active lover to a moody thinker. These painfully developed ideas are destroyed with a flick of the pen which writes: "But at last it came to her that in actual fact she knew nothing at all about Barabbas . . . whether he was possessed by that crucified man's spirit or not."

Although it is considered unfair to quote authors out of context, many of Lagerkvist's gems are out of context when read in the book. The hackneyed maxims of Christianity inserted at unlikely and frequent intervals become tiresome toward the end of the novel.

First century atmosphere is almost completely lacking, but we are given a convincing estimate of the confusion which faced the earliest Christians in attempting to separate fact from rumour, to understand the new philosophy and to nourish the faith through its insecure beginnings.

Perhaps the translator, Alan Blair, may be blamed for the colorless style. Blair probably confused the author's thrifty style for dull simplicity.

However, we must toss a bouquet toward Random House publishers who amaze by manufacturing a two-dollar novel to look like a deluxe gift edition.

'Unfulfilled' Reviews Canadian Problems

The Unfulfilled by George Hardy, McClelland & Stewart, 1951, $3.50.

George Hardy is a Canadian author with an impressive career behind him of scholastic and literary success. At present he is head of the Department of Classics at the University of Alberta and has written three good historical novels, the most recent one being a study of Moses called "All The Trumpets Sounded.

In The Unfulfilled however, Prof. Hardy turns to the contemporary Canadian scene in an attempt to describe the position of Canadians who feel themselves squeezed in between the conflicting influences of England and United States.

All the superstitions that seem to accompany a stretch of land that has been settled and whose boundaries have been defined are expressed in this novel, for example, "Somehow I feel that there is a Canadian type . . ." "Puritanism is a strong strain in Canada," and finally the old bogey that our only defence against a rising tide of Americanism is a truly Canadian culture.

Although British influence is given some consideration the direct and vital influence to be combatted turns out to be the U.S. Wesley Drummond and Gregory Rolph both represent the split within Canadian Society, the wealthy financier and the ordinary, struggling white-collar man, and yet both are at one regardless of their class differences in trying to struggle free,—from dependence on U.S. capital on the one hand and the beacon of Hollywood success on the other.

An American reading The Unfulfilled would probably be amused and slightly annoyed at the way in which Gregory Rolph and his son approach New York as a place to vent all the pent-up emotions which a Puritan Toronto would frown upon, and then smugly decide to return to the staider and more virtuous life north of the border, once they have had their fling.

Perhaps we are being unfair, but we simply don't go for this line that our cultural salvation lies in a defiant attitude towards American influence. We rather agree with Prof. Underhill that for better or for worse there is little difference between Canadians and Americans. We must rather learn to take the best from the U.S., not deliberately cultivate a local culture which will in the end prove narrow and insufficient for the times. ou can't just put boundaries on the cultural development of a nation the way you can limit it geographically.

But enough of culture-mongering. To return to Prof. Hardy's book, we would like to add that its structure and plot is smoothly concocted but that the emotional tenor of the novel often tends to slow up the flow of words. Hearts sob just once too often, and the characters tend to become uninteresting when they get lost in a flood or emotions only too familiar to the reader of Canadian novels.

Perhaps the reason we are so critical of this particular novel lies in the fact that it is so much better than the average. Yet Canadian writers never seem be able to lift their creations into the realm of genuine literary accomplishment. Whether or not they do it on the strength on a sort of literary sophistication we associate with English novelists, or on the strength of an intense realism which some American writers have perfected we don't particularly care.

The thing is that we are looking for a treatment which will give rise to the immediate reaction: "THIS, at least, could never possibly be run as a serial in the Family Herald and Weekly Star."

Van Vogt Science Thriller Depicts New Race of Men

Slan by A. E. VanVogt, Musson Book Company, 1951, $2.50.

"Slan," is one of the early classics in the modern school of science-fiction, has been reprinted. This story was first printed in a magazine—and the issue containing the story has been since unavailable. A limited edition was printed in book form in 1945. It sold out quickly and copies have since been selling for up to $20. Now the book is once again available

The slan is a superhuman being of the distant future; hunted, persecuted, and killed on sight by the waning race of homo sapiens. The humans have the added advantage as the slan is anatomically different internally and has golden tendrils on his head—organs of a new telepathic sense.

The plot follows the slan Peter Cross on his search for the true history of the slan race. Rumor has it that the race was created by the machine of a scientist named Samuel Lann—S. Lann—as a mutation of humanity. Upon discovery a conflict began after termed the "Slan Wars", as the accusation was made that the original slans were increasing their numbers by use of the machine upon humans. As a result the slans were apparently decimated and the human race reduced to a twentieth of their present numbers.

Cross doesn't quite believe this — he'd never think of doing such a thing himself and as he gradually meets other slans he finds that they are of similar mind. Then enters the villians—tendrilless slans who are perpetrating these evil deeds as an incidental to conquering the world from a base on Mars. These have an intense hatred of the true slans—their only obstacle—and humans who they consider due to their inferior intelligence and strength fit only for slaves.

The burden of the plot relates how Peter with the aid of the latest in atomic disintegrators and the love interest finds his way to the true slan underground (they are posing as the rulers of the World State) just in time to thwart the plans of the villains and recover the girl he lost a few chapters before. He also finds out the true history of the slan race.

But the plot in any science-fiction book is generally merely the building the machinery rests in, and Slan is a first-rate example of this. Van Vogt starts from a basically plausible hypothesis—suppose the time should come for a mass mutation of the human race. Such an event may have accounted for the vanishing of assorted types of prehistoric men, hence why not for homo the sap?

But Man hates all that is strange or unusual and fights it. However a successful or survival mutation will have superior intelligence and strength, and hence the ability to fight back and eventually to win. It is this situation that forms the story in the book.

Technology has been pretty well developed in the ten years since the story was first published and all that remains is sufficient time for the theory to be put into practice. All that can really be said about this sort of work is that—well, it hasn't happened yet and maybe it won't —but it could.

Science-fiction is now becoming an acknowledged field of literature, no longer confined to "penny-dreadfuls" with bug-eyed monsters and scantily-clad women on the covers. A few more well-designed books such as this and it will have at long last achieved respectability. And with regard to this may we express one final hope — since one science-fiction book passes through the hands of so many readers, let us have bindings as smart and as durable as that on Slan.

Ave Atque Vale

By ANNE CARNWATH

Colette has been called the greatest living writer in France by Gide and lauded by Somerset Maugham as a painstaking artist, whose every word has been carefully selected. How a vivacious young girl from Burgundy ever managed to take the everyday experiences of her youth and shape them into permanent literature is a good question. We are probably more indebted to the friend of the family, Gauthier Villars who married her, carried her off to Paris, and locked her in her room until she had written down her impressions of her life at school, which were published as the Claudine series, than has as yet been acknowledged.

This act of discipline on the part of Gauthier-Villars (known as "Willy") hardly justified his taking advantage of his wife's talent in the way that he did by signing his name to his wife's work. Colette left him in 1906 for the stage, but still continued to write fictionalized versions of her experiences through World Wars I and II.

Seldom has a writer been able to maintain such a steady output and still manage an active life that ranged from participation in Music Hall Varieties, to Volunteer War Work to various jobs as fashions editor, dramatic writer and feature reporter for several Paris newspapers.

In 1945, at the age of 77, Colette was awarded the Prix Goncourt, an award available to only ten living French artists at one time. Colette is now chairman of this select committee and although practically an invalid, still makes her appearance in French society on special occasions, the last one being a performance of "The Mad Woman of Chaillot" in which a friend of hers starred.

Colette has had a few ardent admirers on the North American continent because of her simple sensuous way of writing about human beings. She is not interested in ideas or manners in themselves, but rather in the antics of the human animal. She is a "poet and historian of the instincts", but she never descends to describing man at his worst simply for the sake of throwing dirt in her readers' faces.

Canadians will be given ample opportunity to read Colette for themselves this season for British Book Service has published a new translation of her works (e.g., Cheri and Last of Cheri, $2.75) and Longmans Green has recently issued six of her novels in one volume (Six Novels of Colette, $6.25).

Questions People Ask Preachers

Questions People Ask, by R. J. McCracken, Musson Book Company, 1951, $3.25.

The name of Robert McCracken will be familiar to many Canadians especially to McMaster grads who took Prof. McCracken's lectures in Philosophy during the eight years he taught at that University. In 1947 he accepted a call to preach at the famous Riverside Church in New York, where he succeeded Harry Emerson Fosdick as minister of one of the largest churches in New York.

A Selection of Prof. McCracken's sermons have been published in book form covering a variety of subjects from "Why Did Jesus Die?" to "Is There an Art in Living in New York City?" The style of thes ecolumns is flawless and should be studied by students of the ministry. However one cannot help but feel that these sermons are muted by the very nature of the position of the protestant preacher. For such a minister can never be certain of the status of his audience and as a consequence he is forced to appeal to unbeliev ers and, in the course of the same sermon, to appeal to the Lord Jesus Christ, in order to reassure the believers that he is still on the inside track even althought he has spent the first ten minutes showing in a very convincing way that it is possible to start from the outside completely and come to God.

Prof. McCracken leans very heavily on the traditional strongpoints of the Baptist Convention, like belief in a personal God and the immediate necessity that faith be continually substantiated by good works. According to him, human nature (although this is never defined) can be changed and man will share eternity with God. In one sermon, "Doing What Comes Naturally" Prof. McCracken finds his grounds of objection to this particular philosophy in reasons that hold good both within and outside the confines of the Christian faith, and we think it a telling fact that this particular sermon is one of the most convincing in the selection.

Otherwise there is little that is new or convincing for the non-christian and much that will warm the heart of the stout believer who is in complete accord with the authority on which Prof. McCracken bases his appeals for the regeneration of man.

UC Murders Meds, Make Playoffs Richardson Scores Four Majors

Brown and Cucin Star Senior Skule is Out

By JIM PROUDFOOT

In a game that meant absolutely nothing to them, a weak Meds team reached the lowest point of a notably unsuccessful season yesterday when they were completely ovrwhelmed by the Senior UC team. The win, to a 44-0 tune, cinched a playoff berth for the Red and White and at the same time ended the scant chance that Sr. SPS had of making the playdowns. Had UC lost, the Skulemen could have beaten UC by winning their remaining game.

Shifty and speedy, Ed Richardson gave a peak performance in the UC backfield, powering for four touchdowns. Ralph Brown was outstanding, too, with one major score and three converts to his credit. Paterson called a clever game at quarterback, mixing accurate passes with a relentless ground attack. But the plays unfolded behind airtight blocking and the defensive play was great.

UC scored on the very first play of the game and the doctors never seemed to recover. Naumoff took the kick-off and the Meds receiver was nailed for a rouge. Meds put the ball in play on their 25, got nowhere on two plays and kicked to the 48. A ten-yard penalty put UC back to the center stripe and on the first play Richardson broke through the line and ghosted all the way for a major which Brown converted. Meds elected to receive but UC recovered the ball. They made one first down and then Richardson took a pitchout on third down and raced around the outside for another touchdown. The convert attempt was no good this time at the end of the quarter.

Meds took the UC kick-off on their 20 and the QB faded to pass but his throw was intercepted on the 27. Danny Cucin went for a first down behind very pretty blocking. Again the blocking threw up a shield for Brown to run wide for five points again. He kicked the convert too. Meds had the ball a couple of times but got nowhere and Richardson had been stopped at the goal line after a 40-yard romp as the half ended.

Meds recovered their own kick but their backfield fumbled and UC took over on the 40. On one try, Richardson was smothered for a loss but he went for a TD next time on a hand-off play that fairly exploded. Brown booted the extra point. Meds kicked after two attempts. UC took the ball to the two but it was not a first down. Meds clicked with a pass to the ten but the receiver dropped it. That man Richardson picked up the loose ball and had clear sailing for another major. A bad snap ruined the convert try.

The start of the third quarter found UC deep in Meds territory and Patterson hit Jack McFarlane with a forward in the end zone to count again. Meds took the kick-off but lost the ball on a fumble on their 25. Goberis carried to the one and plunged over on the next play. The try for the extra point was blocked. Again Meds tried, this time a long pass which Cucin nabbed. There was a first down and a penalty on Meds gave UC the ball on Meds' five for the last play of the game. Wass got into the act, gathering in a touchdown pass and nobody cared when the convert kick was low.

The Red and White team was consistently good. Richardson and Brown stood out offensively and Danny Cucin sparkled on defence while striking for long gains too. For Meds, Wheeler was kicking well till he was hurt but it was no contest.

THE SCORE

Hockey Starts UC Edges Vic In Group Two

The intramural hockey season got off to an unimpressive but promising start yesterday with three games carded. The feature contest was in Group 2 when Jr. Vic and Jr. UC met in a noon-hour game. The Red and White overcame a two-goal deficit to edge Vic 3-2. Mason scored both goals for Vic, one early in the first period and the second early in the second frame. Then the UC six turned on the heat, Duff netting a pair to tie the count and Yakimoff getting the winner.

Both teams had plenty of chances in the first stanza but they seemed to lack the polish on their plays to put tthe puck in the net. Outside of Mason's unassisted goal at the 2-minute mark, play was even throughout the first. Seager, the Vic goaler, was able to keep the UC team off the scoresheet although he gave the sparse crowd several scares with his peculiar netminding style.

The second period was more spirited. At the 2-minute mark it was Mason again stealing the puck at the blue line and going in alone to score. Duff got UC back in the contest on a breakaway and at 11 minutes was given credit for one that dribbled in from a scramble in front of the nets. Finally at the 16-minute mark Yakimoff put the game on ice as he flipped a rebound past Seager.

There were a couple of other games carded. Pre-Meds and Jr. SPS battled to a 1-1 draw. Robertson from McDougall scored for the doctors and Campbell took a pass from Jamieson to count for Skule. The last game of the day found Vic III whipping UC III 4-1. Taylor had a pair for the Scarlet and Gold, helped by Shirer and Spencer with singletons. Joe Stepan got the lone UC tally.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

It was a dirty deal the football team pulled on the Athletic Association, winning the Yates Cup on the last game of the regular season. Practically on its own flesh and blood, it committed this offence—where would the football team be without the Athletic Association? There were Mr. Stevens, and generous old Mr. Loosemore, all waiting for a play-off with McGill, and the extra gate receipts that would result. Just think, they might have paid off the debt on the tarpaulin. Or even reduced the Athletic Fee (stop laughing, Dnieper).

Of course, this doesn't mean that anyone at Varsity would have wanted McGill to win. That would be disloyal. Down in the States, university staff get investigated by the Senate for disloyalty.

But those darn Blues won just the same, and there was no play-off. Well, the hockey team didn't really want to go down to Colorado this year anyway.

If the football season's ending without a play-off hurt the Athletic Association, take a look at what it's done to us. With a gap of three weeks now between the end of the football season and the start of the basketball schedule, Intercollegiate Sport has come to a standstill. Just a few short days ago we had no space; now we have nothing else but. If worst comes to worst, we might even have to start giving coverage to the hockey team.

However, any sports editor with half a clue has several ways of getting out of a situation like this. The easiest is to call a meeting of the Sports Staff. In this method, he runs a notice listing the names of everybody that has been seen near the sports desk over a period of at least three years, in the largest possible type, and requests their presence at a meeting at a stated date and time. This fills up an amazing amount of space.

A certain amount of foresight must be exercised in this sort of thing in order to get the most out of it. If, for example, a news famine of three days is expected, the astute sports editor calls the meeting for four days hence, and runs the announcement for three days. By this time there is lots of material, and reporters aren't needed so the few, stubborn souls that come to the meeting are sent away and don't come back until the old familiar notice appears again.

However, comes a time when even the most faithful sports staffer refuses to respond when the sports editor has a space to fill. These are the times when the reader is confronted with articles utterly unconnected with University life, such as columns on George Ratterman, or articles on Pete Karpuk's latest misdemeanor.

And then, if all else fails, we relent and start covering the hockey team. But if they leave us flat by winning the championship without a playoff too . . .

Varsity's Ed Brennan Out For Cage Season

Ed Brennan, captain of the Blue basketball team and all-star guard last year, will be lost to the Blues this season unless chronic leg injuries heal up very fast. Bothered by his shin splints and weak ankles all last season, Ed has found that they are worse rather than better this year. In addition, he has a knee ailment which he aggravated this fall playing soccer.

Brennan is in his final year at St. Mike's. Basketball coach Bob Masterson was not counting on him to come back when the season was over last year because Eddie, who comes from Larchmount, New York, had received his draft notice. However, he got a deferment, and fans have expected to see the pint-size (5' 8") guard's flashy play on the basketball courts for another year.

Eddie is taking another trip to the doctor this week to make sure, but is pretty well resigned to sitting the season out by now. His stocky build and hard play have made it hard for him to shake the shin-splints; they are pretty well a permanent condition.

Bill Wilson, left forward last year, also expects to sit out this season. Bill is having difficulty with his course, but since he is in II Premeds, he still has a few seasons to go.

EDDIE BRENNAN

Pitching Sportshoes

Three soccer games were on tap yesterday. The feature game brought together Knox and Dents and the men from Knox came away with a 3-0 decision. The scoring was packed into the first ten minutes when Mahoton counted twice and McKinley once and after that play was even and fast for the rest of the game. The other two contests were scoreless draws. Trinity A met Sr. SPS and Sr. Meds played Jr. SPS and they decided nothing.

The lone lacrosse game of the day saw Meds I edge SPS I 4-3. In volleyball, SPS V spotted St. Mike's C the first game, losing 15-5 but they roared back to take the set winning the last two 15-8 and 15-13.

OFFICERS NEEDED

During the twelve months ending July 30, Canada's regular Armed Forces — Navy, Army and Air Force — increased from 46,886 to 81,727, or about 75 percent.

The requirement for officers has correspondingly increased. This requirement is met in three ways:

1. The Canadian Services Colleges at RMC, Kingston and Royal Roads, B.C.
2. Short Service or permanent commissions for men directly from civilian life or from the ranks who have the necessary physical qualifications and junior matriculation or equivalent;
3. The university training plans.

In the university there is the University Naval Training Division (UNTD) for the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Officers Training Corps (COTC) for the Army, and the Reserve University Flights (RUF) for the RCAF.

Last year, in twenty-seven Canadian universities and colleges a total of 3,980 undergraduates were members of these units. This year, to match the expansion in the Armed Forces, still more university men are needed to take these courses and qualify as regular or reserve officers.

All undergraduates taking advantage of these officer training facilities receive pay for time spent in training, including full time employment with the pay of a Second Lieutenant for three or four months each summer. Undergraduates in their final year who are accepted for the regular forces can be commissioned with full pay and allowances of their rank and remain at the university to complete their year. On obtaining their degree, they will continue in the service without interruption. The cost of tuition and books for the final year will be paid by the service.

Today the threat of aggression has led Canada and the other free nations to build up the strength necessary to prevent aggression and preserve peace. Modern defence activities, new weapons, require special qualities of leadership and the kind of knowledge and skills which university men can provide.

You, as an undergraduate, can play your part in national defence while at the university by adding to your other qualifications the knowledge and experience needed in an officer. You can play your part in preserving freedom by preparing yourself to defend your country should the need arise.

The Vote-Race

Vote as you like, but vote, is the common altruistic cry of political parties in these days of an imminent election.

The question of "how you like" becomes a very important one, if you follow these instructions and determine to vote come hell or high water. For voting is a highly serious thing. It has been soundly advised that each man should vote as conscientiously as if his were to be the deciding vote in the election.

When the voter puts his "X" on the ballot, he has made a decision. How has he made this decision? He has decided I will vote this way, because if this party gets into power I will get the most out of it. Or, he has decided I will vote that way, because I agree with this party's principles.

The question of profit versus principle is an increasingly difficult one to decide. In the current electioneering, the campaigning has been more and more like a give-away program. Originally, only left-wing parties provided election platforms that sounded like Christmas gift lists. The idea appealed immensely to those who for various reasons had much to wish for. Mr. Jolliffe promised increased pensions and greater social security. The staid old Conservatives under Mr. Frost clambered onto the bandwagon with increased old age, war veterans' and widows' pensions. Next, Mr. Thomson promised a network of hospitals covering Ontario like a patchwork quilt.

Finally, the question of whether to vote on principle or on profit tended to drop out of the picture. The question left to decide is, which party can give me the most? And this, we maintain, is not healthy.

A second question that must be decided before the ballot can be X'ed is: Shall I vote for the man or for the party he stands for? Voting for the party means, again, voting on principle. Voting for the man may be something worse than principle, or it may be something better.

When it is no longer principle by which a party stands or falls, then the party with whose forgotten principles we would once have sympathized no longer has a valid claim on our vote.

Voting for the man instead of the party is not necessarily a desertion of principle. All parties now show a tinge of socialism. No matter which of the three main parties gets into office there will be no vast and vital change in our way of life. Today, there are few ridings in which it can be said, "A cow could get into this riding if it were Conservative." (We use "Conservative" only as an example, with no slur intended to the Progressive Conservative Party.)

The question becomes, then, shall we vote for the respectable but colorless man in the party with whose principles we agree, or shall we vote for the brilliant man in another party? With the opposition party playing an essential role in government, it is just as important to have a good opposition as it is to have a good government. The better the governors, the better the government.

When it comes to deciding which party deserves our vote, we are left wondering what to do. Shall we vote for principle or for what we, personally, can get out of it? Shall we vote for the man or for the party? Or shall we vote at all?

OUR READERS WRITE

Once More Meow

Editor, The Varsity,

Your Champus Cat of Thursday, Nov. 15, was excellent. I beg now a few lines of type in order to defend our little friend and I trust to shock Messrs. Buchanan and Baines with some simple language. This I feel is needed since C. C. was too subtle for them and because the absurd naivete of their mushy idealism obviously will not be pierced by anything less blunt.

I am not going to waste words explaining the meaning of all the Champus Cat had to say. Two facts should be sufficient to bring your correspondents' thinking on to a realistic and honest plane.

The first fact is historical. There has never been a time when any two nations or groups of nations, having turned themselves into armed camps, finished the little race anywhere but on a battlefield. Furthermore, the widespread opinion today (aided by mediums of mass propaganda like Colliers) that war between East and West is inevitable will do nothing but hasten the process.

The second fact is one which every student on the campus who has an honest friend in any one of the three services' training divisions should know.

There are only three reasons why 95% of our fellow graduates are in these schemes. All these reasons are practical and understandable ones. I am not throwing mud at any chap, who, because of a combination of any one of these reasons sees fit to spend his summers in uniform. I have spoken to many of them (good friends of mine, incidentally) and they all confirm what I have to say. I do not agree with their decision but I admire their honesty in not trying to hide their real reasons behind a smoke screen of fine phrases.

These are the three reasons:

(1) The Practical Reason: If there is another war I'm not going to be a sucker. I'm going to be ready for a commission with more money and a better berth than the other guy who waits. I'm not going to be ordered around; I'm going to do some of the ordering, and if possible from a safe place. Even if a war doesn't come I'm getting paid now, I have a summer job and I'm learning things about business, the management of men and modern machines which may come in handy.

It is those who think this way that the three services' "Career" ads are trying to catch.

(2) The Lazy Reason: Hell! I'm getting paid, I get free board and lodging and clothes. Better than that I don't have to worry about what I'm going to do tomorrow or what show I'm going to see. They tell me what to do and they bring the shows right here.

This is the big reason for the "line of least resistance" guys. The ones who would rather drill for an hour than sit down and concentrate on a good book.

(3) The Traditional Reason: This one is not important as the others. It lies in the bosoms of those who come from old stock, whose families have a tradition of one son going into the army. In these circles the military man has a certain air. It is the honorable, courageous, respected career and makes a big hit with the ladies.

It is these types that the O'Keefe's "Tradition Counts" ads stimulate.

You see, gentlemen, the reasons are very simple and quite obvious.

One last word, Mr. Baines. You ask for practical suggestions whereby "philosophical considerations" can solve world problems. Not only a suggestion by a practical step (in no matter how small a way) was taken at your own college on Monday night when the VCU voted that NFCUS should do all in its power to bring a group of Russian students to Canada. The door is nearly closed. Let us hope we got our foot in it in time.

John B. Findlay, IV. Vic.

P.S. As for the American Draft and the COTC, etc. Who won the last war anyway? Yes, yes, I know, the Americans.

decease of puncuation

in keeping with the current trend at the u of t towards every body understanding everybody else especially the russians and the cotc and even the snobs in honour english i the champus cat do hereby institute a public service namely that this whole column will be written without periods or commas or anything so that anybody who was brought up in a scientific background will have a chance to practice punctuation i will give you each a hint namely that the first period came after the word punctuation so here goes with the rest of this stanza from a well known poem of which the author im sure that you are all familiar with just by the very sound of it well here it is try to use one or two semicolons and try to guess who wrote it here it is with tongue in cheek and hand in glove an april full of emphic love thats all no it wasnt gmily dickinson perhaps you were fooled because she always wrote short verses and if you only know words like meiosis and kaleidoscope you might not know the word emphic except to see which reminds me my english teachers unless ive forgotten have never bothered themselves to come down to my level and tell me what meiosis and kaleidoscope mean well in case you guessed its eliot that was a good guess too especially before he turned into a silly religious fanatic and high anglican at that well thats enough poetry for now no it wasnt sir thomas more and so to finish off the lesson i went to the trouble of making a precis of this very article here it is i was able to cut it down to just seven words honour english is indeed a sacred course

Utterly Defamed

Editor, The Varsity:

After reading the alleged policy of The Varsity editors in The Varsity of Wednesday, November 14, then reading the cheap tripe published under the heading "Champus Cat" thereby successfully and utterly defaming the reputation and standing of that long-popular column, it is the sincere opinion of the undersigned that the compulsory subscription to The Varsity paid by all students in their incidental University fees should be cancelled at the conclusion of this academic year.

It is not only this rotten piece of writing that has aroused the ire of many on this campus, but the general tone of the paper which has suffered a severe and noticeable decline from the beginning of this year.

We object to the disappearance of the light, humorous satires of previous years. We object to the institution in their places of a vast collection of "news items" concerning things which are of little or no interest to the average undergrad such as the huge amount of space devoted to our own little "Russian problem", and the untidiness of the JCR (a place which the great majority of undergrads avoid under any circumstances). We most of all object to the universal and complete lack of co-operation with the different colleges, especially our own in the reporting of constituent assemblies, in dramatic reviews and in the news columns generally.

This is in no way directed personally against the new Editor of The Varsity who came very suddenly into her job and is surrounded by an ugly mess. We have great confidence in her ability and common sense and we are certain she can, and will do much to raise the level of our campus newspaper into the kind of Varsity we want to read, the kind of Varsity we have read in the past, the kind of Varsity we are glad to support financially.

STUDENTS CAN VOTE

Claim Law Says Yes Though Vote Boss Turns Thumb Down

Students living in residence at the University of Toronto will be able to vote tomorrow despite a ruling by the chief electoral officer of Ontario, Major Alec Lewis, to the effect that they would have no vote.

According to a subsection of part one of the 1951 Election Act, a person's residence is defined as "the place where a single person occupies a room or a part of a room or a part of a room as a regular lodger or to which he habitually returns, not having any other permanent lodging."

Said Kelso Roberts, Conservative candidate for St. Patrick's, in commenting on the regulation, "Students have the right to vote wherever they are if they are bona fide residents in the riding. Once the list has been made up and approved by all concerned, every person on the list has the right to vote and it cannot be taken away." Continuing he pointed out that a person can be challenged his right to vote but if he signs a declaration to the effect that he was in residence on the 6th of Oct. when the writ of election was declared he must be allowed to vote.

"Each student is expected to make every effort to exercise his franchise, that is, that he go to the poll tomorrow and cast his vote," was the unanimous statement of the political clubs on the campus, "and that all parties on the campus protest any further disenfranchisement of the students."

William Newcombe, the COF candidate for St. Patrick's riding pointed out that he situation was delicate. "The best solution as far as I am concerned," he said, "would be an arrangement such as the one the army uses in Korea. There, the soldiers vote for the riding they call home and since the university students are seldom at home more than a few weeks in the year, they should have this special category."

This is the first time that the students in residence at the university were to have a vote in an election, and a special section was written into the election act to do it.

The four co-eds shown helped cheer the Senior SPS football team to a 12-5 victory over Victoria on the back campus yesterday afternoon. This was the second appearance of the girls this year, but yesterday some forgot their "Skule" sweaters.

On Principle

Lit Approves Russian Tour Only One Dissenting Vote

In an almost unanimous vote last night, the University College and Literary Athletic Society approved the principle of Russian students visiting the Toronto campus. The one dissenting vote, 4th Year President George Brigden, stood up just as the chairman was announcing that the vote was unanimous.

The 39-1 decision was the result of a short discussion on the question in which no violent opposition was evidenced. The only person who spoke against the visit got a chance to make only two short speeches in between praises of the proposed plan.

"Some people say there is a danger that in four weeks the Russian students won't be able to get to know the Canadian counterparts," remarked Jack Robson, Grad. "However, this is a longer time than that taken by the Royal Tour, during which Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip are supposed to have got to know the whole Canadian people," he added.

Another member suggested that NFCUS should rush to support such a plan, "which would give the Soviet students a chance to rest from the onerous serfdom of their life in Russia."

"The fact that the Soviet students will probably be hand-picked propagandists should only make us more determined to invite them. Our society must be pretty weak if it fears 15 or 20 Russians", commented Third-Year President L. Nichols.

The motion which was passed was that NFCUS be requested to invite a group of 15 to 20 Russian students to make a three or four week tour of Canada, the tour to be held this year if at all possible.

The Lit also passed a motion suggesting that the short tour be followed by a one-year exchange of Soviet and Canadian students for purposes of study.

UC was the seventh college or faculty to vote on the proposed tour since the question was first posed to the individual groups. To date the vote by faculties is 5-2 in favor of the visit, with Vic, UC, Pharmacy, Trinity and Social Work supporting the plan, and Law and Meds against it. Engineering and Physio and Occupational Therapy will vote today. Other bodies will have to have a vote registered before next Tuesday night.

Raise Fees For Students? — McMaster

Hamilton (CUP)—Facing a deficit of $700 this year on financial operation, the Students' Council of McMaster University agreed to call a meeting of all students in order to vote on a $1.50 increase in student fees retroactive.

A quorum of at least 150 is required to pass the proposal. The council's appropriations which totalled $12,260 is almost $700 greater than actual revenue.

"Either the student fees must be raised," commented the treasurer Doug Holt, "or the council will have to dip into the revenue funds. That would be establishing a dangerous precedent," he said.

The increase would be collected after Christmas, and default of from writing exams or from payment would bar the students graduating.

Jazz and Solway Compete For Ball

It was decided at the open meeting of the UC Literary and Athletic Society last night that dress at the Arts Ball is to be optional despite Social Director Beube's comment that formal dress is an "educational process and an experience you shouldn't miss." Another suggestion was that tickets to the dance be sold by means of a roulette wheel setting a $1.00 minimum and a $3.00 maximum on the possible prices. In reply to an objection by Robson that this might run the dance into bankruptcy, George Brigden, Fourth Year president, suggested that collaboration with downtown gamblers might fix the machine to run profitably.

The dance, which is scheduled to take place January 25th, will feature Bert Niosi's orchestra. By a vote of 13-12 Ken Dean's Group of Dixielanders won out over the Solway String Quartet as an added attraction. A further suggestion moved by Marvin Siegal, First Year president, was also passed: "If the contract with Dean can be broken amicably, we should hire a small trio and with the extra money hire a professional entertainer." The dance is to be held in a "Monte Carlo" atmosphere. Further arrangements for decorations and expenses were referred to the Social Committee.

Athletic Director Muray Gaziuk emphasized the necessity of building up UC spirit. One of the suggestions in his report was that weekly reports of all athletic activities be written and distributed among all students. If we beat Trinity on Tuesday, he said, I hope to have the team introduced at the Red and White Night Wednesday and arrange a "sort of a pep rally."

Objections were also raised to the name of the Brading Trophy for Scotch-Canadian debating. Some Lit members feared that the name would only give free advertising to the brewery. "We might even get a Sani-Flush Trophy eventually," remarked Bert Bloom, IV UC. This motion was formerly defeated by the SAC, when it was brought up by the UC rep at the last Council meeting.

Whee!

High Capers highlight "Dentantics" 1951 production. A bubble dancing chorus line routine featuring a bevy of fresh beauties will spark the opening number. The show will be presented at Hart House Theatre, Saturday, November 23rd and 24th. Themes featured in this year's musical variety show number among them "A Streetcar Named Desire" sketch transformed into a "Death of a Streetcar" variation. The fate of the famous football player who happens on the campus will unfold in another number. Special machinery has been obtained to provide an unique effect for the chorus line which has never been attempted before in Hart House. Bubbles by the billions will flood the stage to provide a flimsy covering. Chompers Stompers, Dentsmen's orchestra will provide the music for the show. Dental Nurses and Hygienists are in the chorus line.

Mock Council Is Coming To Campus

Two weeks from today the first model security council to be held on any Canadian campus will take place at the University of Toronto under the segis of the United Nations Club.

At tomorrow's meeting of the U.N. Club in University College Women's Union, the procedure to be followed at the model security council meet will be outlined in detail. In addition to the regular discussion groups, the club will hear an address by Dean Trivett of Shanghai on life today inside Communist China. The Dean arrived here from Shanghai last Wednesday.

In order that students may be able to satisfy themselves on questions which bother them, Dean Trivett has consented to answer questions following the address. The U.N. Club invites all those who wish to further their understanding of the attitude of communist Chona towards the West to attend Thursday's meeting.

Weekend In Capital For IRC

Tomorrow afternoon a group of IRC members will leave Toronto via car and train to spend the week-end amid the government buildings in Ottawa. International Relations Club President Andy Watson described the purpose of the trip as an attempt "to see how the machinery governing Canada's foreign policy works and how her international relations are governed."

Scheduled on the trip are visits to the Privy Council, and the House of Commons and a tour through every department of the Department of External Affairs. The heads of each of these departments will address the group an dit is hoped also that Mr. Ecott Reid, (Acting Under Secretary of State), Brooke Claxton and St. Laurent will be able to see them.

According to Watson about thirty-five students are planning to go, and accommodation in Ottawa has been arranged for those who need it. He also hinted that a few parties have been planned which should fill up any spare moments over the week-end. A meeting is being held this afternoon at 4:00 p.m. in Cartwright Hall, St. Hilda's, to make final arrangements for the trip.

INTERNAL AFFAIRS

The 'National' in NFCUS

This article, on domestic achievements of the National Federation of Canadian University Students, is the second in a series on the national student body. The third article, on more recent national activities, will appear tomorrow.

In spite of the impression you might get on the Toronto campus, NFCUS does some work which hasn't got anything to do with Russian student, the International Union of Students, the Western Union of Students, or the Pan-American Union of Students.

Strang as it may seem, NFCUS was originally begun as an organization to function on the national, not the international, level, and it is still doing this. These national, or domestic, activities, are the subject of this article.

The first thing a student usually asks about the national body is "What do I get for my 20 cents?" This is a question which will often embarrass a NFCUS worker who has only been active for a few years and doesn't know the background. Since most of us have come to university, the organization has done very little which has affected our pocketbooks. (It has made some important investigations, however, and is at present at work on some significant projects which will be discussed in tomorrow's article.)

However, NFCUS has done a number of things which directly affect the vast majority of students. For students traveling home over Christmas for example, it has secured a reduction in railway fares; they only have to pay single-fare-and-a-quarter for the return journey. And one Canadian publishing house has agreed to allow minimum royalty rates on plays produced by NFCUS members.

Free tuition at another university is another item on the national body's program. Under the regional exchange program, honor students at one university can take their third year at a university in another region, provided they plan to return to their own campus for their degree. During the year away from home, the student is exempt from tuition and student council fees. There is also an exchange arranged between Canadian and American universities.

These exchange schemes are two ways in which NFCUS tries to encourage an interchange of ideas between the different parts of Canada and the United States. Another is a seminar for students from all over the country. So far this hasn't been successful; one was planned for two summers ago, but fell apart at the last minute due to lack of funds. However, McGill has been working since then on plans for a seminar expected to take place this coming summer.

Some things NFCUS has done have grown up and are on their own. Prominent amongst these are Canadian University Press, a press association to which all campus papers belong. NFCUS also organized the Inter-University Debating Union, to which every campus but Toronto belongs. We may soon belong, if the final report of last year's SAC Debates Commissioner is followed.

These are some of the projects NFCUS has completed in the past. Unfortunately the past few years have not been so full of solid accomplishments. Just what has been done, since the international activities have cast their shadow over the organization's original purpose, will be discussed in the next article.

Vic Pl't Questions Lectures

"Manhood, not scholarship, is [illegible] first aim of education", Don Armstrong said yesterday in connection with a debate to be held in Alumni Hall, Victoria College at 4 o'clock this afternoon. The topic before the house is "Academic [illegible] on the campus is overemphasized."

Don Armstrong and Dave Jackson, II Vic, will uphold the government, with Cynthia Olsen, UC and Ken Jarvis, IV UC representing the Opposition. This the second debate sponsored by Victoria College Debating Parliament this year.

In connection with the debate this afternoon Ken Jarvis said that, "We are born shackled by ignorance, but the kingdom of ideas is gained by scholarship."

His Partner in the debate, Cynthia Olsen added, "Unless we learn to swim in the sea of knowledge, we will starve on the island of opinion."

Dave Jackson, upholding the Government expressed the following opinion. "The great number of graduates our university is milling out, who bury themselves in some insignificant fields and are completely incapable of expressing any opinion on current social topics, are examples of the overemphasis of academics on our campus."

"Many forces thwart a student's education," Armstrong continued, "two of the most serious hindrances are examinations and specialization. Pressure of examinations continually pushes students to the cloistered library where he becomes a book worm and stealthily moves like a mouse from shelf to shelf."

Maltreat Koreans Is Claim

Mrs. Roscoe Rodd, wife of prominent Windsor lawyer, will speak to the International Relations Club at an open meeting to be held on Wed., Nov. 21, at 4:10 p.m. in Cartwright Hall in St. Hilda's College.

Mrs. Rodd will relate her experiences in Korea while chairman of a committee organized by the Women's International Democratic Federation to investigate into the treatment of the Korean civilians by the American soldiers. Her report caused quite a furore in the press and in high Government circles last summer. Mrs. Rodd has since travelled throughout Canada and the United States speaking to large assemblies.

Mrs. Rodd represented the Canadian Congress of Women at WIDF as chairman of a committee representing twelve countries. It is hoped by the IRC executive that the meeting will be one of the most provocative on the campus this year. A question and answer period will follow.

Andy Watson, IRC president, announced last night that final details of the Ottawa trip will be given at this meeting.

N. GENEER

Trial By Perjury

Reached amid the confusion of the Mining Building, N. Geneer, only twenty-four hours away from trial on charges of attempted murder, smiled confidently as he pottered away happily with one of the machines. "They'll never pen me on this," he said. "I'm just a victim of evidential circumstances. My lawyer says I have nothing to fear but the verdict. These dicks don't bother me, I got plenty of friends, too." Questioned on the charge, Geneer kept repeating that he was using honest engineering methods, and people shouldn't lose their heads over it.

The All-Varsity Persecutors announced that the Crown's case was open and shut. We have some characters as witnesses which will tie up the whole case. In a surprise statement he made it known that Gloria Mae Swansong would be present at the trial. Making an amazing recovery from the grievous wounds suffered in the explosion, Miss Swansong announced that although feeling far from her usual bouncing self, she would attend court to see that justice was done.

Nobel Nitcus Bloop, sen-styled explosives expert when interviewed at the Ex-Officers of the Dragoon Guards Club, said he hoped that British justice would be done but personally he would hang the cad, by gad. "More monarchy and less anarchy is what this country needs," he exclaimed.

Mr. Greiz I. Paulme, waiter at the Onion House Hotel, stopped briefly from his work of conveying brew to remark that people come and people go but this was the first time that he, personally had been asked what he had heard in the course of his years as a waiter. "Poisonally I think these blondes are all alike, so one gets blown-up there's more around so who's worrying, but I got to get the party at that table, he is a big ten cent tipper. Excuse me will yuh!"

Counsel for the defense indicated yesterday that they would rely on expert testimony to impute the whole charge and would call a few characters for witnesses as well. Subtle hints suggested that the expert that would testify might well be C. N. Starrs, Professor of Astrology, official Phophet to the University and a man of some nut in his profession. Visibly pained at having his academic privacy invaded, Prof. Starrs said, "My stars, a body can't even tell whether it's an earthquare in China or the Engineers by the size o' my graphs these days. In interpreting undulations nowadays it's not the wiggle wiggle that counts but the way that it wiggles," he explained.

Judge E. Lektrode quashed a motion yesterday to exclude women from the trial on the ground that it might be messy. Refusing to follow the notorious rule of Hurt House versus Farcity, he stated that "Middle Age would come all too soon and that he would oppose cleavage on the campus."

Nattering Over Nurse Nets UBC Kidnapping

Vancouver (CUP) — Betty's Date Clinic — "A night with a nurse". After a heavy week of studying prescribe a little TLC (tender loving care) expertly administered by a nurse. Phone CE 5142 and ask for Betty. Here's to higher morale and lower morals.

This sign, in red paint, is to be found on the bulletin board in the Engineering Building at the University of British Columbia. When it was reprinted in The Ubyssey recently with the comment: 'Come, come sciencemen — have you actually admitted that you need assistance in attracting the opposite sex?" the result was a kidnapping of the author of the column, Al Fotheringham, by members of the UBC Engineering Society.

But it was no small prank. Al Fotheringham, author of the date clinic article, entered a formal complaint against his kidnappers with the Vancouver police. He said that his money and coat were stolen from him and that he was left stranded in the bush near Vancouver at one o'clock in the morning.

Fotheringham said that five engineers spirited him away from a party he was attending and after a scuffle deposited him in a car. They threatened to put him on the boat to Victoria with a one-way ticket and no money.

In their haste to reach their destination, Fotheringham said, in a front page, banner headlined story, that they attracted a Vancouver police patrol car, which gave chase.

The patrol car caught up with the kidnappers and issued a speeding ticket. When he tried to get free from his captors, by saying that he was being taken against his will, the kidnappers told police that it was all a gag.

The car was allowed to proceed after a flask was confiscated.

Good Photography depends on NICKEL

Hundreds of everyday uses for Nickel have been developed by the Nickel industry through a planned program of research. Today a large share of Canada's Nickel production is being diverted from peacetime uses into channels for preparedness. So the Nickel mine facilities, greatly expanded over the past decade, are again being operated at peak capacity. There is actually more Nickel now being delivered by Canada to the free world than in any peacetime year.

In the drums used in drying photographic film, nickel alloys are used to give long wear and resistance to chemical corrosion.

In the tanks, trays and washers used in processing black and white or color film, nickel alloys give high resistance to corrosion by developing and fixing solutions.

Skule Discuss, Vote On Russian Visit Today

Drag Food But Come Says Prexy

A special open meeting of the Engineering Society will be held today to discuss the question of a student visit to Canada. Syd Wax, International Affairs Chairman for the National Federation of Canadian University Students will describe the workings of IAC and NFCUS, giving also a brief outline of the events which have necessitated a student decision on the Soviet visit. Joan Presant, Toronto NFCUS Chairman, will be on hand to answer questions.

All Skulemen present at the meeting will be given a ballot. Ron Turner, III SPS, External Affairs representative of the Engineering Society, will discuss some pros and cons for each question on the ballot before a vote is taken.

The meeting will be held at 1:15 p.m. in Room 22, Mining Building. "Lunches may be eaten during the meeting," Engineering Society president Doug Sherk said yesterday. "This question is the concern and responsibility of all SPS students, and the Engineering Society urges the full support of all Skulemen in reaching a decision," added Sherk.

Refrigerated Creation

One of the most dazzling and colorful shows ever to hit Toronto came last week in the form of the Ice Capades of 1952. With appeal for old and young alike this big ice extravaganza was able to fill the Maple Leaf Gardens in practically all of its six performances.

Topped by an up-to-date "refrigerated" version of Cinderella, the Ice Capades now seems to have adopted a permanent fixture in presenting fairy tales on ice. Cinderella is the third Walt Disney story to be used by the Capades. With Donna Atwood as Cinderella, and Bobby Specht as the Prince, the tale of the scullery maid who becomes a princess unfolded in truly quaint style.

The show this year, again featured the favorite and popular "Old Smoothies", Orrin Markhus and Irma Thomas, who have been with the Ice Capades for the past ten years. In their own distinctive way and backed by soft, sweet music they gracefully danced around their frosted dance floor.

The three comedy routines were good. Mimic, Joe Jackson Jr., a tramp with a trick-playing bicycle on ice stumbled through a great performance. The two Australian boys, the Maxwells, did a sensational act of dead-pan, slow-motion acrobatics on skates. Jackson and Lynam then combined to put on an unusual exhibition of ski-skating.

Two pert and talented female performers were also featured in this year's Capades. Trixie, a dynamic little blond, does the unbelievable in balancing and juggling while whirling over the ice. Then there is Patti Phillippi, a spectacular drum-majorette, with a talent for twirling a baton to the tune of modern jazz.

However there would be no show without the characteristic and colorful pageants such as Gypsy Gold (with Jeanne Sook and Ted Roman), Jingle Bells, Juke Box Jamboree, The State of the Union, and Minstrel Daze. The "Teddy Bears' Picnic" production, with its animated characters, was a disappointment and seemed to fall below the average in action and spirit.

A ballet on ice titled "Birds of a Feather" provided the expert teamwork of Donna Atwood and Bob Specht with an exciting, imaginative, and feather-full background. Costumed in long, white, flowing feathers a section of the Ice Capets (the chorus line) added a sophisticated touch to the production. Incidently, there were 112 of these stunning Ice-Capets in the whole '52 show.

If the Ice Capades, with its interesting creations and marvelous music, is an indication of what is to come in ice shows, then it will certainly be worthwhile seeing the Ice Follies (coming to the Gardens on January 28) and even next year's Capades when it slides around again.

French Play To Tour Colleges

"Les Plaideurs", by Jean Racine, will be presented tonight by University College in Hart House theatre.

The principal actors in the play are Clarence Parsons, Robert Finch, Hubert Fielden-Briggs, Helen Cox, Marion Hogarth, Robin Mathews, Valerie Fielden-Briggs and two small, badly house-trained French poodles.

Professor Robert Finch is the director of the play and other members of the production staff are Hubert Fielden-Briggs (costume and set designer) and John Soulsby (stage manager).

Les Plaideurs will go on tour after tonight's presentation in Hart House. It will be shown Thursday night at McMaster, and Friday and Saturday nights of the following week at the Universities of Montreal and Ottawa.

A synopsis in English will be given out before the performance here so that people who are rusty in their French will be able to follow the play without difficulty.

Tickets are still available at Hart House and in the U.C. rotunda.

By DAVID PEDDIE

Tonight in the Women's Union the U.C. Players Guild are staging two very old plays that are seldom seen but are read for some reason in the third year English Drama course. NOAH'S FLOOD is an old Mystery Play and was put on as part of religious celebrations. DR. FAUSTUS is by the famous or infamous Christopher Marlowe who was the fashionable playwright when Shakespeare came to London. FAUSTUS is one of his better plays and should prove to be exciting theatre-fare. The Players Guild are planning on presenting the Marlowe play on Hart House stage early in January.

Aside from this show on the Women's Union's tiny stage there seems to be no other theatrical offering this week. To the chagrin of all theatre-goers the Royal Alex is remaining empty from the end of this week when FLEDERMAUS leaves until Christmas. Hart House Theatre will be lit only by work lights next week until the BOY WITH A CART and A PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT opens on Friday.

One is inclined to give up all hope for a "Canadian Theatre". A few years ago the New Play Society was presenting a different play about every three weeks. Since they stole quietly back into the deeper recesses of the Royal Ontario Museum nothing like them has come along to equal them in any way.

Our only hope now lies with a new group—The Jupiter Theatre, who are starting modestly with only four plays this year. Perhaps if these are successful they will enlarge that number and we will again have a native Toronto Theatre.

The managers of the Jupiter Theatre are all connected with the theatre business. John Drainie (chairman), Lorne Greene, George Robertson, and Paul Kligman are radio actors and Len Peterson is a writer for radio.

The plays they have chosen for production this year all look interesting and are fortunately not concessions to the taste of the summer-theatre audience. They are not terribly high-brow but neither are they foolish farces that aren't even worth laughing at. GALILEO as a pageant play about the great scientist, portrayed with modern overtones by the modern German playwright Bertold Brecht. This play will start on Dec. 14th and will run for a week.

The plays to be presented after Christmas are a modern English farce, Dalton Trumbo's THE BIGGEST THIEF IN TOWN—Lister Sinclair's latest play SOCRATES and CRIME PASSIONEL by Jean Paul Sarte.

The unfortunate part of the whole venture is the fact that The Jupiter Theatre will be presenting their plays on the very tiny Museum Theatre stage. They will find their movements hampered in big shows like GALILEO and SOCRATES and that is a handicap, for actors cannot do their best when they are concentrating on not getting in someone else's way. Let's hope that they can overcome it to some extent and put on good shows.

Students Biggest Lack At Recital

Yesterday in Convocation Hall, Dr. Charles Peaker, organist, played a recital of unusual and varied interest before a regrettably small audience. An adequate profile of organ literature from the late seventeenth century to the present, the program took the listener through many forms and moods.

Particularly effective were the three Bach chorale-preludes Have Marcy Lord, Our Father, Which Art in Heaven, and Glory to God in the Highest. The first, full of Bach's nostalgic Christian passion; the second a taste of academic fortitude and the third, a lilting duet that might well be called 'mocking.' Dr. Peaker closed this program with a mighty rendition of the exacting Prelude and Fugue in G Minor by the contemporary French master, Marcel Dupre. This great work makes heavy demands upon any artist and Dr. Peaker proved that he has the answer to its technical requirements with marks to spare.

The one sad note of the recital was the regrettably poor attendance. Although attendance was better than at the average recital in these series, it certainly could still be increased. Perhaps the average person is a little too hungry at five o'clock to be bothered with such things, but more than likely there is an even greaeter need for musical food in the life of the average college student. There was plenty of it yesterday, and Dr. Peaker served it up well.

Explains Colombo Aim

Pat de Saram (Grad Studies) of Ceylon led the International Relations Club discussion group on the Colombo Plan yesterday. The Colombo Plan, she said, grew out of the desire of the Commonwealth nations to halt the Russian influence in Asia by opening up the resources of the East.

The main purpose of the Plan is to improve the standard of life of over 570 million people. The majority live in villages and depend for a livelihood on the land. But not enough land is being cultivated to support so many millions.

No Boozing Is Defended By Skulemen

Two unidentified Skulemen will defend total abstinence in a debate with the St. Joseph's College Debating Congress, "Resolved that a healthy attitude towards temperance is brought about through moderation and not through total abstinence." St. Joseph's College, as the hosts, will uphold the resolution. The Engineers will find themselves advocating total abstinence. Speakers for the affirmative are Mary Grieze, III St. Mike's, and Alice McGovern, III St. Mike's. The Skulemen prefer to remain anonymous.

The debate will be held in the St. Joseph's College Common Room at 8 o'clock tonight. The President of the St. Joseph's Congress, Anne McGinn, will be in the chair.

SKULEMEN DOWN VIC, 12-5

Coming Through

Pictured above is George Lewis who quartered the Senior Skule Squad this season. Lewis is shown as he broke through the Victoria line on one of his sneaks. Although Lewis led his team to a 12-5 victory over the first place Vic squad, the Engineers finished out the season in third place, one point behind UC who clinched the last playoff spot on Monday

Blue Soccerites Defeat Mac 2-0

The University of Toronto Intermediate Soccer Team completed their 1951-52 schedule by trouncing McMaster two goals to nothing when they journed to Hamilton on Friday. The record of the Baby Blues this season will take a lot out of successive teams hoping to equal the mark established — season completed without loss of a single game and with one lone goal against net-minder Hommy Andreson.

Playing with the confidence gained by a win over the Maurauders earlier in the week, the Blues opened the attack. For the opening ten minutes, the game had the appearance of an extremely one-sided affair, the Blues playing an extremely better brand of soccer, and playing with the wind in their favour. The Macmen tried desperately to hold off the advance of the threatening Blues' forward line, and Ken McDonald, in one of his efforts to clear, handled the ball in the penalty area.

Howie Ashbourne, who has played consistently and well all season, was elected to take the shot. He had the Mac net-minder beaten with a shot that passed through the right-hand corner of the net. The Blues were up 1-0, and McMaster sparked up, apparently determined to even the score. Despite several raids, the Blues' defense held their own, while several shots from the Marauders' forward line went wild. The half ended with mid-field play.

The second half opened with the Hamilton team playing like a team resolved on winning. This, however, did not last for any length of time, as the Blues' forward line was soon "haunting" the Marauders defense area. This attack spearheaded by left-winger Al Logan, paid good dividends. The Marauders defense crumbled, and fouled in the penalty area. Howie Ashbourne tried for his second but missed by inches as the ball grazed the right outside of the goal post.

The Blues kept the pressure on and Jim Treliving scooped the ball from a goal mouth scramble and aimed a "blast" directly to the goal-keeper. The ball rebounded back to Treliving who made no mistake this time.

The Maroon and Grey men tried desperately to get back in the game, but all to no avail, as the Baby Blues' defense led by Ted Kersey, was too much for them .Ed Bhatty turned in a stellar performance, while Ken McDonald and the Jones twins — Pete and Mike played well for McMaster.

The Intramural hockey schedule got underway at the Arena on Monday of this week and there are now three or four games each day. There are few spectators, but these are treated to good games free of charge. The above picture is from yesterday's St. M2ke's C-Meds IV tilt, which the latter won 4-1.

Blue Swimmers Hold Practices Need New Men

Now that the football season is over, the scene shifts to winter sports. One of these which seems to have been neglected by competitors this year is the intercollegiate swimming. For the past two weeks, the Blue swimmers have been holding practices in the Hart House pool every Monday and Wednesday night, but coach Cress McCatty has been disappointed by the lack of an enthusiastic turnout.

McCatty hopes to be able to have two teams, senior and intermediate, ready by the opening meet which will be on aJnuary 12 when Western visits the Hart House pool. So far only about twenty candidates have turned out for the teams, so that there are still openings for anyone who has any experience in water competition. Interested swimmers are urged to report to the coach at any of the regular practices, or leave their name in the Athletic Office.

Aside from the opening meet, this year's schedule includes two trips to Buffalo, and visits from Niagara, Rochester and Wayne Universities. The Intercollegiate meet will be held in Toronto on Feb. 27.

Fighting Engineer Squad Hands Scarlet and Gold First Defeat of Season

By BRUCE NORTH

The fighting Skulemen retained a little of their dignity yesterday afternon on the back campus as they defeated the previously unbeaten Victoria squad 12-5. Although the game meant nothing as far as final standings or playoff positions are concerned, the Engineers were obviously out for blood and as a result there were several near fights.

There were remarkably few fumbles for such a cold day. Victoria had a few regulars missing from the lineup but they didn't lie down, and fought the Skulemen every inch of the way.

Surprisingly enough the Vic boys scored their major via the forward pass. Quarterback Lorne Lodge faded back on his own 32 and heaved a long one that was deflected into the eager arms of Art Williams by a red faced Skuleman. Lodge then called a heady play, taking advantage of John Bond's well known end runs. Bond took the pitchout as usual but instead of running with it, he tossed the ball to George Hevenor over the goal line for a touchdown. Four Skule linemen broke through and blocked the attempted convert.

The Engineers came out for the second half like a Shanghai riot squad. Ella and Snider carried right down to the Vic one yard line on a series of end runs and off-tackle smashes. Snider took the ball and went off tackle again for the first Skule major. Prendergast missed the convert.

Early in the fourth quarter Don Kerr made a circus catch of Prendergast's pass from the Vic 32 and carried to the 10. But Godson stopped Ella on the next play and Goodfellow grounded a pass over the goal line. Prendergast stepped back and hoofed it over the dead ball line for a single point.

Late in the fourth quarter came the play that caused the hey rube. George Hevenor of Vic was kicking from his own 11-yard line when Hotchkiss broke through and blocked the ball with his nose. It bounded toward the sidelines but McPherson of Skule kicked it over the goal line and went in after it. He managed to reach the ball and the second he touched it the referee tooted his whistle. However immediately afterwards -he rolled away from the ball and Wooton of Victoria fell on it. The referee tooted again. The obvious question that arose was: whose ball was it? The ref ruled in favor of Skule and awarded them in TD.

Victoria loudly proclaimed the fact that they did not agree with the referee's ruling. In fact they even questioned the official's ancestry! In the meantime the Engineers were not idle. Pretty soon there was a shoving bee taking place in the midst of a group of players. However things finally cooled down and Prendergast kicked a questionable convert.

Philp, Pearson, Murray and Webb all played well on defence for Victoria. Vernon and Lewis were also good for Skue.

Gotcha!

Bob Ella, one of the stars of the Senior SPS backfield, is shown being brought down by a group of Vic tacklers after a nice run. Ella played his usual good game yesterday as his team defeated the Scarlet and Gold by a 12-5 score, and was instrumental in setting the first Skule major.

Pitching Sportshoes

The Intramural hockey schedule continued yesterday with three games on tap. In the opener St. Mike's "C" were defeated by Meds IV, 4-1. Led by Jones with two tallies, the Medsmen took a 2-0 lead in the first frame and coasted in. Venis and Coulas got singles for the winners while Millar was the marksman for the Irish.

St. Mike's "B" made out a little better than their big brothers as they edged SPS IV 7-6 in a hard fought battle. Duffy was top scorer turning in a hat trick for the Mikemen. Teammate Hunt added two more while Jerome and Keenan added one apiece. For the Skulemen, Elorado and McTavish scored twice with Hayman and Copper netting singles.

In the final hockey tilt, Law defeated Forestry "B", 3-2. The Lawyers took a 2-1 lead in the initial stanza and this was too much for the Woodsmen. Stevenson was the sparkplug of the winners as he netted two; and teammate Long added one. For the losers, Beatty and Tomkins each scored once.

There was only one game scheduled on the lacrosse scene, and in this Trinity "A" edged Meds II 5-4. After a scoreless first quarter, each team scored once in an even second stanza. Trinity took a one goal lead in the third and that was the game. Briant of the winners and Sproul of Meds each scored twice. Maybee, MacMillan and Williams were the other Trinity marksmen and Hobson and Dawson scored once each for the Medsmen.

There were two soccer games played at noon hour yesterday, and both ended up in a tie. UC fought to a 1-1 draw with Sr. Vic. Neither team scored in the first half and play was even in the second when both sides tallied once. Dalnoki was the Redmen scorer while Ashburn netted for Vic.

In the other soccer contest, Jr. SPS and Emmanuel played to a 2-2 tie, as each team scored once in each half. Wareham and Found were the Engineers' marksmen while Snowden and Logan tallied for Vic.

On the volleyball floor, Vic III had little trouble as they trounced St. Mike's "D" 15-3 and 15-4 in the lunch time encounter. Sr. UC also took two straight as they downed Sr. Vic 15-7 and 15-2. Meds I year took the opener from Forestry 15-6, but the Woodsmen came back to take the next two 15-5 and 15-13.

Meds II year came out on the right end of a 15-4, 15-8 score as they beat Pharmacy, while SPS III took St. Mike's "A" 15-3, 10-15, 15-3.

Mermaids Wanted For Water Ballet

The University of Toronto women's swimming club announced last night that they will be holding a water ballet in February of next year. Plans for the numbers are already underway and rehearsals will be starting soon.

Any mermaids on the campus are asked to contact their college or faculty swimming rep to obtain more information. Experience in this type of swimming is not necessary, and water talent of all kinds will be useful.

Cultural Calendar Crowded

Rah Rah Society Boosting Culture

The Blue and White Society plans a University Night at the Art Gallery on November 29. As Museum Night, to be held during the Winter term, will also further the cultural knowledge of Varsity students. The popular Christmas carol and yuletide variety show will mark the midpoint of Blue and White activity.

Mrs. G. Bagnani, Extension Directress of the Toronto Art Gallery, has announced that the Art Gallery Night will feature conducted tours of the Current Art Gallery exhibitions. The Royal Canadian Academy will display its annual show of oils. The Old World will be represented by the works of such famous artists as Renoir, Goya and Cezanne. These masterpieces will be on loan from the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

Two Italian films are scheduled for exclusive showing. The first portrays the celebrated ceiling of the Sistine Chapel in Rome painted by Michelangelo. The second will contain the Rome classical study with a description of the sculpture of the Villa Borghese.

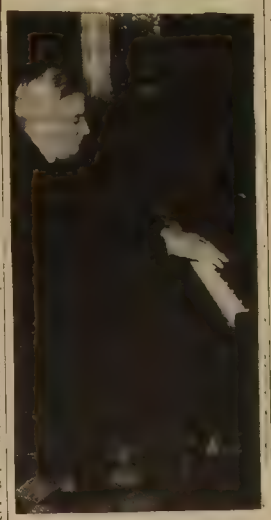
You will have the unusual opportunity of watching three artists painting portraits of one model. Each painter will use a different style of technique. Your questions and criticisms will be fully answered.

Near the artists will be found clay and sticks. Try your hand at plasticine modeling. Give your friends personally made gifts they'll remember.

Detective story fans will discover what may well be the puzzles of the year. A contest will be held to determine the titles of these modern day fantasies. If you pass such bizarre and difficult tests of their ingenuity you will find additional mystery in a picture puzzle contest. This is rumored to be even more fun that crosswords, so keep your eyes open. The prizes for these contests include valuable reproductions from the permanent collection of the Gallery plus sets of artistic Christmas cards.

Gill Plays Hit Poet's One Acters

A double bill of two Christopher Fry plays will begin Friday, November 30 at Hart House Theatre. They consist of "The Boy With the Cart" and "A Phoenix too Frequent." The performances begin at 8:30 each night.



This is the first time that "The Boy with the Cart" has been produced in Canada. While it is one of Fry's earlier plays, it contains all his charm and wit. The theme itself is religious. It revolves around an early Sussex saint — Cuthman, and his attempts to build the first church in that part of the country.

It is about the year 1000. However there is no attempt to replace the period. The dialogue is modern, as well as the costumes.

The second play "A Phoenix too Frequent" is a witty comedy. The entire play consists of only three parts.

The settings for both of these plays were designed by Jean Bannister. The information about these plays was supplied by the director Robert Gill.

Jesuit Author

Prolific author of best-sellers, playwright, director and composer, Daniel Lord, Jesuit priest from St. Louis, Mo., is shown at his piano in a moment of relaxation. Father Lord is in Toronto for the opening of his new play written especially for the Centenerary Year of the Sisters of St. Joseph.

Priest Playwright Has Opening Here

One of America's most prolific writers has never received a cent in royalties. His readers number in the millions but he owns neither a bank account nor an automobile. He is Daniel A. Lord, a Jesuit priest from St. Louis, Mo. Sunday night he arrived in Toronto from an extended lecture tour in the States. He will spend this coming week putting the finishing touches on his new play written in honour of the Centenary Year of the Sisters of St. Joseph. It will open the first part of next week.

The most remarkable fact about 60-year-old Father Lord is the incredible volume of best-selling works he produces. In the past 20 years he has written over 200 booklets, some 25 plays, 50 musical compositions, a dozen or more books, three murder mysteries and scores of children's story books.

In 1949 the famed Martyrs' Shrine Pageant made the whole of Canada sit up and take notice. Father Lord wrote the music, the dialogue, the explanatory reading and directed the whole show. This summer in Detroit he staged an elaborate show called "City of Freedom". It was sponsored by the University of Detroit and in addition to the faculty and student backing the city supported it. This latter pageant earned him the reputation of being "the first man to give Detroit a soul."

Although all this seems a full-time job, it is only a segment of Father Lord's gargantuan work schedule. He is National Director of two lay societies and editor of two widely-circulated magazines. In addition, he writes a full weekly column which is syndicated in Catholic newspapers throughout the U.S.A. and Canada and contributes a daily script to a 15-minute radio program. Periodically he goes to Hollywood to advise on films and a number of years ago he was asked by the movie-makers to draw up a morality code under which the Johnson Office (formerly Hays) operates. His constant travels on lecture tours caused a colleague to comment: "Nobody rides on trains more than Father Lord—except the engine driver".

U.C. Actors Presenting Dr. Faustus

Marlowe's Doctor Faustus and one of the earliest English miracle plays, Noah's Flood, will be presented tonight by the UC Players' Guild. The performance will begin "exactly" at eight o'clock at the Women's Union.

The bill is the most ambitious of the Guild's first term productions, and is especially designed to demonstrate the technical and dramatic advances made in the English theatre between the relatively primitive Noah and the considerably later Faustus. Professor Knox, professor in the Department of English at UC, will comment on the historical background of the miracle play cycle. After intermission, he will trace the development of the play-form up to the time of Marlowe and will then discuss DOCTOR FAUSTUS in particular. (The text edited by Professor Knox is the one in common use in the English courses at Toronto.)

The cast of DOCTOR FAUSTUS, headed by John Hampson in the title role and Willison Crichton as Mephistopholes, will be the largest ever assembled on the Union stage. "Although the cast is drawn from many courses within UC," said Maureen Irvine, president of the Guild, "the large number of people in English Language and Literature who are involved in these productions of sin and holiness tend to support the current view that Honour English is indeed a sacred course."

Wymilwood Piano Recital Opens Series

The annual series of Wymilwood Concerts gets under way again this Sunday, with a concert by the well-known pianist, Bela Boszormenyi-Nagi. Since his arrival in Canada from Hundary a few years ago, Boszormenyi-Nagi has given many recitals in this city, and has also made appearances as soloist with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

The program on Sunday will consist exclusively of sonatas by Beethoven. Four of them will be played: Op. 13 in C minor (Pathetique), Op. 110 in A flat, Op. 14 in G, and Op. 111 in C minor. The concert is in Wymilwood on Sunday, Nov. 25, at 9:00 p.m.

Very Little Sleep For Film Makers

The Film Society of the University of Toronto spent last weekend at Caledon Hills Farm. For two and a half days, except for the odd hour taken for sleep, twenty people talked, worked and lived film. Approximately three films and several sketches were made.

The purpose of the weekend was to discuss the film in general, and to give practical experience in the art of film-making. The group working on each individual film had a chance to tackle jobs they had not previously handled. Those who had not done camera work would specialize in that phase; others in directing, acting, lighting, and so on. The principle of handling the new fields and techniques was that those involved could afford to make mistakes on ventures handled by the Film Society, and thereby learn.

The opening session was spent in discussing the proposed films, with regard to time element, location possibilities, and participants. The main projects were a film on Caledon, a study of the "eternal triangle" done solely by hand movement, and an avant garde film done by a series of images.

The latter was directed by Michael Sanouillet, lecturer in the French Department of University College. He was quizzed on the meaning of the images and the over-all idea. "There is a mystery at the beginning of any art creation which, even if one is an intellectual, forces one to give up the intellect to create," he said. He had no idea before writing the script. "A truly good film is created like great poetry. The writer is almost in a trance; the script evolving, not from the intellectual process, but from sensation."

There was much discussion on this radical viewpoint, centering particularly on the possibility of separating sensation from intellect.

The director of the Celedon Hill Farm film was Warren Collins. He based his script on an impression given to him by "The Swan of Tuonele" by Sibelius. The film is the Society's weekend project for the farm itself.

There was a tremendous feeling of energy created by the students on the weekend. They did everything—standing out in the cold for hours, sitting on stone fences, cutting out paper dolls for animation. Nothing stopped the work. Fuses blew out, fingers were scratched by butcher knives, film was lost and found again, old scripts were thrown out and others improvised on the spur of an imaginative moment. And when midnight came, everyone was too exhilerated to go to bed, and top-notch documentary film were screened.

Freedom, Please

Censorship of opinion and freedom of expression have, in our opinion, always been incompatible. Yet, the Parliamentary Committee on Radio seems to be considering some sort of broadcasting restrictions.

The CBC policy in the past acording to its Chairman, A. Davidson Dunton, has been "to try to see that all viewpoints which a reasonable number of Canadians wish to hear have an opportunity on the air". And this is quite right. Any attempt by the CBC to decide which opinion was good and which was bad would be a form of totalitarianism.

For that reason, Mr. Dunton suggested that Parliament, if it seems necessary, lay down a clear ruling as to what opinions may not go on the air. But surely a policy of censorship, which would be totalitarian coming from the CBC, would be a great stride towards dictatorship on the part of Parliament.

Take Hoyle's lectures as an example of what some people think ought to be censored. As a scientist, he gave a series of lectures on cosmology, entitled "The Nature of the Universe".

Yet, a letter to the editor, printed on this page, "Facts for CBC" states that Christianity the revealed word of God Almighty is not to be questioned because it is a certainty. Hoyle is guilty of blasphemy if his opinions are contrary to Christianity. The author, Mr. Gonzales, does not define Christianity nor explain how it is to be interpreted.

While he states that products of the human mind are subject to disputation, science in its astronomical and theoretical aspects would seem to be excluded from discussion. Possibly Mr. Gonzalez did not hear that broadcast in which Hoyle explicitly stated that the immaterial and spiritual world was out of the range of scientific knowledge. That the material world was the field for scientific exploration. Nonetheless, he would ban Hoyle.

Dr. B. K. Sandwell, in this week's issue of "Saturday Night" has continued his tirade against the CBC. On quite different grounds than Mr. Gonzales he comes to the same conclusion — censorship. For him "the questions of whether there is a Creator and whether the life of the individual ceases after death are not scientific questions; these are not matters of knowledge, they are matters of faith". Very much the same things as Hoyle said, but Sandwell sides with censorship!

In the case of both Sandwell and Gonzalez, we are confronted with a desire to limit free speech without quite knowing how. While it is very easy to make laws saying that atheism should be banned from radio networks, the interpretation would be next to impossible. Hoyle speaking about science and Russell speaking as a philosopher on "Living in an Atomic Age" were surely not attacking religion.

Sensitive souls can see signs of irreligion in almost everything — if they put their minds to it. Catholics would ban Protestants for ther blasphemy and vice versa — if they were allowed to.

But more than the impracticability of censorship laws, is their fundamental opposition to our belief in the right of important views to be heard. Democratic societies do not shield their members from opinions, rather they expose new ideas for consideration. That is, if democracy is democracy.

Trial Or Error ?

This year The Varsity intends to continue one of its best traditions, that of publishing a Literary Issue. We say "intends" because, of course, whether this will be possible or not depends on the quality of the material submitted.

There are a lot of cynics around the university who claim that the only creative work university students are capable of is confined to decorative inscriptions painted on college walls. Even with such a wide canvas, we hope that there are some whose abilities rise above this fly-by-night kind of exhibitionism.

Then there are the quantitative optimists who, at the slightest provocation, shriek "Surely in a university of 11,000 there must be someone who can write". On our part, we reject such pseudo theories of probability.

Rather, we are offering an opportunity for the creative instincts of this university to manifest themselves. The Varsity gives prizes for the best entries in serious verse, light verse, short stories, essays (topic to be decided by the writer) and photographs. Here, then, is one of a limited number of places in the university (and elsewhere for that matter) where original work can be published. Even better, a circulation of 11,000 is ensured.

The deadline for all material is January 10. The days of grace until then will give the undergraduate a chance to show his creative instincts.

We believe in trial by jury. We believe in the right of the accused to defend himself. And in this case, the defence of the undergraduate will consist of a manuscript, typewritten at 60 spaces on one side of the paper, submited to The Varsity editorial office.

Judges of the cultural state of the university will be announced later.

OUR READERS WRITE

Facts For CBC

Editor, The Varsity:

Your CBC editorial was a masterpiece of wishy-washy muddle-headedness for you completely missed the point and went on ranting for a whole wide column on "Differences of Opinion" and "all points of view" and "narrowness" or some such.

The real point is what is Christianity and what does it claim to be? It seems to have slipped your mind altogether that Christianity does not claim, has never claimed and will never claim to be human opinion. This is fundamental if you don't mind. Quite fundamental. Christianity claims to be the revealed word of God Almighty himself and the word of Almighty God is not subject to review or disputation by Lord Russell, Pope Pius, or the Moderator of the United Church.

Argue if you will about the claim of Christianity to be divine but don't argue that Christians should submit to entering what they consider to be the opinions of the Almighty God on equal terms in a free for all CBC quiz show with the opinions of Lord Russell. Lord Russell is undoubtedly a first class brain and has come on fairly well on his own steam in trying to find a solution to the whys and wherefores of existence but I am not willing, and no christian is willing, to grant that Lord Russell's steam is probably equivalent to the steam of Our Lord.

What you are asking is either the Christian be dishonest and pretend that God and Lord Russell be dishonest and that both are possibly equally liable to error, which is absurd or that Christians be not really Christians at all but quite sceptical and "open-minded" and ready to be Mohammedans or Shintoists tomorrow and perhaps Buddhists the day after.

It seems to be extraordinarily difficult to get across to non-Christians the fact that we believe in Christianity and that belief is not to be subject to revision. Even the word "belief" seems to carry in this age some sort of qualification implying uncertainty. But we are not uncertain .

I will grant you that politics, philosophy, artistic criticism and other products of the human mind are subject and always will be subject, as far as we can foresee, to disputation and argument and the possibility of revision remains as new theories arise and old ones find themselves challenged.

Surely if there is a God and He is the author of Christianity then Christianity is not subject to the opinion of Mr. Hoyle? Not only under these circumstances is it not subject, but the opinion of Mr. Hoyle, if contrary to the word of God, is blasphemy which is a serious business, like murder only more so.

The argument then is: is Christianity divine? We who are Christians know it is and cannot be expected to grant that it is subject to anyone's opinion. Surely then we cannot be expected to permit our taxes to be used to disseminate blasphemy?

The Christian position will, I suppose, be called narrowminded by unthinking people, but surely it is not narrowminded to assert fact and deny the controversy is either intelligent or useful? No one calls anyone narrowminded if they assert that Napoleon lived between 1750 and 1850 and not circa 875. No one says that it is bigoted to state in uncompromising terms that Convocation Hall is nearer to Simcoe Hall than to Trinity College. What is more certain than that which God who is the Author of Truth has declared to be so?

You know there are an enormous number of people whose knowledge of Christianity has not kept pace with the development of their intellect in other fields but has been allowed to stagnate at the 7 or 8-year-old level (which is the last time they were dragged to Sunday School). From time to time they have fortified this stagnated childish knowledge with the superstitions of the irreligious pretending to be Orthodox Christianity and as adults, they emerge with a picture of Christianity that is, to say the least, ludicrous. Then they turn around and make absurd pronouncements about the Christian religion and expect Christians to sit calmly by and permit their blasphemies, albeit ignorant blasphemies, to be aired from the position of eminence that they have attained in other fields. Furthermore they expect Christians to pay them for it!

Christianity matters, you know. It is not only an abstruse amusing subject for discussion at ten time like the latest movie or the Conductor of the Concerts Symphoniques.

Advice To Vic Tads

Editor, The Varsity:

A word of advice to eight patriotic Victorians, unable to sleep nights due to the plight of an "utterly defamed" Varsity—back to your teething rings!

I notice that you deplore a pitiable decline in the quality of campus reporting; gone are the old days, the happy times, the hours when you and I were young —who's kidding whom? I notice that six of you have been reading The Varsity for all of two and a half terms, while the other two have all of two months of serious perusal to their credit. What do you know about the "light, humorous satire of previous years"? What is your criterion of shedding tears for a Varsity decline, the "Canadian High News" or the "Bobbsey Twins"? Come off it, kiddies; you haven't the slightest idea about the "good old days" at Varsity so why waste your breath?

You are anxious about the increase in news reporting in The Varsity. I have always thought that news was customary in a newspaper. The news doesn't interest us you say; we want to hear about Victoria, not about the nasty old Russians. I hope that you don't wish one day that you had heard more about Russia in The Varsity, and less in a set of indoctrination lectures. Wake up lads, youth means business; Don't you read Time?

Finally, you dear little tads, you resent the biased attitude of The Varsity to the dear old Vic Assembly, not to those wonderful campus dramatic efforts. Has it ever occurred to you, on your own grounds (the infallibility of the "average undergraduate"), that the coverage of these events might be adequate? Has it ever dawned on you, dear children, that there are those who don't give a damn for the childish prating of the VCU? Have you ever thought, when a critic pans a campus show, that he might be right? In short, you sweet tads, have you ever thought about anything—ever?

False Connection

Editor, The Varsity:

I understand that a letter signed by my name as chairman of the South York CCYM has been sent to students on the voters' list saying that I support Mr. Salsberg, the Communist candidate in St. Andrew's riding.

The truth is that I am not a member of the Ontario CCF nor am I chairman of the South York CCYM, as no such organization exists. With many of the statements in the letter I am in complete disagreement.

As anyone who knows me knows, all my political actions have been and will be directed to helping the CCF.

I very much regret that I have been misrepresented.

Engineers, Nursing, P&OT All Approve Russian Visits

Engineering, Physical and Occupational Therapy, and Nursing have voted in favor of the principle of a visit of Russian students to Canadian Universities. All three stated a preference for an exchange of student years rather than short term visits.

By a narrow margin, the Engineers supported the principle that Russian students should be invited to visit Canadian universities in an open meeting held yesterday afternon by the Engineering Society. The final vote was 39 to 33 in favor of the principle. All 39 Skulemen who voted for the visit also felt that the National Federation of Canadian University Students should organize the exchange.

On the question of what form the visit to Canada should take, the engineers showed a preference for a student exchange over an academic year. They also felt that there should be a visit of Russian students to Canada even if a return visit was not possible.

Physical and Occupational Therapy undergrads, by a vote of 64 to 7, ratified the inviting of 20 Russian students to Canada. The question of whether this invitation should be extended this school year or next was resolved by a vote of 44-7 in favour of next year.

Another motion that a certain number of Russian students be invited to the Toronto campus on an exchange plan of one year was moved by Denise Jonston and ratified 59-8.

Molly Bark, II POT, questioned whether a hand-picked delegation would gain anything from the trip, adding that "The university students are at a very impressionable age, and as the guests are trained to preach communism, it is likely that we will fall for it." Sue Stansbury stated that this didn't matter and no harm will come to us as there are already so many (communist) spies in the country.

SAC Rep, Shirley Bratt, felt that if we don't convince the Russians of our way of life (a point brought out by External Affairs rep Joan Pearson) we may at least convince ourselves . . . which is more important.

The Nursing undergraduate association voted on Tuesday night in favor of the principle of the Russian visit. A motion was also passed stating that the University of Toronto should undertake to bring Russian students to this campus even if NFCUS is unwilling to handle the exchange.

Ann Cowan, IV Nursing, said that the value of a Russian visit would be in fighting student apathy on this side of the world even though the Russians might not be able to report favorably on Canadians in Russia.

The meeting also decided that because of the shortage of time this year, the visit should take place in 1952-53 and should preferably be of a year's duration.

West Pans Russian Visit Swap

The University of Saskatchewan unanimously defeated the principle of Soviet students visiting Canada at a meeting of its student council last week.

The Council voted 23-0 in support of the motion that "the Students Representative Council of the University of Saskatchewan ratifies the NFCUS decision not to invite a group of Russian students to visit Canada on an exchange basis at the present time."

The only opponent of the motion was Nick Chwelos, leader of the Karl Marx (Communist) Club of the campus, who spoke for twenty minutes. Although he was not a member of the student council, Chwelos was allowed to speak to provide some opposition for the motion.

Freed On Murder Attempt, Geneer Guilty Of Assault

N. Geneer was acquitted last night in a Varsity mock court of charges of attempted murder and conspiracy to defame the good name of the University. On two other counts of assault causing grievous bodily harm and causing malicious damage the All-Varsity jury found the accused guilty and assessed damages.

His honor Judge Mills recommended that the five dollars awarded for injury be spent in taking out accused to patch up the fractured romance. In awarding damages to the extent of one case of beer, the Jury said this should be less the deposit on the bottles. Judge Mills said in adjourning the court that it was a commendable institution and should be continued.

Gloria Mae Swansong, chief witness of the prosecution, was so weak from her injuries sustained Oct. 27 that she requested permission to be seated while she gave her testimony. She revealed that Geneer had mentioned "blowing her up with the Skule cannon."

Gloria Mae could not identify who threw the bomb, although at one time she declared it was Geneer.

Geneer, the defendant, denied that he threatened Miss Swansong. "You'll get the works", referred only to returning parts of a broken clock, he explained. Geneer admitted that he was practising mining in front of University College at the time of the explosion but explained he was a "little afloat of my own" at the time.

The All-Varsity prosecutors, Rosen and Krever of the Varsity School of Law summed up their case calling for conviction on all counts. They alleged the testimony of Bloop and Griez I. Paulme showed conclusively that the accused had threatened a blonde and had thrown the bomb on the day in question.

Defence counsel, Trivett and Giraudy of the School of Law, refuted the charge of the prosecution showing that the blonde threatened was unidentified and that he had in fact no feeling toward Miss Swansong and therefore the vital element of intent was lacking and at best the incident could be described as an accident.

Colonel Nifcus Bloop testified that he had seen Geneer "bound on some mischief." Then there was an explosion which "stripped the trees bare," he continued. Bloop recommended that the accused be shot.

World Explorer Is Skule Guest

The traditional Skule Auction is to be held soon, in front of the Skule Building, his auction is held every year, about a week before the Skule Dinner. Among the articles put under the hammer last year were Lady Godiva, the dome on the Medical Building, and an old toilet seat, sold as a picture frame. It is not yet decided to which charity the proceeds of the auction will be given.

The guest speaker at the Skule Dinner will be Mr. Hans Lundberg, head of Lundberg Explorations Ltd. His topic will be, "World Explorations". Mr. Lundberg is a well-known traveller, who has searched for metal ores in many parts of the world. He is responsible for the discovery of two of the largest iron ore deposits in the world—one in Sweden and one in Labrador.

The dinner will be in the Great Hall at Hart House, on December 5, at 7:30. It will include scholarship presentations, and will be followed by a stag party. Tickets for both the dinner and the stag will be $2.25 each, for the dinner alone, $1.75, and for the stag alone, 75c. Altogether, there are 275 tickets aavilable, which have been on sale for the last two days. It is not decided yet whether or not women will be allowed to attend the dinner, but the Engineering Society are working to let them come.

MASTHEAD MEETING

The regular masthead meeting will be held at 5 p.m. today in the editorial office This will be an important meeting. All masthead members are expected to attend.

Hart House Art

Skeletons And Macabre Scenes

By HAROLD NELSON

There is on display at Hart House art galleries a series of paintings by a young Canadian artist which he hopes that many people will not like. Most of the paintings show skeletons in macabre scenes.

A positive, aggressive statement on a situation existing in society now, is the way Aba Bayefsky described this series of paintings called "recruiting posters."

An an official war artist with the RCAF he went to Belsen Concentration Camp where he was more moved than he said he had ever been before or since. He felt at that time that while the uniform and glamor were nice, the war and its after-effects, as shown by Belsen were not.

After the war he returned to Europe where he painted a series of pictures in the Italian D.P. Camps.

Bayefsky feels that this period of six years gave him enough time to think about the direction he should take as an artist. Before the war he had been satisfied to paint still life and "things that would look nice above a mantel piece." Now he felt that he must make a conscious effort to make a stand as an artist and as a human being.

The result was the first painting in his recruiting poster series. "See the World" has a skeleton standing in a scene which the artist described as meaning "DPs, despair, poverty and hunger." Another painting is entitled "The Officers' Mess," containing two skeletons nonchalantly talking. Bayefsky said about this painting that it represented two unconcerned aspects of destruction—"there are an awful lot of foolish minds wearing an officer's cap." By this he explained that he was not saying that all officers are bad and destructive (he was a former officer in the RCAF), but that there are many activities on the professional level which are not meant to be other than destructive.

Many people tend to ignore what is going on in the world today, Bayefsky said and added that he hoped that there would be some controversy resulting from these paintings. "All paintings should be questioned," he said. "The very fact that they are hung in a gallery means that they are to be questioned." He advised university students to question very vigorously what they see in art.

Mr. Bayefsky

As for the title of the series "Recruiting Posters", Bayefsky said that he worked on the premise that the posters are ridiculous, containing such falsehoods as the services being a wonderful life. He compared this to feeding the turkey until it is plump and then chopping off his neck.

Hart House Art Gallery was described by the artist as being one of the few, if not the only, gallery in Toronto where pictures can be shown without considering the sales percentage. Some of the other painters in the city, he said, were barred from going into this realm although they were as anti-war as he is. He felt that art and oneself cannot be divorced.

Now Bayefsky is making a decision whether he has expressed himself as he intended the paintings to be. This is the first time that the paintings have been hung together as a series since Bayefsky finished the last of his "Recruiting Posters." The group will be on display until Nov. 25 in Hart House Art Gallery.

MANDATES

Money Savers

This article, the third in a series on the National Federation of Canadian Federation of Canadian University Students, is on the work presently being done by the local NFCUS committees.

NFCUS, as a national organization, still depends almost exclusively on the work of the local committees at the individual universities. This year a permanent secretariat was set up, but the one member on its staff has his hands full with the correspondence that such a wide-spread body necessitates. Therefore when NFCUS decides it wants to carry out a project, it assigns it to a member university.

At its annual conference in London, last September, NFCUS handed out a number of these assignments, or mandates, to its member universities. Toronto received three, as the biggest member; others received one or two.

Prominent among the Toronto mandates is the International Activities Commission, which is in charge of all the relations of the Canadian national student body with students in other countries. This is headed by SAC President Syd Wax; the other members of the Commission attend the Universities of Manitoba and New Brunswick.

Another project, which Toronto is working on, but which has not received the publicity (or notoriety) of the TAC, is a university information booklet for the use of high school students.

This brief will include information on living conditions, general tuition and text costs, and the opportunities for bursaries and scholarships at all universities and colleges in Ontario. The project is being restricted to this province for the time being, until it proves successful.

The all-important matter of university fees is being investigated under another mandate to the University of British Columbia. Fruits of the western investigation are already appearing on the Toronto campus, as an SAC-sponsored investigation into the need for last summer's fee rise goes under way.

And to save the student more money, NFCUS is trying to get the exemption of university fees from the income tax of both him and his parents, a power that lies within the discretionary powers of the Finance Minister exclusively. It is also trying to get students exemption from unemployment insurance.

For student actors, McMaster is investigating the possibility of reduced royalties on plays produced on member campi. Such an arrangement has already been worked out with one Canadian publishing house; now NFCUS hopes to extend it to others.

The national office is taking over a few projects which will not stand a great deal of investigation. Among these is a travel bureau service. where students travelling abroad can book passage at a reduced rate. The national office will also act as a clearing house for information on the student council of the various Canadian universities; their council set-up, handbooks, financial and athletic positions, and other relative items.

These are only some of the projects Canada's national student body is working on. However, NFCUS has had a number of other projects in the past, which never have seemed to come into practice. A mandate is only good as its implementation. What effect the present mandates will have depends largely on the support they receive from the student body. But support only comes with information. Maybe what NFCUS needs is a good project on publicity.

St. Joe's Beat Abstinence

An opposition from engineering was defeated in a debate at St. Joseph's College last night on the resolution that "A healthy attitude towards temperance is achieved through moderation and not through total abstinence." The two engineers were supporting total abstinence.

The first speaker for the opposition, Geoffery Hyde, IV SPS, asked the house if anyone there had ever had one-half a love affair. He said that there was no such thing. Moderation he felt involved some of everything. The question cannot be discussed regarding eating or breathing. He said that it was a question of degree and of time. He posed the questions of whether drinking was moderate, was any kind of drinking moderate, and was it moderate in a young child of 21 years.

Hyde felt that moderation is open to abuse, contending that the name itself is abused. He said that abstinence is personal, on a personal level and is the embodiment of temperance itself.

Moderate drink was described by Mary Grieve, first speaker for the government as a good thing, since by its utility and pleasure it does an immense deal of good. She claimed that a small quantity produced only a quickening in the circulation and a temporary increase in energy.

She felt that a person did not have the right to say that he should abstain from something which was of positive use to his person.

The second speaker for the Government, Alice McGovern, IV St. Joseph's, admitted that she was an alcoholic and that she was speaking from experience. She said that she believed the entire house with the exception of the faculty on the opposition, could speak from experience, not disregarding some very temperate engineers. Many years ago, she recalled seeing an engineer drinking moderately.

She did not feel that location determined moderation as "one can have a snort anywhere: in the bathroom, attic, or the basement." She then invited the house to stand by the government and adjourn to the KCR afterwards. She had a snort before stepping down.

"No bargain with the devil" was the stand taken by the second speaker for the opposition, Stan Sefton, who felt that there could be no middle of the road policy. He advised any young people present who felt they needed a shot in order to become interested in the other sex that it was not a drink that they needed.

Physots Outline SHARE Donation

"SHARE (Student Help for Asian Relief and Education), the campaign planned by ISS this year, will be directed toward helping Indonesia," said President Jean Sheppard at the Physical and Occupational Therapy Undergrad meeting last night.

Of the 150 million population, only ten thousand are students, Miss Sheppard added, describing the poverty of the country. "While our contributions of food, clothing, medical supplies and books will not be a cure, they will be a help in our international relations," she said.

"The group directing SHARE have asked us not to use SHARE for advertising purposes in money raising schemes." Miss Sheppard went on to say, explaining that the emphasis in raising the $11,000 campus objective would be on personal donation, not on benefit performances sponsored under that name.

A motion was passed by the undergrad association to add 50 cents to the price of the At-Home tickets and supply each escort with a boutonniere. The At-Home is to be held during the week of the SHARE campaign, the week of January 15.

When questioned from the floor as to the validity of this compulsory donation, Miss Sheppard stated that them otion has been passed by the undergraduates and that she considered the 72 members present a fair representation of the 256 students enrolled in the physical and occupational therapy. "The others should come to the meetings."

SCIENCE NOTES

Hypnotizing—A Fine Art

By PHILIP M. ALDERMAN

Silence falls over the crowded classroom as the Head of the Department enters. He mounts the podium. The flutter of note-paper is heard and the Professor begins to speak. Suddenly a frown crosses his face, and with a wild cry he inverts the customary jug of ice-water over his head, screams a dismissal to the class, and pads out of the room on his hands. Should this occur in your class some morning don't be perplexed—it's probably only the result of a post-hypnotic suggestion given to the Professor after the Psuedo-Scientific Society Supper the previous evening.

Such potential action-patterns are easily implanted in the mind of a suggestible person when in a deep state of hypnosis. This condition with all its phenomena may be explained by assuming the existence of a basic division of the mind into two parts — conscious and subconscious — each with its own peculiar characteristics. In such a state, when the conscious mind (which controls, decides, and inhibits) has been lulled to sleep we can directly contact the subconscious, which is highly suggestible and which has pigeon-holed every impression and memory ever experienced. This fanciful theory may have little basis in fact, but serves very well to explain what is observed.

Thus a hypnotised girl of twenty-one will glibly rattle off what she ate for breakfast on the morning of her fifth birthday and the day of the week on which it fell. When this latter point has been checked (for me a laborious procedure!) she will be found to be right. To my mind this indicates the validity of her other remarks.

Not everyone is capable of being induced into this state of hypnosis; there are two prerequisites: willingness and susceptibility. In by own experience the number of people capable of being hypnotized is small, and no unwilling person can ever be forced into this condition of hypersuggestibility.

The question is often asked whether a person under hypnosis will perform acts contrary to their everyday moral judgement. The answer can be yes, depending upon the interpretation of the actions in question. Thus one may say that such immoral actions were desired subconsciously but supressed by the conscious mind and under hypnosis this inhibition is removed. Another question concerns the likelihood of not being able to awaken a person from the hynotic trance. This difficulty rarely arises, but should it occur, the subject will gradually pass into normal slumber from which he will naturally wake up in a few hours.

As is well known a hypnotized person will do almost anything suggested to him. Further, he will easily recall anything which he has even known or done in the past. These phenomena are interesting enough, but much more fascinating are the results of suggestions given to the hypnotised subject for execution after he has been awakened. For example, I have suggested that a person on awakening will not apprehend the presence of a particular friend "because the friend has left the room for ten minutes". When he woke up he asked for his friend (who was standing before him) and was content with the explanation that his chum had left. No amount of jumping up and down, talking, tugging at his clothes, poking or calling made the slightest impression. After exactly ten minutes had elapsed the subject was suddenly aware of his friend and asked where he had been. The subject was told what had occurred and was as amazed as his friend had been frightened. Another post-hypnotic suggestion is to tell the hypnotized subject that, at any time in the future after he wakes up, three snaps of one's finger in front of his face will immediately cause him to go to the nearest chair and fall into the deep trance in which he presently finds himself. This works beautifully and is indeed impressive, but for better or worse, it has never been effective more than one day. After that time the signal is ignored and questioned.

An important point seems to be the depth of the hypnotic state achieved by the subject. The above effects will occur only if the subject, by virtue of his own suggestibility or the skill of the operator, has been adequately relieved of his conscious mind. If distractions intervene, or if the subject is not particularly susceptible, only a relatively light state of hypnosis can be achieved. The subject then will be only slightly amendable to the will of the operator.

Anyone may successfully hypnotise providing that he holds the confidence of the subject, that he perfect a well-modulated and phythmic pattern of speech and that he practise under quiet and relaxed conditions. Try it yourself!

All-Arts Frosh Tea To Promote Unity

Freshmen Orientation is again coming into the foreground this Friday as University College will hold an informal tea at the Women's Union to which the other arts colleges, Vic, Trinity and St. Mike's are invited. "We realize that only if the freshmen take advantage of this, can it be effective, now and in the future," says Jean Martin, first year president of the WUA.

These teas and tea dances which are being held at each of the four arts colleges are being sponsored by the Co-ordinating Committee of the Students' Administrative Council. Each college handles the arrangements of their own tea or tea dance.

Some members from all the faculties are expected to attend. "If the freshmen show interest in this experiment a campus-wide program can be undertaken in the future by the SAC," stated Mary Siegel, first year UC president. Siegel added that there will be a sing-song during the afternoon.

Both Siegel and Miss Martin are enthusiastic about the whole affair. They hope that it will bring "harmony between the colleges." The tea is being held at the UC Women's Union, 79 St. George St. this Friday between 3:30 and 5:30 p.m.

Dual-Vision Is Lecture For Institute

Professor K. B. Jackson, head of the Department of Applied Physics, will speak on "Your Other Eye is More That a Spare" before the Royal Canadian Institute on November 24, at 8:15 p.m. in Convocation Hall.

Professor Jackson's lecture, which will be on binocular vision and stereoscopic photography, will be illustrated with three-dimensional pictures in black and white or in color.

Professor Jackson will demonstrate with stereoscopic slides, in black and white and in color, some of the spectacular results that can be obtained and will indicate the difference between the perception of measurable depth in such stereoscopic pairs and the mere recognition of depth in single photographs of familiar objects. Some of the principles involved in taking and examining stereoscopic photographs will be discussed.

No Overemphasis On Studies Victoria, UC Debaters Decide

Although the Government asserted that bookworms may end up their life in a mental hospital, the resolution before the Victoria College Debating Parliament, "Resolved that Academic work is overemphasized on this campus", was defeated by a vote of 18 to 10 yesterday afternoon. Speakers from University College formed the Opposition.

Ken Jarvis, IV UC, second speaker of the Opposition pointed out that debating is an academic intellectual activity and no matter who won the debate, the Government, by debating at all, proved the worth of academic activity.

He deplored the hedonistic attitude displayed by the Government in its advocating credits for extracurricular activity. We must be capable, he added, if we are to help other people. We become capable through assimilating knowledge we gain in university and transforming it into wisdom, he said.

Jarvis continued, "At university we learn how to apply reason. We have the choice of being reasonable and free, or unreasonable and bonded."

Don Armstrong, II Vic, Leader of the Government, said the education we receive should equip us mentally, socially and physically. He said that cramming for examinations will never teach us how to get along with people. Social education that is learned on the campus is more worthwhile than striving for academic prowess he continued. Armstrong described the University of Toronto as a community of citizens who have personalities to develop.

Cynthia Olsen, II UC, spoke for the Opposition. She said that we come to university for scholarly application. It is at university that we take our first steps into the world, she added.

Dave Jackson, II Vic, speaking for the Government, said that stressing abstract subjects as a university must necessarily do, leaves the student out of step with society.

Dave Rose, IV UC, advocated an internal revolution and the overthrow of the formal structure of lectures and professors. He felt that a student should rather use his own discretion and judgment in the selection of texts which he wished to read.

Speaker For Hillel Famed Philosopher

Dr. Israel Knox, Professor of Philosophy at New York University, will be guest speaker of the Hillel Foundation this coming Sunday evening, November 25, at 8:30 p.m. at the Hillel House. His address will deal with the theme, "American Jewish Authors on the Contemporary Scene".

Israel Knox was educated at the College of the City of New York and at Columbia University, where he received his Ph.D. in June, 1936. He is the author of "The Aesthetic Theories of Kant, Hegel and Schopenhauer". His book has been very favorably reviewed in academic as well as in popular journals. Along with his general studies, Dr. Knox has maintained an interest in Jewish culture and has lectured on philosophical topics before many academic groups. He has contributed essays and reviews to The Menorah Journal, The Reconstructionist, Commentary, Jewish Social Studies, The Journal of Philosophy,

N. Korean Visitor Reports To IRC

Mrs. Roscoe Rodd, delegate of the Canadian Women's Congress, yesterday spoke at an open meeting of the International Relations Club concerning her experiences in Korea. Mrs. Rodd was appointed chairman of a committee which was organized by the Women's International Federation to investigate the treatment of Korean civilians by American soldiers.

"The eyes of the world are on Canada; let us play our part," said Mrs. Rodd, "don't let the United Nations be the tool of one country and destroy itself."

Mrs. Rodd appealed to the educated to stay close to the people who educated them and did not have the opportunity to attend university. "You must give them back the best you know," she said. Peace does not come by itself, she added, but must be fought for.

Mrs. Rodd told of many atrocities committed by American soldiers and deplored the terrible destruction caused by incendiary and jellied-gasoline bombs used by American soldiers. She read passages from the unanimous report of the committee in which methods of torture and killing are listed as found in files from the people of North Korea.

The people of Korea are freedom-loving and in order to preserve this freedom was the first nation to ever defeat Japan, in 1592, stated Mrs. Rodd. The guest speaker also stated that the Koreans look upon us as the real barbarians of the day. One Korean woman asked to speak to the American delegate and when informed there was not one addressed the Canadian delegate as follows: "What have we done to your people that you want to kill us?"

A member of the audience asked if the other side were not fighting a war too and also commit atrocities and Mr. Rodd replied that she could only tell her what she read in the newspapers. She stated that she only saw the people of north Korea since the committee was not invited to South Korea. "The newspapers with their dishonest policy print only half-truths and when General Wu wanted to make two speeches he was allowed only one and in all Canada only the Canadian Tribune published it," she said.

L' Affaire Gonzales

Gonzales

A Reply

Editor, The Varsity:

Contrary to your unwarranted assumption, I haven't the slightest objection to Mr. Hoyle as a physicist which is what I think he is qualified to be. I have no desire to "ban Hoyle"—if he sticks to physics or astronomy, theory or practice, continuous creation of matter or what have you.

I have no objection to hearing Dr. Maritain or Dr. Niebuhr on the CBC talking about theology.

I am, however, shocked at the irresponsibility of the CBC in hiring Mr. Hoyle to talk about theology, which is what he did in fact do. I grant you that most of his talks dealt with scientific matters but he did talk about theology and he has absolutely no training whatever to do so. If by censorship you mean making sure that people are qualified to talk about the matters that they are being paid to talk about — and paid by us, yes, I am in favour of censorship.

Jack Gonzalez,
III Meds.

Ed. Note. We suggest that Mr. Gonzalez read Hoyle's lecture series, "The Nature of the Universe" which has been published in book form.

Humorous

A Cat?

Editor, The Varsity:

Many people have deplored the lack of humor on the campus these past years. The Champus Cat just has not been up to standard we had come to expect. The editors, it seems, have been trying hard to give humor a lift. Last week we had an article about officer training and in Tuesday's Varsity, there was the subtlely humorous article on "Facts about the CBC". If you don't mind, please allow us to congratulate Mr. Gonzales on this fine example of tongue-in-cheek writing.

But take care! Remember what happened to the Manitoban's article on a certain east-coast college. Some students may think Mr. Gonzales is serious. The modern student is notorious for letting people stuff all sorts of trash down his throat without resisting. You need only pick up the evening paper to find an example of the principle that if you talk preposterous nonsense loud enough and long enough, you will be believed. The words of the church on such matters as the CBC should be received with the same equanimity as Mr. Thomson's election promises. The Church, although without the services of the Star, has had a two-thousand-year-head start in which to inculcate its myths.

Terry Burnside, II Phil.
Ed. Taylor, IV F&C.

P.S. We would like to extend an invitation to Mr. Gonzales to speak at the meeting of the Pacbams (Pacifists, Atheists, Crowder, Beerdrinking and Marching Society).

Truth and Contradictions

Editor, The Varsity:

Must we, as Christians, believe in the teachings of the Bible? Must I point out that the Bible contradicts itself, especially between the Old and New Testaments? If we are to accept the New Testament as accurate and true must we not also admit that parts of the Old Testament are true? Is not the Old Testament totally God's word, and therefore all truth Then is the Christian text, the New Testament, true? No one knows, according to Mr. Gonzalez, because God's word cannot be questioned nor interpreted.

It seems to me that, by Mr. Gonzalez' description, God is divided. But God is whole. God calls other gods false, but they in turn call God false. Yet other people believe implicity in the word of their gods. Are they wrong, or are we?

A Christian, according to Mr. Gonzalez, must believe that the world and universe was made from nothing by a feat of prestidigation. An Indian tribe has the god from a ball of mud. At least they didn't get something for nothing as Mr. Gonzales believes we should.

Did it ever occur to Mr. Gonzalez that his belief in Christianity because God says so is paralleled by the old German belief that something was so because Hitler said it? Does this not show a certain lack of logic on his part? Why are we at University if it is not to ask questions? Can a medical man, knowing of radioactive cosmic rays and mutation due to radioactivity, still not believe in some form of evolution rather than creation We are here to find answers, not to read the Bible.

Christianity has many divisions. These divisions are on interpretation. Jesus was immersed on baptism. Are all religious denominations that don't immerse blasphemous? Mr. Gonzalez thinks so because Jesus is part of God, and immersion should not be questioned.

Most Christian faiths have mutated from one main one. Who are we to judge whether the mutation is better or worse than the root. Can not they be equal in the eyes of God as the New Testament states? Who can interpret God's wishes? Cannot one person express his theories—his religion if you like—in any way he sees fit? Must he be censored because a few interpret God's word as censoring the freedom of opinion? Do not others, who have a different religion, also pay taxes to the government to hear what THEY wish? Must we hear Bible classes twenty-four hours a day I want to hear what other people think, don't you?

R. W. Cumming,
III CPS.

Truth Not Opinion

Editor, The Varsity:

May I express my whole-hearted agreement with Mr. Jack Gonzalez when he says in his letter published November 2, "There are an enormous number of people whose knowledge of Christianity has not kept pace with their development in other fields." May I also suggest that he is one of those people?

I believe that Mr. Gonzalez' arguments do a great disservice to Christianity. I believe that a Christian can hear Mr. Hoyle's statement on religion and answer them, one by one. I am confident there is a great deal of truth in his beliefs.

Faith is strongest when it is tested. Not only do our ideas become clearer when we must answer those who challenge them, but also much of the dross which has gathered about them is purged away, and purer gold remains. Great fungus — like falsehoods spread over truths if they are left untouched and unexamined; these must be removed.

Mr. Gonzalez states that the word of God is "not subject to review" by man. But the word of God is "the truth shall make you free". The truth. Not opinion. Not even the opinion such as Mr. Gonzalez'.

God is Truth. The free search for Truth is the task of man. This is my credo. This is a banner beneath which is a place for Mr. Hoyle and Mr. Gonzalez, a place for Christians and for Jews, for Moslems and for Buddhists, a place for all those whose true aim is to consecrate their lives to the greatest mission in the world.

David Gauthier,
II UC.

P.C. Policies Said Christian

"The logical method to discuss the problem is to discover the fundamentals our Lord preached and relate them to our everyday life" were the opening words of the Hon. Dr. W. J. Dunlop, who closed the series of addresses given by the four major parties and sponsored by the Chapel Committee of Hart House on the problem of "The Christian and this election."

Dr. Dunlop graduated from University College in 1904 and has, but for nine years been in direct contact with the University. Since 1936 Dr. Dunlop has been the Director of the University Extension Department, and is the Progressive Conservative candidate for Eglinton riding in the forthcoming provincial election. Dr. Dunlop was the Minister of Education in Premier Frost's cabinet.

"My government will endeavour to keep children at school longer than they are remaining at present" said Dr. Dunlop, as he pointed out the Christian appeal that his party provided.

Weeping Widows

Doto played by Edith Greenberg, (left) consoles her mistress, Dynamene, played by Charlotte Schrager while the two sit weeping over the death of Dynamene's husband Virilius, in his tomb. This is the opening scene of A PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT by Christopher Fry, which is one of two plays by this rising English playwright, that are to be presented by Hart House Theatre under the direction of Robert Gill. The plays will run from Nov. 30 until Dec. 8 in Hart House Theatre.

Good Humour Is Standout In 'Les Plaideurs' Farce

Racine's Les Plaideurs is a farce with just enough satirical content to provide the amusement that springs from recognition. Last night's production of this play by Le Cercle Francais of University College made the most of the opportunities of satirization as well as of the more obvious exploitation of the usual comic types.

Almost plotless, Les Plaideurs is held together by an unusually uncomplicated love affair and the legal fixations of a judge whose inordinate fondness for his profession has driven him insane and of Les Plaideurs — a countess and a bourgeois who both find law suits their only pleasure in life. (The bourgeois, Chicanneau, is still tenuously tied to reality by his love of money.)

But neither Racine nor the performers took the plot seriously; to both, it provided only the necessary vehicle for the humor, that was, almost without exception, quite frivolous, and quite enchanting. And this detachment was most effectively underscored by the deliberately unreal visual effect of the production.

Hubert Fielden-Briggs designed the costumes and scenery, and presumably the makeup also, with a great deal of intelligent imagination. The scenery was a bit too reminiscent of Walt Disney to suit the period of the play, but aside from this quibble, it was gay, colourful, and properly droll. On the other hand, it would be dificult to find argument with the costumes — their colourful precision and simplified ability to suggest a seventeenth century print collaborated with the straightforward improbability of the paper wigs to give the appearance of plaster models suddenly come to life.

It might be possible to object to the stylistic makeup, or the fact that it was not consistent, but it tied in very well with the idea behind the visual unreality of the production. And it could be justified, if by nothing else, by the genius of the white rectangle that gave the face of the frustrated prompter — Le Souffleur (Barbara Screaton) — such a childlike pout.

Marion Hogarth played the part of the secretary to the judge — L'Intime — with well controlled exuberance and polished style. It it is to her credit that her sex was never once even a matter for consideration. Miss Hogarth gave L'Intime a distinct characterization that could only be regarded with affectionate amusement.

Hubert Fielden - Briggs' Petit-Jean — the porter — could only be called a polished performance. His technical abilities were con-

Friendly Chamber Music

Perhaps there are a few more people on the campus now who don't think chamber music is dull. At any rate, anyone who was at last Sunday's Hart House concert heard an extremely lively concert of first-rate chamber music. The performers were the Kresz-Hambourg Trio. These artists—Norah de Kresz (piano), Geza de Kresz (violin) and Boris Hambourg (cello)—give the illusion of taking their music very easily. Their platform manner is no different from their manner anywhere else, and the audience is made to feel that they are really hearing chamber music performed as it ought to be, by a group of friends who just happen to drop in.

The music they play, however, is not amateur stuff. The program began with Brahms' Trio in C minor, Op. 101. Although this is the third work Brahms wrote for this combination, he seems ill at ease with it, and writes music of a peculiarly harsh sound, especially in the first movement. In the following movements, particularly in the mysterious scherzo and in the andante with its seven-four rhythm, the Kresz-Hambourg Trio succeeded better in making the music acceptable from the standpoint of euphony.

The remainder of the music on the program makes no attempt to have a trio sound orchestral. This music included a contemporary work by Paul McIntyre — a melodious Trio-Serenade — and a relatively ancient one by Jean-Philippe Rameau. Though styled a concerto this work is not a concerto in the ordinary sense, but a trio with three very independent parts. It consists of a number of old dances, with many repeats and da capo's. In this lucid music the Kresz-Hambourg Trio was at its best. They played with zest—a quality which the gaiety and humor of this music demands. As Mrs. de Kresz said, the audience seemed to like old music, and the Haydn Rondo which followed as an encore was further proof that she was right.

The Kresz-Hambourg Trio shows the marks of having played together for many years—perfect unanimity and understanding among the players. They gave a finished performance of every work on Sunday evening; the harshness of their first number was probably due more to the composition than to their playing of it.

Chamber Music Concert Feature

A unique series of concerts begins on Saturday afternoon in the Museum Theatre. The Toronto Music Lovers' Club is once again sponsoring chamber music recitals and this year it probably will be the only opportunity for Toronto audiences to get to hear any chamber music this season.

The first concert in this series will be held this coming Saturday at 4:15 p.m., when the Kresz-Hambourg plays a number of compositoons for piano, violin and cello, including works by Beethoven, Haydn, and Paul McIntyre. Student tickets for the entire series are $3.00.

BOSZORMENYI-NAGI

Bela Boszormenyi-Nagi, pianist will be the artist at this Sunday's Concert in Wymilwood. A widely travelled and universally acclaimed artist, Boszormenyi-Nagi comes to the Wymilwood Concert Series to play a program consisting entirely of piano sonatas by Beethoven. The concert begins at 9:00 p.m.

Rubens, Hals In Exhibition Of Paintings

The Art Gallery of Toronto is opening two exhibitions on Saturday, Nov. 24. The first is 38 paintings by Old Masters which is on loan from the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York. Included in this exhibition will be paintings by such well-known names as Tintoretto, El Greco, Guardia, Veronese, Monet, Poussin, Cezanne, Corot, Renoir, Degas, Winslow Homer, Frans Hals, Rembrandt, Rubens, Goya. The exhibition covers seven schools of painting over three centuries, and it will be shown in Toronto until Dec. 31.

The Royal Canadian Academy of Arts are showing their 72nd Annual Exhibition from Nov. 24 until Jan. 6th. This exhibition includes painting sculpture, drawings, etchings and designs, and has been chosen by a jury composed by three painters, one sculptor, and one architect.

R. York Wilson, one of the judges, says that, "There is a good balance between the modern and the conventional and very little of either extreme." There are entries from 113 artists from all parts of the Dominion, and most of their works will be on sale. Art works can be bought at prices ranging from $10.00 up to $1,200.00.

Wolf Song Well Done By Berger

Erna Berger's billing as a "lyric coloratura soprano" describes her well. She has all the brilliant technique and high range required to sing such things as Mozart's "Martern Aller Arten" (Constanze's aria from Seraglio), but they came out with all the warmth and gentleness of a lyric soprano.

Last Thursday and Saturday Miss Berger sang a group of songs by Schubert and Hugo. Wolf settings of German poems with a special emphasis on their emotional content. Miss Berger handled these as only German singers can, combining a real feeling from the poetry with splendid vocal production, and a certain amount of judicious acting with facial gestures.

The group included both gay and serious songs, but it was in the light-hearted ones that Miss Berger was most successful. Her voice is of such a bright, clear tone that she has difficulty picturing more sombre moods. For example, the Mermaid's Song by Wolf, in which she describes her wiles to outwit the fishermen, was well-suited to her voice, whereas her Mignon, by Schubert, was less convincing.

It was in the Mozart, however, that Miss Berger appeared to best advantage. The program began with two rather formal arias by Mozart in Italian style, and concluded with two display arias, one from Idomeneo, and the other from Seraglio. Miss Berger's extremely precise intonation and rhythm made these a delight to listen to. And instead of the cold, superhuman tone in which these arias are sometimes sung, she gave them real warmth and feeling.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Basketball Coach Bob Masterson was inclined to be a little gloomy over the prospects of his team last night. He thought it would likely not be as good as last year's, though with the number of freshmen cage stars out to catch positions, he admitted, he couldn't say for sure at this early date.

But three of the first line are gone. Jack Gray has graduated, Ed Brennan is out with leg injuries, and Bill Wilson has decided not to play either. Since there are five men to a team in basketball, and five minus three leaves two, not much is left of the Blues first line. George Stulac, the best looking freshman out, was counted on to fill Gray's shoes, but may quit basketball for the season and concentrate on swimming, the sport which he hopes will take him over to Finland with the Olympic team next summer. He is working out with the Intermediates for the time being.

However, the way the Blues looked in their practice scrimmage last night with the Intermediates, who play YMHA in the city loop tonight, the coach's pessimism was hardly warranted. True, their shooting was off, particularly close in (Ed Maynerik was sinking some lovely ones) but we have yet to see a team with sharp shooting after only two weeks of practice. Plays were being set up well, with two men in (Natanson and Lukenda) and three out (Maynerik, Huycke, and Glover). Huycke and Glover, two guards who came along fast last year, looked sharp as ever yesterday. The second line was 6'5" Ray Menotte of Etobicoke and Art Binnington in, and Don Fawcett, Jack Garbutt (Runnymede) and Mike Baida (Harbord) out. Dancy and Hamilton spell them off.

The schedule will include pretty much the same teams as last year. The opener it at Hobart College on the 29. First home game will be Dec. 8 (an Athletic Night) with Albion College. One team on last year's sked notably absent this year: Lawrence Tech, last year's flashy outfit which discontinued basketball this year due to "overemphasis".

City League Basketball Opens Varsity Orphuns Meet YMHA In Hart House Game At 7:45

By BOB GODSON

The University of Toronto Orphuns, Varsity's entran in the Senior Men's Basketball League will start the curre season tonight at Hart House. The Orphuns are essentiall the Intermediate Blue team, although many senior Blue sta see action with them.

Returning from last year's Intermediates to the Orphuns are bucket man John MacKenzie, forward Ray Yakomin, and guard Bob Milne. Forward Doug Kettle has come up from last year's UC team. Newcomers include Bob Burton from Sudbury High School, Stevens from East York, and George Stulac from Western Tech. Added to these may be two or three Blues for tonight's Orphun game. Last year the league was the best in Toronto.

The first game of the scheduled doubleheader brings together Varsity and the strengthened YMHA club and it will start at 7:45. The second game should bring a thrill a minute as the powerful Tri-Bells will meet the rebuilt East York Grads. Tri-Bells were last year's Eastern Canadian champions and they boast a lineup of the top Canadian players.

Along with last year's squad, Tri-Bells have added Fred Thomas, the former Assumption College all-star, whom many rate the best player in Canada, Johnny Braithewaite, last year with Varsity and Ed Link, McMaster star. George Arnott, former Western star and late of the Argonauts and Jack Gray from the Varsity Blues are also expected to line up with Tri-Bells.

The league this year is composed of six teams containing players from all over Canada. East York have signed George Pickerell fr the Montreal Senior league and fine young player in Gene M Cartney from Fredericton, Ne Brunswick.

The Orphuns will have to pl good ball to keep in contention this powerful league and games should provide plenty excitement and action.

Arch. Beaten By 4-0 Score In Soccer Tilt

Yesterday at noon, a more experienced St. Mike's team outclassed a very game bunch from Architecture 4-0, and advanced into the soccer semi-finals.

The Double Blues started off as if they were in a hurry to get home; they were pressing hard right from the opening whistle, and kept the play bottled up in the Architecture end. The Architects' goalie successfully blocked St. Mike's efforts, until finally Don Rope found the open corner. St. Mike's quickly added another one when Rope beat the goalie again, on a penalty shot.

The less experienced Architects tried hard to come from behind, but they seemed completely befuddled by the superior passing and ball-handling of the Irish. Soon after Solomon added another point for Saint Mike's on a beautiful corner shot, and that finished the scoring for the first half.

The Double Blues kept on trying to increase the score, but overanxiousness hampered their aim, and the Architects began to find themselves. Ivern Davis kept driving hard for St. Mike's and finally made the scoresheet at the beginning of the second half with a hard drive that the goalie couldn't get.

St. Mike's missed an easy goal when a penalty shot from only about eight yards out went wild, while on the other side only a brilliant save by the Double Blues' goalie kept Architecture's Doug Allan from scoring.

In brief, the first half of the game was one-sided but the second half proved an exciting contest. Kennedy, Davis and Rope played an excellent game for St. Mike's, while for the losers Cameron and King played for all they were worth.

Pitching Sportshoes

Besides the all-important play-off game which commanded most of the interest on the soccer front yesterday, a game was played on the regular schedule. Wycliffe edged Forestry 2-1 on the strength of a pair of goals by Cheeseman. It was tied after the first half, Davis scoring for the Woodmen but Cheeseman netted the winner in the second half.

Up at the arena, in a noon-hour hockey game, Trinity B swamped Meds III, 7-2. Hank Meredith led the Buttery Boys with a four-goal performance. Fisher, Stewart and Plaxton contributed singles. For the doctors, Wynne and Mitchell were scorers.

Goalie Jack Sturges of the Vic senior hockey team registered a shutout to help his mates to a 6-0 victory over Sr. Meds. Wes Struthers led with three goals, Paul Walton had a pair and Bill Andrews got one.

In lacrosse, Forestry trimmed Meds III by a score of 7-2. Cunningham was the big gun with a trio of goals. The other four were shared by Shannon, West, Earle and Deacoff. Carson and Hipwell were the Meds scorers. However, the IV's held up the honour of Meds by whipping St. Mike's B, 6-1. Jones got the hat trick, Morris two and Petrovitch a single. Heffer managed to count for the losers.

In evening boxla play, Meds V edged Knox, 5-3. Both sides had trouble getting untracked in the first half, but the Medsmen managed one tally in each frame. Urquhart led the winners with two tallies, while Kerr and Walsh added one each. Graham got two and Kent and McWhinnie one each for the Theologs.

In the final tilt, Pharmacy A took Dents by a 5-4 count. The Dentus rapped in all four goals in the first frame but after that were unable to beat goalie Onizaka. The Druggists tied up the game in the third quarter and went on to win. Frey of Pharmacy and Milligan of Dents scored twice each.

Hockey Skulemen Beat Redmen 4-1

By JIM PROUDFOOT

The hockey schedule continued yesterday at the Arena. The day's big game brought together Sr. UC and Sr. SPS and the Skulemen whipped their opponents by a 4-1 count in a rather rough and speedy encounter. There were four penalties handed out and there could have been more. The hitting was heavy and tempers were flaring on several occasions. UC got away to an early lead but it soon disappeared as the Engineers' attack really got rolling. Scoring was evenly distributed among five men and Bratty of UC was the bad boy with a brace of penalties.

The Red and White struck early in the game with MacDonald popping the puck into the net from close in at the 2-minute mark. The artsmen ran into a couple of penalties then, the first for tripping at five minutes. This they killed off effectively, using up time with ragging and pattern passing. They weren't so lucky on the next penalty which followed immediately. They were called for having an extra man on the ice and while they were short-handed, Hookings of SPS got loose in the corner and whipped it out to Yeo in front who fired it past Hadlow to knot the score.

At 15:30, Wilson took a short lateral pass on Hadlow's doorstep and had lots of time to aim and put his team ahead. Bratty was banished to the cooler at 16 minutes for interference, which was putting it mildly, but the Skulemen failed to cash in on the advantage and the period ended with SPS leading 2-1. Play got quite rough toward the end of the frame. The players were thumping each other with gusto ond laying on plenty of wood too.

The engineers counted twice in the first three minutes to salt the victory away. Smith took a pass from Wilson on the way in and fooled Hadlow with his shot and less than a minute later Martin fired a screened shot from the blueline that the goalie never saw.

The checking became heavy again and UC stepped up their pace but they just couldn't get one past Bates in the SPS goal. Bratty was sentenced again at 12 minutes for combing an engineer with the blade of his stick. This took a little of the starch from the UC attack and the verdict was never in doubt. UC was strong on the offensive again as time ran out.

Waterpolo Blues Wallop Y, 26-0

Varsity Junior waterpolo trounced Central Y B's 26-0 for the second time this year. Goalie Har Robins earned his second shutout in as many games. Al Roger was the top scorer with 8, Doug Carnahan next with 7; Bill McIlroy had 4 and Roy Wilson 3. Ezra Silverstein combined as coach, manager, and player.

Show Us!

A baby has been born on the campus. And the University of Toronto, through the Students' Administrative Council, is to be its foster parent. We know that it will be called by its nickname SHARE, because the words which its initials represent, Student Help For Asian Relief And Education, will be forgotten as soon as they are explained.

What is SHARE? This is about as difficult a question to answer as "Who is Sylvia?" Purportedly, it is the successor to last year's All-Varsity Aid which attempted to show our interest in the welfare of fellow universities in South-East Asia. But as yet, we have been shown none of the idealism which resulted in th adoption of such a relief campaign last year.

Rather we have been presented with a slogan—SHARE. We have been told that it is a good cause, without even being told why. And worst of all, we have been asked to participate in something which we know nothing about. There are many charities, all of which have slogans, but they hardly ever secure our support on the basis of a set of initials.

Last year's All Varsity Aid on the other hand, was successful on the campus because it did explain the reason for its existence — and very forcefully. Through its very explicitness, the university was united in a cause which had every reason for their support. Naturally the campaign itself was not perfect; but then it was a first step and not the last word.

This year, then, SHARE set out to follow in AVA's footsteps. (Changing the name hardly indicates the continuity.) Yet even now, it is not known where the steps of AVA led. Recipients of the aid, Sindt, a University in Pakistan, and Jammia-melia, a University in India, have not acknowledged its arrival. Probably this is just a question of red-tape delay. Nonetheless, students have a right to know how last year's aid was received before they are asked to give again.

This year's SHARE is gravely determined to avoid what it considers to be AVA mistakes. In practice, this has been interpreted to mean, "Don't expose baby SHARE to public view". Perhaps we are being rather vulgar in wanting to know all about the child; what it looks like, how it functions and what it wants to do. But if the students of this university are expected to pay for its future, they surely have every right to know all the projected plans — and every right to take an active part in forming them.

A person to person canvass has been chosen by the External Affairs Committee (EAC) as the best means to raise money. (You would think they were organizing a push not a drive.) Yet the personal approach will become simply a personal touch, if students are going to be asked to give willingly for an unpublicised plan in a hushed up campaign.

OUR READERS WRITE

Truth Will Out

Editor, The Varsity:

I am a Christian, far from perfect and still learning a great deal about the wonders of God's creation from the natural scientists.

May I, sir, take issue with Gonzalez's letter.

I do not wish to go into the matter of many versions of the Bible, or the unhappy divisions in Christendom over which are the essential matters of faith. But I would remind him of the pride that has caused the Church to oppose Copernicus, Galileo, and Darwin in the name of Christ. Then to discover that these gentlemen were really teaching the natural scientific facts of creation and a possible method God could have used.

I would not admit "that God and Lord Russell — are possibly equally liable to error." But I would admit that my interpretation of Scripture, or any other means God has used to reveal His truth, is as liable to error as anyone else's. I believe that revelation goes beyond what is discoverable by human reason, but I can not believe that God's revelation is contrary to reason.

Mr. Gonzalez says, "Mr. Hoyle, if contrary to the word of God—" How are we to know if he is not given a chance to be heard? Select bodies of religiously righteous men killed the prophets and crucified Jesus to stop their opinions contaminating the people.

Which of the two stories of Creation, Genesis, Chapter 1 to 2, verse 4, or Chapter 2, verse 4 on, would Gonzalez take as literal truth? For myself, I would take the spiritual lesson out of both and not argue because Genesis 1 states Creation took 7 days and Genesis 2 states Creation took 1 day, therefore God contradicts himself. Mr. Hoyle has presented us with a scientific hypothesis that Creation is "ex nihilo". Christianity states God created "ex nihilo". Is Hoyle, perhaps, just telling us a little more of the way in which God acts? I don't agree with all Hoyle says, but I ask permission to hear him and hope he will, once in awhile, listen to Christians of equal scholarship in their field.

As a student whose life aim is to preach Christ as God, crucified and alive again, I welcome equal opportunity for all to state their views. If I am campaigning for a false position let Lord Russell or whoever can bring my position crashing to the ground.

I ask the CBC to take my tax money and that of Lord Russell's followers and let both sides have their say. If God is Truth and the Author of Reason can a mere man overthrow Him? Let not Christians hide behind artificial barriers but stand in the market place and declare Christ.

Wycliffe College,
IV Year.

ALARMING PRANKS

Reprinted from The Varsity, Nov. 22, 1953.

Ever since Monday, it has been generally felt that certain irresponsible members of our student body have gone too far.

In accordance with its usual editorial policy of objectivity, tolerance and broad-mindedness, The Varsity has regarded with comparative indulgence similar incidents in the past. In 1951 several such happenings were treated only with mild censure. In 1952 the bombing of Whitney Hall by the Shuzoff brothers, Ivan and Joseph, was partly condoned because it was felt that the boys were under a nervous strain at the time. But this time it has gone too far, altogether too far.

Did the immature hooligans who burned down University College the day before yesterday stop to think that their foolish action might cause considerable expense and trouble? They justify their prank on the grounds that it will not be necessary to find new lecture rooms for UC students, since both students and lecturers were in the college during the conflagration. However, we feel that this is no excuse for an act of wanton destructiveness. After all, are we intelligent university students, or children? Neither the principal of UC nor Dud Morose, president of the Lit, is available for comment, but all other faculty and student representatives join in condemnation of this sort of puerile exhibitionism. Robert Posalcatt of the Engineering Society was seen wiping his eyes, and Thomas Crump of Trinity expressed the feelings of all when he remarked, "Dear me."

In view of the general annoyance and other caused by the disappearance of UC, The Varsity heartily endorses the comment of SAC president Windy Sax, ". . . most regrettable. We all enjoy a good practical joke now and again, but the joker should have some regard for other people's feelings. This one really isn't funny, it really isn't."

Explain A Bit

Editor, The Varsity:

I understand that certain damaging inferences taken from my letter in yesterday's Varsity have proved unfortunate for Shirley Endicott. On the basis of informal conversations I feel that she could be justified in using my name, though I did not sign the stencil in question. From my point of view the whole issue has arisen from a series of misunderstandings and I do not wish the impression to remain that I endorse the opinions expressed therein.

Amalgamate In UN Club Peace Council Proposal

The new, Engineer-controlled, University Peace Council is investigating the possibility of amalgamation with the United Nations Club, following a decision made at the year's first business meeting of the Council yesterday.

The meeting passed, by a vote of 25 to 6, the motion that "Whereas the aims of the Peace Council are similar to those of the UN Club, and whereas the Peace Council has a bad name on the campus, be it resolved that the Council's executive is allowed to negotiate an amalgamation between the Council and the UN Club, this amalgamation subject to ratification by the general body."

The Engineers took over the University Peace Council from its original members last March, by joining en masse, and electing their own officers.

In the Student's Handbook, the new organization is described as "reformed on non-party lines". The book continues, "PEACE, the avowed object of the organization, remains the same. The means to this end will be reformed this year."

Speaking against amalgamation, last year's Peace Council President Don Anderson suggested that those persons who wanted to unite the two organizations join the UN Club, but maintain the Peace Council for those who wanted to remain members of it.

He further opposed amalgamation on the grounds that the aims of the two organizations were different. "The UN Club is interested in the affairs of the United Nations, of which Peace is naturally an important part — but only a part," he said. "The Peace Council is the only organization which is devoted to peace," he added.

The meeting was interrupted at one point, after the minutes were read, by a loud cry of "Peace Brethren, let there be Peace," as ten Engineers marched down the aisle to their seats.

Council President Bishop complained at the meeting about the accounts handed over to him by last year's executive.

"When I finally got the records," he said, "they were turned out to be this rather dog-eared book, the first page of which is Page 53."

He said that the book was only a list of the payments and receipts for the past three years, and that there was no documentary evidence to support these accounts.

He added that of 200 membership cards which the Club (according to their accounts) had ordered in 1949, only 71 were accounted for.

"All this goes to show that the Peace Council for the past three years has been a secret organization," remarked Bishop. "There is no membership list for that period. Cards were issued, but no record was kept. And 129 membership cards have been withheld from the new president."

"It seems the Council has done nothing for the last three years," he said, and added, "It makes you wonder what all this shouting is about."

Countering this, May Lipman, I Meds, exclaimed, "You talk about last year's Council not doing anything. But at least it didn't wait two months to hold its first business meeting!"

"What has happeend to those persons who took over the Council so vigorously last year, and were going to do so much with it?" Miss Lipman asked.

Answering an Engineer who disagreed with Miss Lipman's remarks, Bishop suggested "You two should get together, preferably in the new Student Union Building."

Nominations were also received for the posts of Vice-President and Publicity Manager. Elections for these officers will be held sometime in the next few weeks.

Champion On Campus New Hue and Cry

Another newspaper, Champion, will probably be on sale on the campus today. At any rate, the smiling newsgirl pictured above, Kari Levitt, promised she would be back today when she was snapped selling the paper's last edition in front of Hart House two weeks ago.

Champion, "The Fighting Voice of Young Canada," is published every other Thursday. It is backed by a number of groups, among them the National Federation of Labor Youth.

In its lead story in the issue pictured above, headlined "They're after your life! Fight for it!", Champion describes the great number of Canadian soldiers who are going to Europe to be a part of "a US-led army which will include former Nazi generals like Kurt Meyer."

Another headline says "CAMPUS OPINION FAVORS VISIT TO CANADA BY SOVIET STUDENTS." This story describes the question of Soviet visits at the recent conference of the International Student Service, which defeated, 15-12, a motion asking the National Federation of Canadian University Students to reconsider its decision not to invite Soviet students to Canada.

The story covers the "heated discussion" at the ISS conference, and tells of support for the visit at the Universities of McGill and Montreal.

The same question has taken up space in another paper, the Canadian Tribune, which blamed the NFCUS decision on "American infiltration" into the Canadian body's ranks.

"This year's new NFCUS executive, hammered into line by a so-called US fraternal delegate (to the conference), cynically washed out the deep desire of Canadian students for such international student exchanges," the story said.

The fraternal American delegate to the conference is named as Al Lowenstein, described as "the leader of the group fighting the proposals of last year's executive."

Actually, the American delegate was Bill Denzer, President of the United States National Student Association, who made only one speech at the conference. Lowenstein was the fraternal delegate from the USNSA to the 1950 conference.

Reds' Rule Is Ruthless Says Dean

Two years ago I would not have left China under any circumstances. Today I am glad to be back in the free world. That is how the Very Reverend A. C. S. Trivett, Dean of the Holy Trinity Cathedral of Shanghai, described life "Behind the Bamboo Curtain", when he spoke to the UN club in the Women's Union Building yesterday. Rev. Trivett, who left China just recently, lived there for thirty-two years, and is, incidentally, a graduate of this university.

He claims that the People's Government of China is "not representative, not democratic, and not benevolent", and that the government is hated and distrusted.

Dean Trivett compared the previous and present governments of China, and stressed that, while Chiag Kai Shek's regime was corrupt, the present regime is ruthless and dishonest. In spite of this, he continued, Chiang's reputation stands high in China and they believe, that it was not reported to Chiang, himself an honest man, that only a fraction of the relief sent by UNRRA reached the people. They also believe that the corruption in the armed forces and public services was unknown to Chiang.

Dean Trivett stated that the individual has no value, individual initiative is discouraged, that both big and small business are ruined by commodity and profit taxes. When the price of steel goes up, all firms carrying steel must pay profit tax, even though they have not sold any of it.

When a business man goes bankrupt, he said, and would close up he has to receive permission to do so. The employer can not discharge employees, and must keep paying their wages. This hopeless situation frequently results in suicide or disappearance of the employer. Nobody can leave his town or district without permission.

In one instance desperate peasants raided the government storehouse to retake the rice-crop taken away in taxes. In labour-management disputes the state arbitrates. All union members are required to attend indoctrination hours, where moderate questioning is permitted.

If...

... we had a Student Union Building, students would not have to lock class room doors when they play bridge.

Band To Ann Arbor Will See Ohio Game

With winter winds whistling down Hoskin Avenue, there is still a tang of football in the air.

Varsity's Blue and White Band is going down to Ann Arbor this weekend to take in the game between Ohio State and the University of Michigan. Twenty-five members of the Band will be guests of the famous University of Michigan Marching Band. The Blue and White Bandsters will be feted at the game and will be guests at the dance afterwards.

Our hallowed Blue and White uniforms will be sprinkled among the Maize and Blue of the Michigan Band. While the boys are there they will see a fair football game between two top Big Ten teams, two bands, each numbering over 135 members, and Yost stadium with a capacity of approximately 55,000 people where the game is to be played.

Responsible for the trip are two Blue and White Bandsmen, cymbalist Don Martin and Director Jim Guthro. The purpose of this trip will be a treat for the Bandsmen who did such a good job this year. They are also anxious to see the Michigan Band which is one of the best in the country. Of this band, Don Martin remarked that it was "one of the finest marching bands in captivity."

The game should be a treat too, for the rivalry between these two colleges is very keen. Each college would count their season a success, having lost every other game, to win this weekend.

The University of Michigan Band has had special movie shorts made of it and has a big feature article about it in Life magazine. U. of T. Bandsmen will entrain tonight at 12:00 and will be returning Sunday night.

HART HOUSE RADIO

Not Martians, But...

"Not Maritan—just Duquet" read The Varsity headline on a little item of Oct. 29, 1951. The story behind the weird antenna sprouting from the head of Bob Duquet, grad, on the night of the Homecoming Dance led us to investigate the intricacies of the Hart House Radio Committee.

Visitors to the Committee's display during the Homecoming Dance were able to have messages transmitted to virtually anywhere on the continent. These messages were relayed from the transmitter in the East Common Room of Hart House to the House of Frank Ford, grad. He, in turn, distributed them on a longer wavelength in the hope that by a series of relay-casts the message would reach its destination.

Organized at Hart House, Ajax, in the dim days when Skule was partly an annex, the committee operated its 20-watt borrowed transmitter under the call letters VE3BPD. When Ajax was moved to the campus proper the club became a Hart House committee. After a frantic search for space, a former ticket office at the west end of Hart House was requisioned and cleaned up. The equipment from Ajax was transferred to the "bicycle shed"—the members' fond name for it—and VE3BPD—U of T—was in operation.

Since its inception, the club has become associated with the R.C.A.F., and will soon begin operating a 450-watt station VE3DMS, located in the Cawthra Square building. This loan of equipment by the air force is a criterion of the value placed on such projects by the government.

In addition to the opportunity provided to contact other amateur radio enthusiasts in far-flung localities the Hart House Club provides part of an emergency radio communication net in times of disaster. During the Texas City disaster, and the Missouri flood the "ham" radios of the locality were often the only means of communication with outside areas. In addition many major discoveries in electronics—one of them the superhet transmitter — have been developed by "hams."

While such activities illustrate the more glamorous aspects of the "ham's" hobby, his main enjoyment is derived from simply communicating with his fellow hobbyists, wherever they may be. The Hart House committee's main functions is to provide a station for "hams" who haven't their own. The opportunity is also given for others to learn the theory and code necessary to obtain the government licence, without which an amateur cannot operate. The club also holds open meetings at which experienced guest speakers are often presentd. On in a series of such meetings will be held on Nov. 22 when Bill Choat (VE3IL) will be guest speaker.

The club works quietly and efficiently from its tiny station hidden in the flanks of Hart House. Its visible aspects are few. Only if a coed spies its aerial strung from the top of Hart House gym to the garden of Wycliffe; or if a member strays from his transmitter with his earphones clamped eerily on his head, does its function reveal itself to the campus at large.

MASTHEAD MEETING

All members of the Varsity Masthead are expected to attend a meeting in the editorial Office on Saturday morning at 10:00 a.m.

Sell Grey Cup Parking Space For Asian Aid

The new Relief campaign on the campus is going to follow the lead of last year's All-Varsity Aid, and sell parking space for the Grey Cup game next Saturday.

The new drive—Student Help for Asian Relief and Education — is going to use all available space around the university for parking purposes, Director Tim Armstrong, II Vic, said yesterday.

Volunteer students will supervise parking on the campus, he said. Plans call for use of fraternity lawns, lots, backyards, campus fields and driveways. Charge will be 50 cents a car.

Responsibility for finding volunteer parkers has been left to the Students' Administrative Council. At the Council's last meeting, each member was asked to find four people from his faculty or college to do the work. Other persons interested in helping should apply at the parking campaign's headquarters, at 118 St. George.

Student Help for Asian Relief and Education is a recently-organized campaign, which will work directly under the SAC External Affairs Commission. Although no definite target has been set for the $11,000 it hopes to raise, presumably the money will go to some area of South-east Asia.

"Hanging" for the Hart House Camera Club's annual show are Walt MacKenzie and Peter Wade, both former photo editors of The Varsity. Pictures will be shown in the Camera Club Room from November 9 to 25. They will be on exhibit to members of Hart House from 12:00 to 2:00 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

STATE DEPT.

Our Ambassadors

This article, the fourth in a series on the National Federation of Canadian University Students, is concerned with the international activities of the Canadian student body. The fifth article, on NFCUS on the Toronto campus, will appear Monday.

Should NFCUS take part in international activities? Many students say, "No, NFCUS is a national organization, to serve Canadian students. It shouldn't meddle with the affairs of other countries, which aren't our concern."

However, in the recent years there has been increased Canadian interest in world student affairs. Many people should take part in the conferences which are being held between the various national student groups. And since it is the representative national student organization, NFCUS is the logical body to represent Canada at these meetings.

This year the national body has got itself into one piece of trouble regarding international affairs: the now-famous "Russian question". At its annual conference last September, the organization decided to withdraw an invitation extended in its name to a group of Russian students to visit Canada.

A move is now under way to have the executive re-open the question to a national referendum. If the universities, by student vote, approve the principle of Russian visits, the invitation will have to be re-extended.

At present, three universities have already made decisions in this connection: the Universities of Montreal and McGill in favor of the visits; Saskatchewan opposed. The University of British Columbia has signified its tacit approval by inviting, on its own, four Soviet students for a year's study. And on our own campus, the faculty vote stands at 10-3 in favor of the visit.

What else is NFCUS doing? Next month its President, Jean de Margerie of Laval, and the Chairman of its International Activities Commission, Syd Wax of Toronto, will fly to Europe to a meeting in Edinburgh with a group of western student unions. Most of these national unions have found it possible to work within the Communist-dominated International Union of Students, and are attempting to find some basis of co-operation amongst themselves.

This is the second meeting these organizations have held. At the last one in Stockholm a year ago, they decided that if possible they would not form an organized international union, to compete with IUS. Instead they would farm out mandates to the various groups, but there would be no international secretariat to co-ordinate activities. In this way, they hoped the door to co-operation with the IUS would not be closed forever.

Meanwhile, Canada is trying to arrange a meeting of western student unions and IUS, before the Edinburgh conference.

NFCUS has sent letters suggesting such a meeting to 25 national student unions. However, the all-important reply from the IUS has not yet been received, in spite of wires urging immediate action. To date, no one is sure just where the Unity between the west and IUS stands.

NFCUS has also taken a positive stand in regard to a proposed Pan-American Union of Students, by sending a former Canadian student now working in Brazil to discuss the formation of that organization. IAC Chairman Syd Wax says that this was a significant step in the eyes of many south Americans, who consider Canada a middle-of-the-road nation, without the unpopular reputation given the United States by its so-called "dollar diplomacy".

Election Highlight

By RICH CLEE

All students who wished to vote in St. Patrick's riding during the elections yesterday were required to sign oaths of permanent residence or statements that they were students resident at the university.

John Medcof, president of the Liberal Club on the Toronto campus, said yesterday that while the District Returning Officers had been instructed to challenge all University students, they were also instructed to allow them to vote. He added that in case of an unfavorable decision, the students could later be brought to trial, although there was some doubt as to the nature of the charge that would be preferred.

Medcof said that the Liberal candidate had instructed his scrutineers to challenge students, and hence was being condemned by the campus club. A formal statement was prepared, which stated, "The U of T Liberal Club condemns the action of the Liberal candidate, W. A. Mackenzie, and his agents, in the riding of St. Patrick's, in instructing his scrutineers to challenge all resident students on the voters list and make them take the oath before receiving their ballot. He specifically disregarded our formal request not to do so and we dissociate ourselves from this action."

At press time last night the leaders of the other two major campus political parties were not available for comment. However students who had voted stated that they had not been challenged by either Progressive Conservative or CCF scrutineers at the polls.

At 11 p.m. last night, the results in St. Patrick's, the University riding, stood Roberts, Conservative, elected with 7,247 votes, a clear majority over the Liberal, Mackenzie who had totalled 2,487 ballots at that time, and the CCF entrant Newcombe who tallied 2,338.

No comment was available from the election authorities on the number of resident students voting but one scrutineer said that it had been very small. As yet, no action has been reported as taken against voting University resident students.

Raise Question Of Intolerance Re: Carnival

ontreal (CUP) — The Student ncil's decision to hold a winter rnival at the Pleasantview Hotel r Montreal has focussed stu- nts' eyes on the problem of dis- mination levelled at the hotel year. The Georgian reports t the plans for the carnival e been snagged as Jewish stu- nts remembered a boycott they on the hotel for a policy of rictive clientele.

Campus Profile

Prof. E. A. Allcut

By PEARL PARNES

"Engineers must learn English," stated Professor Edgar Alfred Allcut, head of the Department of Mechanical Engineering at the University of Toronto.

"Engineers have to write many reports to convey their own ideas to someone else's mind. Therefore they must know clearly what they want to convey and then they must know how to convey it." And Prof. Allcut was instrumental in starting the procedure where fourth year students must write a thesis, make a speech on it, and conduct the meeting discussing it.

Professor Allcut is a remarkable example of the all-round student become the all-round man. As a student of engineering at the University of Birmingham, he was cartoonist for the university magazine. His specialty was caricatures of professors. He played cricket, rugby, track and tennis, and was sub-editor of the English Journal. And he still managed to get his M. Sc., win the Heslop Gold Medal, and become a Bowen Research Scholar.

And now the pattern is much the same. His list of chairmanships, honorary and actual memberships, subsequent prizes, and books and articles he has written, is almost unending. He was the first winner of the A. Stewart prize given for test work in the field of Diesel engines. He is technical advisor of "Manufacturing and Industrial Engineering," and writes the book reviews. He is chairman of the Committee on Atmospheric Pollution in Canada, one of his pet fields.

This past summer he went to Brussels to represent the University of Toronto and the Engineering Institute of Canada at the Ninth International Management Conference, addressing 1300 people from 26 countries. He gave the only two Canadian papers at a meeting in England of world leaders in the subject of heat transfer. And at the same time he corrected the proofs of his latest book, the text used by engineering students, on industrial management.

The non-academic side of his career gives stiff rivalry in the portioning out of his time. He coached the soccer team for Skule for ten years after his arrival here, and at present is on the Athletic Directorate. For relaxation he reads history and biography, classical novels and the classics in translation, and has kept up a record of one book per week on subjects outside his own field.

"My primary interests have always been more directed to the arts than the sciences. And I am a better engineer because of it."

His prize possessions include two daughters, three grandchildren, and a collection of 700 records, rivaling the Carnegie Record Collection which he has welcomed into the New Mechanical Building. His love of sports and his creative drive still find expression: he plays "at" golf, and dabbles in verse, satirizing his own profession.

Professor Allcut's appointment to the University of Toronto, where he has been for the past thirty years, came about almost by accident. He had filled engineering positions at several large plants in England, including the place where Watt had worked and the steam engine had first been produced in quantity. He taught in the evenings. One day, in 1921, he called on an old professor of his, who, in the course of conversation, casually asked him, "Like to go to Canada?" Shortly afterwards Prof. Allcut arrived at Toronto as a lecturer in thermo-dynamics and heat engines.

A visit to the Mechanical Building itself is a sobering experience to the arts student (or staff-member) who is ignorant and often patronizing to the field of engineering. In the basement of the building is a miniature Niagara Falls, complete with water (which can be rushed through at 9,000 gallons per minute) and the proposed new power plant. A model of a river bed with "logs" is directed to the problem of preventing the logs from piling up. Projects for dam improvement and for getting heat from the earth are only two of the vat experiments the engineering students and grads are tackling. The old examination room, the only part of the building most arts students know well, is now being fitted to become the only Engineering Museum in Canada.

Women are gradually becoming a more familiar sight in SPS. For the first time, two girls are in the graduating class of Mechanical Engineering. "Design is particularly a women's field," is Prof Allcut's opinion. "A woman knows better than a man what she wants in the kitchen. Illumination is especially suited to women, who spend more time in the home than men. I'm all for them!"

Debate Immigration Policy

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the Honourable W. E. Harris, will be the honorary visitor at the Hart House debate to be held Wednesday, November 28 at 8:00 p.m. in the Debates Room, Hart House.

The motion to be debated is, "Resolved that this House deplores Canada's Immigration Policy". Dave Fry (IV Trinity) and Bert Bloom (III UC) will support the motion and will be opposed by John Medcof (IV UC) and Bill Dawson (IV Trinity).

For this debate the Speaker of the House will be Mr. Horace Krever, who graduated from the University of Toronto in 1950. During his undergraduate days at the U. of T. Krever was active in debating.

UC Women Okay Visit Of Soviets

The question of a Russian student delegation to Canadian universities received more support yesterday when the Women's Undergraduate Association of University College voted in favor of the principle of a Russian student tour 39-1.

The WUA also voted in favor of recommending to the National Federation of Canadian University Students that they consider a short tour of about 15 Russian students this year, or, alternately, next year. This motion was carried 36-4.

A third vote supported 33-8 the idea of a year-long student exchange between Canadian and Russian students.

Forty-two of University College's 668 women turned out to this meeting to vote on a question which has caused campus-wide interest this year. That is, about 6.3%.

The UC women are the tenth undergraduate body in the University to support the Russian visit. Three have voted against it.

Meds Society Shows Movie

The Medical Society decided that Meds would raise money for the Red Feather campaign this year by showing a documentary film of the work done by eight of the 66 Red Feather agencies rather than by contributing to the Red Feather Fair. However it was decided not to announce that the popular Medical Clinic would be absent from the Fair until after the Fair was over in case this might affect the attendance.

The Society felt that the technicolor film would bring the claims of the charities to the individual student. The film was shown during lecture and lab hours to the six medical years, with a chance being given at the end of each showing for the students to contribute.

Pay Telephone Rate Increase Hits Students

University of Toronto students will shortly feel the pinch of the rising cost of living in yet another way. Pay Telephones in Toronto, including those in Hart House and the University College residences, will cost a dime a call instead of a nickel, as soon as the Bell Telephone Company is able to change the coin-boxes.

Students whose homes are in the city will not be much affected by the change, but Whitney Hall girls foresee a telephoneless future. Said Elaine McNichol, III U.C., "If phones go up to a dime, people can just phone me. I'm not phoning anybody." Most co-eds felt that it was hard enough to save nickels, and it would be twice as hard to save dimes. "It seems a foolish move on the part of the phone company. I'll walk over to U.C. and use the penny phone," said Joan Langley, IV U.C.

Men using Hart House telephones will feel the increase. "The line in front of the one free Hart House phone will be twice as long now, but we will stick to our rights and stand in that line," said Robert Jackson, III Vic. Albert Strauss, IV U.C., said "You have to be a plutocrat to communicate with your friends. Friendship will become a luxury of the idle rich, and the nickel will become obsolete. I intend to buy all the Bell Telephone Stock I can lay my hands on." Sanford Phillips, III U.C., suggested raising the value of the nickel, but pointed out that this was not a new idea.

Grey Cup Parade Ends On Campus

Students leaving 11 o'clock classes Saturday morning had better move homewards as fast as possible—or they may end up in a traffic jam of chuckwagons, mounted cowboys, beauty queens, and 15,000 loaves of bread.

The danger arises from the Grey Cup Parade—which is due to arrive at the campus about noon, complete with all that paraphanelia. Once there it will disband, after a journey from the Royal York, up Bay Street to the City Hall, and then up Queen's Park Crescent to the University.

Visiting Student From India Describes Home Condition

Miss Lakshmi Rao, of India, spoke to an open meeting of the Women's Undergraduate Association of University College yesterday, with the purpose of making her audience familiar with the universities and students in India. She explained that the educational system now being delevloped in India was co-education among the younger children, separation of the sexes during the adolescence, and co-education again in the university. She also stated in passing that the money spent in bringing one student over here from India would help fifty Indian students through college there.

The curriculum of a university in India, which Miss Rao described, is more rigid than in Canada. English literature, including Shakespeare plays and poetry, is compulsory in all faculties.

She also spoke of the women of India—their fight against planned marriages and for franchise. A woman in India can now vote if she is literate, and if she or her husband owns property. Miss Rao named several women holding public offices in India, and said that the men had no prejudice against women in public life. "But," she added, "in the economic sphere, men put a tab on women."

She ended her speech by exhorting the girls at the meeting not to lose their sense of ideals, or to consider them old-fashioned.

NOTICE RE NOTICES

Students are reminded that information for coming up and today is to be in The Varsity office before four o'clock on the day prior to publication. The forms to be filled out with name of organization, place, time and date, as well as date of issue, are to be found in The Varsity News Office, room 78, basement of University College.

CUP EDITORIAL

On Government

Do you know what this country really needs? No, it's not a good five cent cigar, although that would be good in itself. What this country needs is a clue about how it is being governed, an idea of why the current issues are of importance, and exactly how these two are being carried out.

E. B. Jolliffe, Opposition Leader (C.C.F.) in the Ontario Legislature since 1942, met with the U. of Toronto Political Science Club a while ago, and without entering the field of political intrigue, he had some pretty straight talk to offer.

"Public apathy and indifference are replacing the barbaric methods and extreme views natural to political parties in the past," quotes The Varsity. "This public apathy arising from an unfounded sense of security constitutes the main danger to democracy." Then from these generalities, the news account becomes more specific.

"Democracy will only function perfectly when more people give more thought and more service to politics. The alternative forms of totalitarianism and autocracy are corrupt, wasteful, stupid and even less efficient than democracy. Democracy demands more from its beneficiaries than most Canadians are willing to give, as is witnessed in the pitifully small vote polled in Canadian elections, and the great difficulty of political parties to secure candidates."

Well, it was a very fine speech and since it was by a former U. of T. man and a Rhodes scholar it should be highly respected. The point to be considered is that could use some interest in the we are governed. That is what first paragraph is supposed mean.

Third In Series Of Concerts

For its third pair of subscription concerts last Tuesday and Wednesday, the Toronto Symphony Orchestra played a program consisting of the overture to Smetana's "The Bartered Bride," John Weinzweig's Divertiments for Oboe and Strings, Elgar's Enigma Variations and Brahms' Fourth Symphony.

In a program rather heavily loaded with lush-sounding nineteenth century music, the sparsely orchestrated, terse, little Divertimento by Weinzweig provided a welcome contrast. This, my third hearing of the work, convinced me that twelve tone music requires more than anything else familiarity with the piece in question for its enjoyment. Weinzweig's conception of harmony (and for that matter, of rhythm too) is often very different from what we commonly regard as normal and natural. But it takes a surprisingly short time to acccustom oneself to it, and to hear the music in what at first sounds like a bizarre, random juxtaposition of notes.

The second movement of work was the one I enjoyed mo Here, the solo oboe plays again an accompaniment of two viol and two viola parts. With the u of solo string players, pizzicat and harmonics, a surprising rang of color is obtained from very li ited resources. And in spite the atonality of the music the cou terpoint of this movement, with changing concords and discord makes a fascinating backgrou for the wistful melody of the obo

Throughout this work the obo soloist, Perry Bauman, played wi impeccable style and careful, na phrasing. The orchestra, too, u der the direction of Sir Erne MacMillan, showed that the ext two weeks they allowed them selves for the rehearsal of th work had been well spent.

Brahms' mighty fourth sy phony in E minor was given a dr matic, forceful presentation. the last movement—the pass caglia—Sir. Ernest's careful co trol of dynamics resulted in a f building to a climax at the po where the variation-form bri down, and Brahms introduces theme for the third time on full wind band, with kettledru and string accompaniment. stead of allowing this theme blaze forth at the very onset, conductor held the full force of orchestra in reserve until point. The concert closed with tragic splendor of this tremen dous climax.

By DAVE PEDDIE

The U.C. Players Guild are to be commended for their productions of Noah's Flood and Doctor Faustus last Wednesday night. They were both interesting and different and it is through an understanding of these plays that one can arrive at a better idea of drama.

Unfortunately the productions did not try fully enough to present the plays as they were done originally. Noah's Flood in particular is a narrative play and is addressed to the audience. All attempts at lighting only interrupt what should be a straight story. The cast and director, however, did capture the spontaneity of the play and it came off not too badly.

The main event though was Doctor Faustus, the story of the brilliant scholar who turns to magic and the Devil in order to satisfy his own ambition. For 24 years he enjoys all pleasures and powers before he is damned eternally.

FAUSTUS is a good play with some beautiful poetry, but it did not come across as it should. It was crying out for a less realistic production. The electrician was again overworked, and the frequent curtains only broke up a play that should flow. The Elizabethan theatre was in the open air, and was much more stagey — theatrical — than our own theatre. Marlowe wrote his plays to be acted in this manner and the realistic underplaying of the U.C. actors was out of place. The attempt to get atmosphere by dark lights was a waste, for it often seemed awkward and out of place. The atmosphere is in the lines; we get it if we listen. But if the stage is dark, we spend too much time looking for Faustus.

As to the staginess of Elizabethan drama (many people will remember the opening of Olivier's Henry V) the acting must be large in gesture and voice. Marlowe is regarded as a master of rhetoric, and it is a shame when lines are not given rhetorically. Following from this point of view — most of the action should be on the front of the stage, and the scenes with Wagner should be played with the audience, much as a night-club comedian plays with his audience.

This, of course, all sounds very know-it-all, but since the play is to be performed again in Hart House Theatre early in January, it might be wise if John Hampson, who directed and played Dr. Faustus would consider these things. As the play stands now it is weak. We got a great deal from the lines for they were well spoken and verse is not easy. But, if Mr. Hampson could "suit the action to the word" the effect would be much more moving. Let me remind him that in spite of the waverings of conscience, Faustus has a hard heart and a well founded pride in himself, and these qualities were not too apparent.

Will Crichton as Mephistopheles was good and so was Walter Stanwick's Lucifer. I think the best scene was the one with the Seven Deadly Sins, but Lucier should have been more front and centre. Jack Sherrif as Wagner had the right idea and I think will improve.

All in all it was a good evening because the actors were interested in the show. That is, after all, half the battle.

coming in rapid succession to increase the lead to 52-41.

During the last three minutes the Blues waived their penalty shots to keep possession of the ball. They were very successful in that they allowed YMHA only one point. Dave Primeau, Ollie Mandryk and MacKenzie played good defensive ball for the Orphuns. Nick Yakomine was second to Stulac in the scoring with 13 points. Doug Kettle hooped 10.

In the second game Tri-Bells had no trouble in subduing East York. Jack Gray performed well for the Bells as did Johnny Braithewaite who is a very improved basketball player.

litical machine grinds into gear around the middle of this month. The timing has had to set ahead, but representations of the three national parties will start double clutching soon. The machinery will idle until after midyears when the green light will flash. The Student Political Association put the brakes on a rumor that a communist party would attempt to run. It was considered that it would be a purely farcical element in the body. With strong interest being shown by the "Big Three" parties, a bumper crop of political enthusiasm is expected.

The McGill Mock Parliament has lost interest, and the issues may be changed to include "more humorous and all inclusive topics . . . to give variety." To spur interest a shield will be presented to the first year college student who presents the best arguments on a stated topic. With the shield will go the honor of acting as "leader of the Government at the first Mock Parliament of the year."

So it is that we come to consider the political enthusiasm and the general interest that was shown by those who did not want to take a side when the Athenaeum Debating Society sponsored the Mock Parliament last year. The Parliament was well run and promises a spirited continuation this year. There is something that no citizen can overlook, and certainly no student should leave college without an idea of the political as well as the spiritual and cultural things that shape his everyday movements now and when the time comes when he must choose the leaders of his livelihood. That is what the first five paragraphs meant.

New Civilization —Baha'i Speaker

"The Bab (Gate), and Baha'u'llah (Glory of God) are the Twin Pillars of a new civilization which was inaugurated in 1844 by the declaration by the Bab of his unique station as a Manifestation of God," said Elizabeth Manser, IV Vic at the open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group yesterday.

"Is this a new utopia with its vague generalizations, ideals, ideas and sentiments? What will it do for us? Is it a strength or a force with power to combat the negative and pessimistic thinking of today?" These were the questions which Miss Manser proceeded to answer in the course of the meeting.

"Now is the beginning of a new Baha'i Civilization. It is actually being established now. Some of its institutions have already achieved a high degree of maturity. Others are in the process of formation. Why do we believe it will progress?"

"Every manifestation of God in the past, including Christ and Mohammed, has alone established a new civilization. People have been changed. Human nature has been changed. Each of these Faiths had something strong, vital and necessary—a renewal of Faith — which works. This power of renewed faith is evident in the development of the Christian religion from the words and life of one man to the spiritual enlightment of the whole of western civilization, and in the similar phenomenal influence of the Islamic Faith on European life following the coming of Mohammed and today upon the civilization of the Middle East.

"The Baha'i Faith is not just another step in the evolution of man. This is the day of the unity of man. Manifestations of God succeeding Baha'u'llah will be teaching to one world. Now, just over one hundred years since the advent of the Bab, men are universally beginning to acknowledge the validity of the Baha'i ideals. We are just now becoming able to see through our errors and prejudices".

Miss Manser continued by outlining the structure of the present Administration Order of the World Order of Baha'u'llah. The Baha'i Nineteen Day Feasts were explained as the institution through which the Local Spiritual Assemblies of the Baha'is discuss community problems of teaching and administration, in which the members of the Baha'i Community come to know one another so that their elections may be both spiritually and rationally based.

The speaker described the real struggle in the world today as the convulsions of a dying civilization with the birth-pangs of the new being endured at the same time. Realizing the difficulty of envisioning the new society with all of the Divine principles in operation Miss Manser suggested that the foundations have already been established and that the "Baha'i system offers growth and opportunity to serve in the concrete, positive and united effort of an expanding world-wide community."

Varsity Defeats YMHA Stulac Nets 22 Points

Overtake Opponents In Second Half Surge

By BOB GODSON

The Varsity Orphuns, taking advantage of their superior condition, came from behind in the second half last night at Hart House to outlast a fighting YMHA club 57 to 42. The Baby Blues broke the game wide open in that second half, led by the sensational shooting of freshman George Stulac who netted 22 points for the game's best individual performance.

Leading 26 to 24 at the half, YMHA found themselves outhustled as they started the third period. Coach Dalt White of the Orphuns predicted a hundred percent improvement in his club as soon as the players get to know each other better.

It was a surprisingly good game for the first game of the season with the play rough and exciting.

The teams seemed to be feeling each other out in the first half with many shots either rimming or completely missing the basket. With 6 minutes remaining in the first half, however, play started to pick up with the score tied 17 all, as Stulac and Nick Yakomin began to find the range. YMHA however took advantage of the breaks and leaped into a 24-20 lead in the closing minutes. It was then that newcomer Doug Kettle of Varsity made his best play of the night when he stole the ball, pivoted, and sank a beautiful hook shot. Willie Silverman sank two foul shots to end the half with YMHA ahead by two points.

Bob Milne played a good defensive game for Varsity and he hooped a nice hook shot to tie up the game 28 all early in the third quarter. Kettle showed a lot of finesse and covered a lot of ground in leading the Blues to a 38-33 lead at three quarter time.

George Stulac, last year's runner up in the TSSAA scoring race, took personal charge in sewing up the game in the last quarter for the Orphuns. He scored 12 points within ten minutes, his last three baskets

UC, Dentists Play To 1-1 Tie Soccer Playoff

In the soccer playoff game on the back campus yesterday, U.C. and Dents played to a one-all tie. It was a well played game, with some good passing and fancy footwork, but after full time plus four overtime periods it slowed down notably.

It started with U.C. driving very hard and keeping the play in the Dents' end of the field, but the Dents' fullbacks didn't allow them any shots. From then on, the play was confined to the middle of the field with neither team having an edge, until Ed Fast worked his way to the U.C. goal and shot a hard drive which hit the top of the goal, bounced on the ground and then rolled off the field. Dents claimed that it bounced inside the goal area, and though U.C. protested the referee declared it a goal. The decision seemed right though his ability to see the play from where he was standing is questionable. Anyway the score was 1-0 against U.C. and though they tried very hard for the rest of the half, that is the way things stood at half time.

After the rest, U.C. came back very strongly and had the Dents' goalie working overtime. Finally Dalnoki evened things up on a pass from Mackenzie, with a hard shot into the open corner. From there on U.C. seemed determined to go ahead in the scoring in a hurry, though but they came very close to scoring, the ball refused to go into the net. So the regulation time ran out with the score stlil 1-1.

The game went into overtime, but when after four overtime periods the score was still tied, the game was declared no contest. During the overtime the game practically slowed down to a walk, but still retained the qualities of a good soccer game. The artsmen retained a slight edge most of the time, yet couldn't make it pay off.

For U.C., Dalnoki and Mackenzie were the standouts, while for the Dentists, Ralph Hunt and John Tokiwa were very dangerous and almost succeeded in winning the game for Dents, while Forler backed them up with some very good defensive play.

Pitching Sportshoes

Hockey continued to dominate the Intramural sports action as three games were carded yesterday. In the most important tussle of the day, Vic III took a 4-1 decision over Forestry A's with a three goal outburst in the second period. Kirkwood was the big gun for the Scarlet and Gold as he fired two tallies, the others going to Taylor and Ivy. Ross scored for the Woodchoppers.

Trinity C and Dents B battled to a2-all saw-off in another hockey match, as the former came back from a one goal deficit at the end of the first period to tie the game. All the scoring in the game was done by two players. Ripley whipped in two for the Crumpeteers while Murdock netted a brace for the Molarmen.

The third game of the day saw Inst. Management whitewash SPS V 2-0. Ford and Weise were the marksmen for the winners.

In the lone lacrosse encounter of the day SPS III downed Vic II 4-1 by maintaining a goal a period pace. Kingston scored twice for the Engineers and others went to Clarke and Weiczorek. Hulbert saved his team from a shutout by driving one past the Skule netminder in the second session.

Volleyball action saw Pre-Med II year withstand a late rally by UC V to take a 15-3, 17-15 victory.

Joe Kane Back On Blue Defence

Opposing forwards take note! Keep your head up when checking in on Varsity's goal! This warning of course means that none other than "Crusher" Joe Kane has returned to the Blues' defence brigade. With a reputation for sending opposing forwards sprawling with cross-body blocks, Kane starts his third year with the senior team and should be an important factor in the Blues' championship hopes.

The ex-Oakwood collegian is one of the two hold-overs on defence this year along with Gerry Fitzhenry. In the 1950-51 season Kane piled up a total of 10 points and was second highest scoring defenceman in the league next to his partner Porky MacDougall. Those 10 points also meant that he was the fifth highest scorer on the Blues.

With the introduction of the "clipping" penalty last year many of Joe's famous dives at the puck-carrier had to be dispensed with. In his first year with the Blues he brought to mind many aspects associated with the old Bucko MacDonald style of play.

At present the 22-year-old athlete is engaged in the teaching profession at O.C.E. Besides hockey Joe has had an illustrious career in football which began at Oakwood where he played on the championship team of 1947. He then played three years for Balmy Beach and only retired from the east end team at the beginning of this year. He started this year's football season with the Cobourg Galloping Ghosts, last year's Intermediate champions, but quit the grid game when hockey practices started.

Besides being the team comic, Joe has the dubious distinction of having broken his proboscis approximately eight times.

Girls' Swim Competition

Instead of the usual Aqua Show, the U. of T. Women's Swimming Club has planned a programme that should interest all women swimmers. It will take the form of a competition in synchronized swimming to be held in Hart House in February. Teams will be formed from all those who sign up, with an eye toward equal distribution of experienced choreographers. Each team will plan its own music, routines, and costumes, and during a schedule of practices arranged at the Lillian Massey Pool, prepare themselves for the meet.

Since the aim of the Club is to interest and instruct as many women swimmers as possible in the art of water ballet, the emphasis is on fun rather than competition.

Skulemen On Top 2-0 Over Trying Parsons

Senior SPS grabbed a rung of the semi-final playoff ladder yesterday afternoon, when they defeated Knox College by two goals to nothing in their Intramural Soccer encounter. Knox, despite their loss, played an extremely fine game and at times appeared as if they were intent upon defeating the more confident Skulemen.

The Engineers enjoyed the better run of play in the first half, as the clergymen had to battle a strong cross-wind. The Engineers scored their first goal on a free kick awarded them at about twenty yards from the goal. A well-placed shot, somewhat to the right, gave netminder Bruce Herrod little chance. The game continued with a fair exchange of plays as the Knox forward line led assaults that were only nullified by the fine play of the Engineers' defence. The half ended with the Engineers leading 1 goal to nothing.

The second half opened with a spirited team wearing the blue and gold jerseys. For the first ten minutes they almost dominated play and soon settled to a defensive game. No sooner had they done this than the Clergymen were at their heels. A foul play in the penalty area led to the award of a penalty kick against Knox, and the tally sheet soon read two to nothing. A trying Knox team ended a fast and well-contested game. Skules' right wing was particularly effective, while bouquets must go to Carson McLaren playing at centre half for Knox, as he played the second half with a gr... enthusiasm despite a broken wrist, which resulted from a first half fou...

Speaking Of Sport

By DES BOULT

The Varsity's soccer observer views the Intramural soccer playoff picture.

Playoffs in the Intramural Soccer competition got underway at noon day before yesterday with St. Mike's handing out a 4-0 defeat to Architecture.

Soccer this season fell much below last year's standard, but did provide an interesting and speculative series. Victoria College, who has for a number of years provided two teams worthy of first rate mention ended the season without a single team in the playoffs. Trinity College showed the inestimable value of the Bermuda boys this year, by their conspicious absence, their first team merely ambling to a tie with Senior SPS for the second spot in the first loop, and dropping to the third spot on the result of a draw. UC ended the season with a team that must have surprised even the most optimistic supporter of the team, by clinching the first spot in the top loop. Architecture played extremely well to grab the lead of group four, and latch on to the playoff ladder.

St. Mike's team fell much below the form of its last year's squad, while the men from Knox took a lot out of the teams that were lucky enough to hold them off. Aside from showing a reasonable edge in the finer points of the game over quite a few teams in the competition, the team boasted eleven keen and enthusiastic players — something that few of the other teams can truthfully say. Both Emmanuel and Dents played spiritedly throughout the season, and should not be any walk-over for any team.

Playoffs continue next week, when UC meets Dents for a replay of yesterday's stalemate, and Trinity A encounters Emmanuel. St. Mike's plays the winner of the Dents-UC game on Wednesday, while SPS is slated to play the winner of the Trinity-Emmanuel game on either Tuesday or Wednesday next week. The finals should start on Friday.

Meds' Stand Clarified

Editor, The Varsity:

I should like to clarify the stand taken by the Medical Society Executive on the question of the Russian student delegation so as to avoid or dispell any misinterpretation of our position that may arise.

It is simply and clearly this: that a representative meeting of the Medical Society Assembly held on Nov. 6 in the Medical Board Room, Meds NFCUS representative Miss Dorothy Lieberman presented the following resolution: "That our (Medical Society) reply to NFCUS on the question of inviting Russian students to Canada be in the negative." Miss Lieberman urged that the economic considerations and the problem not enter into the discussion nor influence our decision.

A discussion followed in which the views pro and con were presented. The arguments for and against the question of inviting Russian students have been presented elsewhere. Our reasons were not significantly different.

The vote following the discussion was 12-4 in favor of the resolution.

John MacDonald,
Medical Public Relations Officer.

Lost Articles Are Collecting

University of Toronto students are rapidly losing a wide assortment of their belongings, the Superintendent's Office of Simcoe Hall reported today. Almost everything a student could possibly lose, including thirty raincoats, dozens of textbooks, and various fountain pens, motor rugs, eye-glasses and slide-rules, is stored in the Police Office in the basement of Simcoe Hall. This office is the eventual resting-place of all objects recovered on the University grounds.

However, the student who knows where he lost an object should get in touch with the caretaker of the building at once. The caretakers hold articles for several days before turning them over to the University Police. After that, they may be recovered from the Police Office, Room 16 in Simcoe Hall. Articles taken there are classified for safekeeping, and kept on file for a year, after which time they are disposed of by the S.A.C.

If an article bears the name of its owner, the person is immediately contacted.

FOR STAFF

Work Reward

Between ten and twelve people will be recipients of The Varsity Pins at The Varsity's Annual Banquet next March. These pins represent the reward for a lot of hard, consistent work throughout the year on the University of Toronto's campus newspaper.

The pins are about one-half inch in diameter and bear a blue V on a white porcelain background. Around the edge are enscribed the words "The Varsity — The Undergraduate Daily". Superimposed on the pin between the arms of the V is the crest of the University of Toronto.

The idea to give pins to the staff of The Varsity in recognition of their work originated in the Publications Committee of the Students' Administrative Council 13 years ago. Larry Smith, then Editor of The Varsity was the first to receive one of the pins.

When the award was first inaugurated in 1938, the recipient was given only the privilege of purchasing his pin. However, about four years ago the SAC took over the payment for the pins.

The Varsity Pins are awarded annually on the recommendation of the department heads of the Senior Masthead of The Varsity. The editor-in-chief has the final say about the awards.

Qualifications are strict. Consistent, outstanding work, responsibility and initiative are among the qualities looked for.

Anyone on The Varsity staff is eligible to win one of these pins, whether he or she is a news or feature writer, a reviewer of books, an art, music and drama critic, on the makeup staff, or a member of the masthead.

The Varsity Pin is becoming a familiar sight in Canadian newsrooms. Norm DePoe, news roundup editor for the CBC, Mark Harrison, Daily Star reporter who covered the royal tour, Jim Knight, associate editor of Canadian High News, and Wayne and Shuster of radio fame are among those who wear the Varsity Pins.

Medical Journal Troubles No Contributions, Cost Up

The decline in the contribution of student articles to the University of Toronto Medical Journal, and the rising cost of printing were discussed at a meeting of the Medical Society, in the Board Room of the Medical Building. Faculty and staff members, undergraduates of the Society took part in the discussion.

Editor, Marv Auerback, IV Meds, expressed dismay at the scarcity of student articles in the postwar years, and wondered if the Medical Journal was fulfilling its purpose as an instrument of student expression. He disagreed with the idea that students are not capable of writing scientific articles, and felt that the pressure of studies and exams is responsible for the lack of student contributions.

Auerback pointed out that the University Press has increased its rates by 13%, bringing the cost of publication up to $800 an issue. This means that six issues would cost $4,800.

The Journal is subsidized by the Medical Society to the extent of $2,000 advertising and graduate subscriptions account for an additional $2,300. Auerback proposed that either attempts be made to obtain reduced printing rates, and that the size of the journal be decreased. He felt that advertising rates and subscriptions could not be appreciably increased.

Dr. Feesby, Editor of the Ontario Medical Review and Editor of Modern Medicine felt that the U. of T. Medical Journal should be continued because of its tradition and high standards. He proposed that reduced rates be sought, and that an advertising agent be engaged.

Dr. Joslyn Rogers proposed that salesmanship and pressure be used to induce the students to write articles.

Dr. Haist, (Professor of Physiology) felt that the answer lay in organization for future years. He suggested a series of articles be run in the Journal on topics of interest.

Sydney L. Wax, President of the Medical Society moved that in view of the fact that the Society considers the Journal an instrument of student expression that reduced printing rates be sought in the near future. The motion was passed unanimously.

More Apathy!

Student apathy is a Dreadful Thing. Few people can be found who will deny such a statement. Yet, at the University of Toronto, with a little luck, we may be able to avoid it altogether.

The University of McGill seems to be accomplishing something along this line. A report carried in Tuesday's issue of The Varsity stated that apathy at McGill was at a low ebb. Very fine, indeed. Possibly we should consider how they were able to accomplish such a feat. The partial abolition or even decline in apathy is something which most club executives and organizers have been wanting to accomplish for a very long time.

We would suggest that the low ebb of apathy at McGill and the "No Activities Week" are very closely connected. All extra-curricular activities have been suspended for a whole week, beginning last Monday at the University of McGill. Small wonder, then, if student apathy fails to flourish in such an unflourishing climate. How, indeed, can we expect apathy to survive if we take away all the activities which cause it to?

In short, it is impossible to chastise apathetic students, if there is nothing to be apathetic about.

How then, can we do away with apathy at the University of Toronto? This is a very important question to which we will attempt to offer a few answers.

It would involve, we believe, the cancellation of a great many activities.

The Blue and White Society's Art Gallery Nite is much too well planned and interesting not to arouse a great deal of uninterest on the part of many students.

There has been entirely too much debating throughout the campus. It has been stimulating and for that reason has aroused a good deal of student apathy.

Again, the campus shows have descended on the campus like the measles. They are all over the place. Such an untoward outbreak of activity can hardly meet with anything but apathy.

Similarly with plays. Presentations such as the UC French Club's "Les Plaideurs" and Hart House Theatre's next choices, Fry's "A Phoenix Too Frequent" and "Boy with a Cart" should not be presented if we hope to avoid student indifference.

It is clear then, that desperate measures would need to be taken to do away with student apathy. Only by dispensing with all activity could we ever hope to eradicate it entirely.

Possibly some activities or projects could be allowed to remain. The Radio Committee and even the Student Union Committee could be allowed to remain; surely they would not stimulate student apathy too much.

But, on our part, we would like to encourage student apathy — and enthusiastically. It indicates more clearly than anything else, that there is a certain amount of activity in a university. We call for more student apathy. We cannot have enough.

French Canadians

Towards Unity

The writer is President of the Students Administrative Council at the U. of T.; in addition to this he is the International Activities Chairman (IAC) of the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS).

By SYDNEY WAX

An interesting and historical development has been the intensive growth of higher educational facilities in the French Canadian Universities. The remarkable progress made in the organization of the University of Montreal and the bold vision of the projected new $10,000,000 campus of the University of Laval are but two examples of the vigorous growth.

With the increase of these facilities the proportion of French Canadian university students has steadily increased. Today the representatives of these colleges are seen at almost every student meeting and their voices are being heard in the councils of Canadian student government.

There can be no doubt in the minds of any serious group that this development carries with it great potentialities for the future.

There has been great alarm voiced in many circles at what is believed to be an ever-widening gap between the French Canadians and the rest of Canada. This fear has been based on misunderstanding, prejudice and ignorance. There is great need for clear, honest thinking on the future relations between the peoples of Quebec and ourselves.

The emergence of a large group of students carrying with them the hopes of their people for the development and future of French Canada offers to us the challenge to use these opportunities to develop a deep and understanding bond of friendship with our French Canadian brothers. Even more challenging is the realization that this friendship will budge not only the gaps of different cultural heritages but also, open the door to religious tolerance and understanding.

The more one considers the possibilities inherent in this idea the more one comes to realize that here is an approach worthy of the sincerest consideration. As trite as it may sound, there can be no denying that from this group of French speaking students will emerge the political and cultural leaders of the French Canadian community. Here is presented the opportunity to break down the barriers of distrust, ignorance and prejudice.

How can these ideas be converted into actual vehicles of action? The answer lies in using every opportunity possible to widen the scope of our relations with French Canadian students. We should ensure that they participate in every venture of the Canadian student body. Every office of student government must be open to their students who possess the calibre to do the job. We must even encourage the extension of our activities to bring us closer to our French Canadian colleagues. We must seek to meet with them by arranging student visits and the holding of joint projects. We should ensure that all functions on our campi extend a welcome note to the campi in the French Canadian community. If we can ensure a steady stream of exchanges between our colleges and if this stream includes not only sound but also, cultural and academic programs, then the idea has taken root.

Who shall benefit from the vigorous attempt at understanding and friendship? The answer is not the student community alone, but Canada itself. If we grow strong in the knowledge of our new faith in each other — then Canada has grown stronger. If we grow strong in the realization that the barriers of different cultural backgrounds are crumbling, then Canada grows strong as well. And if we grow resolute in the strength that comes from the destruction of religious hates and prejudices then our country grows resolute as well.

The greatness of Canada lies not only in the hands and hearts of its citizens but in their minds and vision. The frontiers of Canada lie now in the man-made unknowns of our own misunderstandings and fears. This land can only be as great as the vision of its people. The future of Canada is dependent on the unity of its people. As members of the university community we can make our humble contribution to this great idea.

There is a challenge in the possibilities of new and greater friendship between the French Canadian students and ourselves. We must work unselfishly to achieve the ends of this common goal.

"May I help you?" asked the bright young thing on the other side of the counter. She had the largest brown eyes but they insisted on gazing at the bookstand just behind my back.

"Yes", I replied, "I want a copy of Micmack's 'Nicknacks of the Ancient World'—it's a required text."

"Just a moment and I'll see", she said, shifting her attention to a big brawny type in his gym shorts passing by outside, and then disappeared into one of those long slots worth their weight in gold because of the books they contain.

Time passes slowly in a bookstore. I had got down to reading discarded sales slips before she got back.

"I'm sorry, but that book isn't in right now," she monotoned. This time I'd swear she was passing on the information to the Library building out the other window. I was beginning to get the uncomfortable feeling that I was an eavesdropper.

"Oh, well, when will it be in again?"

"I don't know but they have been ordered." She made a minute scrutiny of a crack on the counter.

"Can you give me an idea—just very roughly?"

"No I can't tell but they have been ordered." Now the retreating ankles of a co-ed grasped her attention.

"Well, can you tell how long they usually take?"

"No I can't, but they have been ordered." The ceiling lights this time.

"How long ago was it when they were ordered?" By now I was determined to see whether the law of averages and sheer elimination of other objects would finally bring her around to giving me a glance. Not that I am proud at all, but I did want to be sure I was the person she was having a conversation with. She could have been a medium for all I knew; the Bookstore does provide a wide variety of services you know.

"I don't know, but they have been ordered." I had lost out to a scratch in her nail polish.

I gave up then, found my way out of the bookstore and caught myself looking for a friendly motorbike or stray alley-cat to have a good solid conversation with.

Radio Different Not For Mailer Says Sandwell

Editor, The Varsity:

I find it a little embarrassing to be coupled with Mr. Jack Gonzales in your editorial of November 21 as having "a desire to limit free speech". From this letter I rather think that Mr. Gonzales would like to limit free speech in any method of communication, including the printed word and the public meeting. I am merely doubtful of the wisdom of unlimited free speech by radio, which is surely a rather different thing. Radio has certain special characteristics which differentiate it from all methods of communications "The Naked and the Dead" is in many ways an admirable novel, and like you I should violently oppose any attempt to suppress its distribution in Canada. But I should question the wisdom of any broadcasting authority which undertook to have it read over the air.

B. K. Sandwell.

In this scene from Christopher Fry's THE BOY WITH A CART, the neighbor women bring to Cuthman the news of his father's death. The players involved are Stephanie Parker, Lenore Canton, Meg McFadzen and Martin Hunter. The play is under the direction of Robert Gill, and will appear as half of a double bill of Fry one-acts, the other being A PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT. The double bill opens an eight-night run at Hart House Theatre on Friday, November 30th.

Football Parking Saturday Helps Asian Aid Campaign

The parking lots operated by Student Help for Asian Relief and Education for last Saturday's Grey Cup game are expected to net around $400, according to Tim Armstrong, II Vic, chairman of the campaign.

Armstrong reported that everyone co-operated with the students who collected 50 cents from each car. Several owners of small English cars felt that they should park at a reduced rate, but finally paid their half dollar. Most drivers were glad to be able to park so close to the stadium, he said.

Each Faculty and College representative on the Students' Administrative Council was asked to get four students to help with the parking lots, and as a result there were students from practically every faculty working on Saturday afternoon. Some started work at 10 a.m. when they took over the barricades blocking off the front campus. The Grey Cup Float Parade broke up on the front campus around noon, and with the help of the police the parking area was cleared well before game time.

Last year All Varsity Aid collected $500 in a combined parking and tagging scheme on the Grey Cup day. This Asian Aid campaign this year could not collect as much as they did not tag and could not use the Trinity back campus for parking because of the soft ground, Armstrong said.

So far around $375 has been collected, with money to come from the four lots operated by the Womens' Athletic Association and by St. Mike's.

Denis Lane, II Vic, was nearly run over while parking cars on Little Vic field when he did not watch where he was going. Lane escaped with a slight shaking.

UN Club Asserts Interest In Peace

"As the late Will Rogers said, all I know is what I read in the papers", said United Nations Club President Roland de Corneille, Trin., speaking of the proposed amalgamation of the Peace Council with the UN Club.

"We have not yet received any official correspondence from the Council," he added, "since their executive only received a mandate on Thursday to open discussion with us. Some of our executive have been in touch with the Peace Council executive over the weekend and plans are being made to meet to discuss the resolution. Of course the U.N. Club executive would have to consult their membership which is now over one hundred, before any definite steps could be taken."

Commenting on the statement by last year's Peace Council President, that peace is "only a part of the UN Club's interest," Bud Trivett, Law II, Publicity Director of the UN Club denied the validity of this argument. He pointed to the words of the statement of aims of the UN made at San Francisco where the signatory powers "determined to save succeeding generations from the scourge of war . . . and for these ends to unite our strength to maintain international peace and security . . . and to accomplish these aims . . . do hereby establish . . . the United Nations."

"This statement is clear, concise and to the point," he continued. "It leaves no doubts in the readers' minds that the UN is organized to ensure peace. The method of establishing such peace is to be through tolerance, understanding and co-operation and not through indoctrination of a particular creed. This is where the UN Club comes in. It is organized to study the aims, problems and methods of the UN." he emphasized. "By studying the problems and the opinions of member nations, we gain understanding and learn to practice tolerance. It would appear that the Peace Council could do no more than the UN Club is doing today."

DEBATE TRIALS

All campus debaters are eligible to debate in the trials for the Scottish Tour being held in Brennan Hall at St. Mike's from 4 to 6 p.m. today. The topic is: Resolved that the Iranian government was justified in nationalizing the Iran oil industry.

"Hams" Discuss Defence

Last Thursday night the Hart House Amateur Radio Club held its first open meeting. The speaker was Mr. W. F. Choat, (VE3IL) co-ordinator for Toronto district amateur radio emergency communications. Mr. Choat first gave a history of amateur radio in its early days, recalling many of his own experiences. Then, after pointing out that hams, as amateur radio operators are frequently called, had to justify their existence in order to retain their assigned wavebands, he discussed one of the most important phases of amateur actively today—civil defence.

He stated that in cases of emergency hams had already proved their worth, but that prior organization is essential.

If existing commercial circuits were still operative, they would certainly be badly overloaded, and amateur circuits would carry the overload. If the existing circuits were unserviceable, amateur radio might well be the only available communication civil defence organizations would be almost paralyzed.

In answer to questions, Mr. Choat stated that many more hams were needed in the civil defence organization. He also mentioned that hams had been warned by the government to be careful of what they said to hams in "Iron Curtain countries," as these hams are forced to operate and to turn over any information that they receive to their governments.

It was announced that the Club's code and theory classes will start very soon. Anyone wishing to participate, either as a student or instructor was asked to leave a time table showing his spare time, and what courses he wishes to take, with the graduate secretary's office in Hart House.

It was also stated that the club's station, VE3BPD, is expected to be on the air again soon, with a new transmitter (75 watts).

Cowboys . . . With Horses

On Saturday another parade came through the University while students were still in classrooms or labs. However, this one was different from the Santa Claus parade. The Grey Cup float parade broke up on the front campus.

Several students wondered what the parade would do when it reached the barricade under the bridge, but nothing could stop the swarms from Ottawa, Regina and Balmy Beach as they swept past the guards.

Most of the floats were low, green ones from Regina carrying a sign saying that some small field in the Queen City of the west got a tarp in 2½ days while it took Varsity several years. However, behind this float marched the men from the Blue and White Society, carrying their tarp to show that the West hasn't everything.

There were several herds of horses in this parade, most of which were allowed to run loose on the front campus. One student felt that this would play havoc with the soccer games on Monday.

A large Canadian soft drink company had a float containing a small sign and several hundred bottles of its products. This float practically disappeared when it stopped in front of Convocation Hall.

However there was one big disappointment for the men who waited on the front campus for the parade to come. Miss America never arrived.

Michigan, Ohio

Band Rivalry

By JERRY BROWN

Twenty-five weary Blue and White bandsmen arrived in Toronto last night after a weekend at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbour. They saw: Michigan beat Ohio State; the renowned Ohio State and Michigan Marching Bands; Yost Stadium in Ann Arbour filled with 95,000 football fans; and one of the most up-to-date and beautiful camps in the States.

Of the Michigan band they were unanimous in their praise. "It was great entertainment and their marching rivaled the game in interest," stated Jim Guthro, Director of the Blue and White Band. The afternoon was like a "Roman Carnival brought up to date", he added.

The efforts of the two bands were intensified because there has been a long-standing rivalry between them as there has been the two football teams. Instead of entering the field at the usual killing pace of 180 paces a minute, both bands were doing about 200 paces a minute, which is a little over three paces a second.

The test came at half time as both teams tried to outdo the other in intricate and novel formations. Michigan's efforts were spectacular as they marched on in a steamboat formation to the tune of "There's No Business Like Show Business". They "floated" down the field to the strain of "Old Man River", formed into a bow and arrow, and as they broke into "Indian Love Call" the arrow was "shot" down the field. The arrow then reversed its direction and pierced the heart which had meanwhile reformed from the bow.

The next part of their show was a gigantic soldier which "marched" down the field. The legs of the soldier crossed and recrossed to the tune of "This is the Army Mr. Jones" as it proceeded downfield.

The climax was a "marchdance" as the band played "Begin the Beguine". Their adaptation of Cole Porter's old favorite wa sa piece of musical and marching wizardry.

The game was a new and interesting spectacle to most of the Blue and White Band. They were stationed right down on the field but were allowed to wander over to the stadium to get the best vantage point. The U. of M. which was the Rose Bowl champion last year put on a sterling defensive show to shutout the favoured Ohio State 7-0. A few of the things that seemed strange to the Canadians were the four down system, the lack of distance kicking and the distressing lack of female cheerleaders.

The Toronto bandsters, who were met at Detroit by a special bus, were taken to Ann Arbour where they were quartered in one of the newest and most modern dormitories in the continent. Each room was supplied with a phone and washbasin and each corridor composed of about ten rooms was supplied with an individual common room complete with modern furniture, and a piano.

Most of the Blue and White band members felt that the trip had been a success. The sight of the Michigan Band was worth the trip some of them thought, although one band member was heard to say, "I wouldn't have the gumption to go out and march like that."

Literature Of Jews Discussed

Last night Dr. Israel Knox, Professor of Philosophy at the University of the City of New York, spoke at the first lecture of the Hillel House Lecture Series. His topic was "Jewish Authors and Characters." The books he chose concerned Jewish topics, but not all the authors were Jews; he chose central episodes in these books to discuss.

The first book he chose was one of Franz Werfel's earlier works, "Hearken Unto the Voice." The first two chapters are too literal, but the descriptions of Palestine are unique in their grandeur, said Dr. Knox. He then preceeded to discuss the incident from which the book takes its title. The prophet Jeremiah asked King Zedekiah to release all the slaves as it was the Sabbatical year. Zedekiah was at war, however, and was afraid to enrage his war lords, whereupon Jeremiah cried, "Zedekiah, you think you are arguing with me, the tongue and the lips are mine, but the voice is the voice of God." Dr. Knox claimed that this may be regarded as an ethical representation of what is best. Of course we must differentiate between the voices of God and the Devil, for example in secular philosophy — Gandhi and Roosevelt being the voices of God, and Hitler the voice of the devil.

Dr. Knox also discussed one of Sholen Asch's earlier books, "Kiddush Ashem," dealing with Jewish community life in the seventeenth century. During the wars between the Cossacks and the Poles in Europe, a few people underwent humiliation to obtain a synagogue for their people, but these people felt the pain was irrelevant and did not feel it physically.

The third book he chose was Joseph Opotashi's "When Paland Fell." "These stories deal with the psychological resonance that is brought forth in everyone by suffering," said Dr. Knox. Dr. Knox's point was that, although millions of Jews who perished in the death chambers were not given the choice of fleeing to safety, but died without a choice, they should still be considered martyrs, for it is the total life of the man that counts, not the way in which he spent the last few minutes of his life.

The fourth book he chose was Maurice Samuel's "The World of Sholom Aleichem." The book is written as a novel, but the characters are all taken from Sholom Aleichem, the master wit. "This book," said Dr. Knox, "gives every Jew who reads it a feeling of spiritual belonging."

Campus Profile

Dr. Etienne Gilson

By PEARL PARNES

"I like detective stories. Peter Cheyney's death was a great loss to the world of the intellect. He was a great metaphysician." Dr. Etienne Gilson's eyes twinkled.

This professor, who has lectured at most of the great universities of the world, is one of the foremost philosophers living today. At present he is director of the Institute of Medieval Studies at Toronto, the only one of its kind in the world, and Professor of the History of Medieval Philosophy at St. Michael's College.

A recent "Who's Who" cited Prof. Gilson as "the first Canadian to be chosen as Gifford lecturer at the University of Aberdeen". He beamed when told about it. "I certainly won't protest. I'm here for good now." Paris has first claim on his birth, however, and she has recognized his genius by all sorts of awards. He was created Chevalier, Legion of Honour, in 1935 (a citation comparable to the British knighthood), and is a member of the French Academy.

Serving as an officer in the French Army, and later a prisoner of war, was not sufficient for Prof. Gilson. Following the first World War, despite all the warnings of his friends, the French government, and the insurance companies that refused to insure him, he joined the Nansen Relief Committee for Russia. For six weeks he distributed food and tried to relieve the needs of starving Russian children.

"It was a time of dreadful famine and drought. Children were dying everywhere. The schools were empty except for dead children. War itself is not as bad."

In 1928, St. Michael's College wanted to organize an institute to study the Christian civilization of the Middle Ages under all its various aspects, literature, art, theology, philosophy and social, political and economic problems. Prof. Gilson was approached, thought it was a magnificent idea, and came out to help.

Editions of works by such giants as St. Thomas Aquinas and St. Augustine are prepared by the Institute, many of which are used by students as textbooks.

"We would publish more if we had the money," is Prof. Gilson's only complaint. "We have the brains. All we need is financial support. It is easier to get money for a swimming pool than a scholarly book."

Professor Gilson admitted that it would probably be easier to get the money in Europe, particularly because of cheaper publication costs.

"There is an old tradition of scholarship in Europe. But I take strong exception to the view that the emphasis on this side of the water is on the material. True, the material side of life is better organized here than in Europe, but the interest in the other realm of life is lively."

Intellectually, the European range of interest is wider, Prof. Gilson mused. "But socially speaking, the Canadian or American is more developed, particularly in such things are organizing meetings and conferences". The education tradition of the Old Country is "the best way to spare the child is to make him learn as much as possible as soon as possible." Latin grammar is often taught in one week. Then, basic education over, specific training can be begun, usually at the age when we here are only getting "warmed up."

The geographical situation of Europe is one of the prime factors for the apparently narrower intellectual range in the Americas. "I have a small radio in Paris. With it I can listen to London, Rome, Prague. Here, probably because of my bad radio, I can't even get Montreal. Europeans can learn and hear important things without the slightest effort. Here broadcasters work on the assumption that people are stupid and interested in stupidities. This is not true. Good jazz makes fine listening, but enough is enough." He stressed the need for the University to use radio to enlarge its field of activity, to teach every province and person in Canada.

This one-time professor at Paris, Rome, Oxford, Cambridge, almost ad infinitum, really is sincere in liking good jazz. His main "hobby" is to work; rivalling this is listening to music. "Fortunately for my contemporaries," he chuckled, "I play nothing myself. But I despise no music, if well-played and honestly written."

It was most encouraging to hear a man who looks like a witty, amiable friend of the Family (his own family includes an artist, a social worker, and a philosopher, Jr.), but who undoubtedly possesses one of the finest minds working today, stress the over-all importance of the study of philosophy. "It gives a general culture and keenness of mind taught by nothing else."

He had some interesting comments on the place of women among the greats in any field. "There has never been a truly great woman painter, philosopher or musician. Many have been good, but there has been no Mozart or Michelangelo so far. But there is no evidence that creation on the highest possible level is not possible for them."

And the mature and brilliant philosopher has some advice for students in his own field. "Don't mistrust yourselves. Work — philosophy has to be learned. And then, wait until you are forty years old to know if you have a personal philosophical life and ideas."

Campus Show

Dentantics

By JACK GRAY

This has not been a good year for campus shows. Both Vic and UC missed the boat, and Skule Nite was a sad, sad affair. It was a pleasant surprise on Saturday night to see a small faculty present what certainly takes the ribbon for the most entertaining campus show this year.

The 32nd Annual production of Dentantics was not a polished show. It was hardly original. And like most amateur productions it had a bushel of faults. It had a slow, leisurely pace which infuriated me from time to time (pauses between numbers, for example). I still think that show orchestras shouldn't sound like dance bands — and should complement a show rather than be a power unto themselves. I feel cheated by skits like Football Hero which stand (and fall) entirely on one joke. And while I understand that the show I saw on Saturday night had already been streamlined by a generous jettisoning of excess material, the blue pencil could still have been used to advantage. The singing chorus and I suffered through a rendition of You Are: they couldn't keep up the front of being a chorus — I was asked to sit still by people sitting near me.

I could go on and on in this fashion. Why then, with all its faults, was Dentantics the year's most entertaining show? The answer to that is probably that it used its talent to advantage, and kept within the limits of that talent. A good example of this was the chorus line. These girls won't win any dancing or beauty contests — but their routine was simple, one they could handle. Even the fact that they didn't keep in step with each other from time to time was forgotten because they had life, they smiled, and they looked as if they were having a good time.

Queen's Park Capers, the number in which I squirmed through the singing chorus, and was cheered up by the dancing chorus, had another act I thoroughly enjoyed. Joan Britten gets the title of The Girl With The Most Expressive Legs for her opus with Bill Dover on a park bench. There was no dialogue in Queen's Park Capers, just delightful nonsense like Miss Britten and her legs.

Dave Engle's Pantomime was fun, but too long.

Ordinarily the laymen in an audience (like me in a Dentantics show) is left pretty cold by take-offs on professors. Whoever was responsible for A Bit Off the Mesial or The Root Has No Character managed to write a skit that apparently did its job as far as professors are concerned. More important though — it also managed to be very funny to the uninitiated. Much of the credit goes to John Armitage's presentation of Dr. Jackson.

Tennessee Williams has reached a point in his theatrical development where people are beginning to take him pleasantly to pieces in small campus shows. Dentantics' more or less cleaned up version of Streetcar was loosely written, and ultimately unsuccessful, but in spite of this it was often funny. Particularly good here were Dave Engle as Stan and Julie Sherman as Stella. Bill Dover's Mitch was effective. Blanche was played by Ruth Tolman. The skit incidentally, was called Death of a Streetcar.

Littler Than Little Egypt used the old business of clumsy male dancers. It was very entertaining — the dance by Statue Frances Findlay was perhaps a little long, but the business carried on by the male dancers kept the number moving.

I like Dentantics of 1951. Its sets weren't as good as other shows this year. It had no outstanding highlights such as each of the other shows had. Its music wasn't original (but was well presented by arranger Howard Hasenpflug). It had no machines, no elaborate production members, no really startling staging.

But Director Mai Yasny and those who helped produce Dentantics gave us something that none of the other campus shows was able to produce — a standard level of performance maintained (with a couple of glaring exceptions) from beginning to end. That standard may not have been terribly high, but it was at the level where entertainment

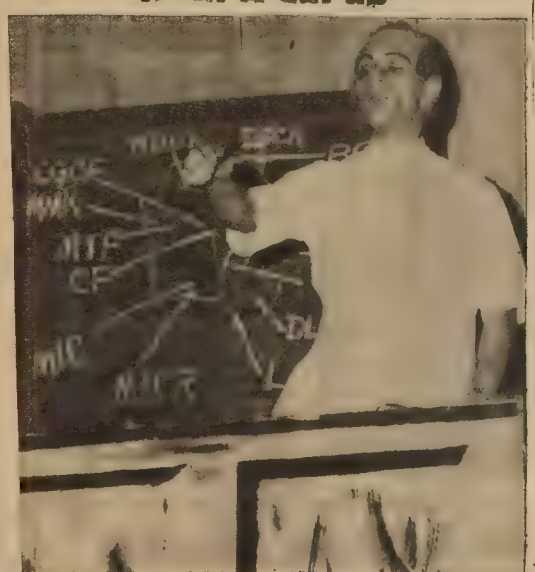
Alta Alumni Stay Home

Edmonton (CUP) — An editorial following the Homeco[illegible] end at the Universi[illegible] lashed out at [illegible] poor showing, described as a "colossal snub" co[illegible] and money expended for the event by the students. "Graduates never give the university a thought after they get their sheepskin," the editorial exclaimed.

"If the students of this university never put on an affair for the alumni again, that will be just one million years too soon," the editorial concluded.

Hambourg and Kresz

The first in a series of chamber music concerts was presented Saturday afternoon by the Kresz Hambourg Trio in the Museum Theatre. Many university students, too well acquainted with the "dead" acoustics of this theatre, will be surprised that anyone would choose it for holding a concert. Chamber music, however, seems to thrive there — the very deadness that is so annoying in lectures and theatrical productions gives an impression of intimacy to be had in few real concert halls.



The program consisted of works in three different styles. A Trio by Haydn represented the late eighteenth century, when trios were virtually piano sonatas with violin and cello accompaniment. The Trio No. 5, Op. 70, No. 2, was a fine example of Beethoven's mature style, with its return to independent part writing and its profound emotional content. And a contemporary Trio-Serenade by the young Toronto composer, Paul McIntyre showed one of the modern solutions to the problem of writing for this combination — in effect, not writing for the instruments in combination at all, but letting them accompany each other in turn.

The Beethoven trio, the final work on the program, is in very regular form, and superficially shows little of its significance as a record of human emotion. The performers, who had evidently thought very carefully about it, gave a special emphasis to those aspects of its structure which reveal its emotional depth. In the third movement particularly, the middle section of the minuet, with its wierd shifts to distant keys, was given a performance that was spine-tingling in its intensity.

The technical difficulties of this work, which Boris Hambourg mentioned in his introduction, were successfully overcome for the most part. The Kresz-Hambourg Trio have set a high standard for what promises to be an interesting series of concerts.

Short column today — crowded out. But big thing is that THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE opens at the Loews' Uptown today. John Huston (Treasure of Sierra Madre, Asphalt Jungle, Key Largo) directed this adaptation of the Stephen Crane novel. Said to be "one of the best war movies made."

All those fussy about films should go see THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE now while it is playing at the Uptown.

Helpful Hints

Our intinerant shopper has come up with a few suggestions to make life for the men around more endurable from this new breed of female executive types and bosses.

A local merchant has come up with a mixture of flesh coloured mud. Apply it to the face and it would be impossible to recognize the difference. It can be used to assume an expression of aloof disdain or mock heroic that will reduce her to submissiveness.

Instructions explain how to create seven different expressions but suggest that imagination be used to suit the face to the problem female. By the pound $5.95, and guaranteed results.

The Bookshop Around the Corner is offering, during Man's Week, a special reduction on Jenni-Miah Lodestone's reprint of the series of lectures she gave recently over the radio entitled "The Magnetism of Male Mentality"—or "Give that Bureaucratic Baby the Business Where It Counts and You Can't Go Wrong." It is the main issue of a campaign by the "League For the Supremacy of Women in Business, Politics and Love," which has protested to the radio network for sponsoring the talks, and accusing it of trying to perpetuate the old order, and recommending censorship.

Shapely and understanding, Miss Lodestone will also autograph her book next Femsday in her back room. This will be necessary because it has been reported that the League will picket her boudoir on that day.

Here's a Doll of interest to all men. She's selling like hotcakes all over town. Enclosed in a beautiful frame, almost as real as life, and living up to its ad as being as "soft and as pink as a nursery," this doll is making life worth living for scores of males.

Talk to her and she drinks in every word, ecstatic over your pearly gems. She sings, she dances, she never questions your wisdom. She works like magic. Meek and helpless she looks up to her possessor with dewy eyes, searching for protection.

Obedient and serviceable, she comes in—sizes and shapes to suit all male needs. Cost is soaring on this item as supply disappears fast. Get yours now.

But watch out. Be sure to get the right label. Producers have been putting facsimiles on the market that have been known to backfire as short as two weeks after you take possession.

The Very Latest Things In Male Campus Modes

Men's styles for campus wear are becoming more and more important, as male students leave the dull field of student activities to the women, and immerse themselves in escapist fantasies.

One of the more chic items this year, for the athletic type, might be called two-tone. The windbreaker is an adorable shade of purple, and the strides black gabardine. These colors match perfectly with any bruises and black eyes a sportsman may be parading.

The trousers are caught up gracefully at both ends, at the bottom by midget cuffs, at the top by a belt, with buckle at back. The overall effect can be heightened by the inclusion of a pair of shoulder pads under the windbreaker.

And then the whole question of Russian students coming over to our campus has brought out another style a la "subversif". The highlights of the outfit are a tall, wide-brimmed hat of fawn felt, and matching trench coat, lined with three pairs of heavily-filled pockets. Knee-length cossack boots, ruched at the top, complete the ensemble. Accessories include a 6-inch beard (preferably black), and horn-rimmed dark glasses.

For the art set, a Continental mode is "de rigeur." This charming outfit is set off by a baby blue beret (set at just the right angle), a pinky silk scarf, a pea green turtle necked sweater. The Swiss corduroy shorts must reveal just enough of the knees to achieve the proper effect. And to top the whole thing off, there is a pair of open-toed sandals, designed for all the comfort in the world.

Perenially fashionable is the costume achieved by the more stylish of the male cheerleaders. This outfit is all blue and white, with just the right contrast given by the grass stains at the knees. By deliberately not pressing or creasing the white ducks, you can achieve one of the most outstanding fashion effects ever seen.

A dashing effect can be achieved by catching the ducks at the waist with, of all things, police brand suspenders. Of course these will be nearly all covered with the heavy white wool sweater with its big blue T, but just enough to catch red should peak through to catch the eye. The costume is completed by a Varsity bloop, and behind each ear, a tweeper.

Paper patterns of the costumes described above may be obtained by a letter to the Male Fashion Editor of The Varsity. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a Campus Cat or Letter to the Editor.

Professor Birdcall of the Anthropology department models the latest in academic gowns. This creation is the Doctor of Lechery gown to be worn next June at Commencement. The detachable sleeves may be used as laundry bags.

Recommended as ultra peachy by all those who should know, and prescribed by the Athletic Association as the official gym uniform for men students next year, the suit worn by the dandy above is presented here through the courtesy of Edward J. Proven and Company Limited, tailors to university men of discriminating taste. Note specially the vest pocket for hooking thumbs into. Posed by professional model.

SHAM Is Here For Male Aid

A new campaign has hit the campus. This one, in the now popular trend toward initials, is going to be called SHAM—Student Help for the Average Male.

No one is quite certain what the money which is raised by SHAM will be used for, but everyone agrees that something must be done to help the deplorable state of the average male student at Toronto.

One of the aims which has been suggested is the institution of a Hot Shower Club, in an attempt to keep at least part of Hart House inviolate from women. There are also plans to take over such key position as the editorship of The Varsity and Chairmanship of the Students' Council.

SHAM is also quite determined to fight the Student Union Project, since such a building would destroy the last shred of masculine superiority: the feeling that at least men can bar women from Hart House debates.

SHAM is not going to descend to such things as carnivals or shows to raise money; it feels it can stand on its own merits to raise the necessary funds. The appeal will be to the individual's intelligence.

The campaign starts immediately; donations will be received at The Varsity Office. And remember SHAM's slogan: "Back to the good old university days, when men were men, and women weren't."

Tasty Tennis Shoes

Good morning you dear gourmets one and all, here is your ever popular connoiseur of tasty tid-bits to bring you a few more timely tips on how to make your table not only look better but taste oh so much more delightful.

To begin with, most people have breakfast. As they say a change is as good as a rest so I think this scrumptious little recipe should do the trick.

Start with a big bowl, the bigger the better. Squeeze in one lemon; let rind follow, add three pinches of sugar, a pinch of this and a pinch of that; mix well. To this pour in 52 ozs. of Cognac (imported), 26 ozs. rum (Jamaican), 26 ozs. peach brandy (pitted). Beat resulting concoction until all foreign particles disappear. As this stands it is very useful around the house, floor cleaner, etc., but that is not the problem at hand. Just add one-half dozen pints of ale and you will have a real pick-you - up - and - throw - you - down-again. For any further information on this dish you may consult my free gigantic cook book on page 95 under Ol' Tennishoe.

Having survived breakfast and wishing something exciting for lunch you might try my own original Golden Heaven. First of all gather the following:

salt (pinch)
pepper (cup)
eggs (six) bread (sliced) catsup (bottled)
bacon (strips)

Cook and serve and you will see what I mean.

After such a substantial meal you will most likely feel like having only a light snack. My suggestion being

52 ozs. Cognac (imported)
26 ozs. rum
26 ozs. peach brandy (pitted)
1 lemon
pinch of sugar pinch of this pinch of that Shake well.

My God this stuff is

Since You Ask

Are you perplexed? Ill at ease? Do you feel like a fifth wheel when you take a girl out? If you have any of these perplexing problems, write to Gigolo Jim, care of The Varsity, for a prompt, understanding and foolproof way out of your situation.

Personal replies, if desired, will be sent in plain envelopes. Gigolo Jim respects YOUR confidence.

♥ ♥ ♥ ♥

Our first problem this week comes from a perplexed, ill at ease young man who signs himself simply: "Worried".

Dear Gigolo Jim: I am perplexed, ill at ease and I often feel like a fifth wheel when I'm out with a girl. I feel ill at ease, in fact, whenever I'm out. Let me give you some examples:

When I'm in a crowded street car, I rarely have trouble finding a seat. Even on the Wellesley bus I rarely have trouble finding a seat. People shy away from me, to the extent that a little cleared space is always left around me. Not only am I able to get a seat, I get a double seat. No one will sit beside me.

And when I'm in a car on a long trip. As a rule I am made to drive, even though I do not possess a driver's licence, while everyone else, sometimes ten or twelve of them, crowd into the back seat. "We want to give you enough room to signal turns," they explain, although they know I never open the windows. On several occasions, I have been asked to stop the car, then kicked out on the side of the road. When this happens I don't get any explanation at all.

But I could have put up with these little idiosyncracies of my companions indefinitely, and it looked as if I may have had to. But one day I met a girl. Let me tell you about it.

It was high on a windy hill. I was wandering alone, as usual, through heath, gorse and heather out near Scarboro Bluffs. I struggled to the top of a little rise and the wind rose to almost cyclone force. Suddenly, I saw her.

She was everything I had ever hoped to find in a girl: hair, eyes, teeth, complexion. She had two of the prettiest legs I had ever seen, two alabaster arms, two laughing blue eyes, two, etc., etc.

The wind pressed her modish tweeds against her lithe, young body. She smiled; I smiled. She said "Hello". I stammered some inane reply. We chatted: the weather, the heather, the gorse, of course. Need I tell you, dear Gigolo Jim, that we made a date? We were to have dinner, just we two, at the Asbestos Grill, then on to a show at the Ace in downtown Toronto. Oh what a gay, mad, enchanting evening it was to have been.

But something happened. Some curse prevented her healthy outdoor personality from manfesting itself in the artificial glare of the cafe society's world, the world to which I desperately longed to belong.

She kept me at arm's distance, or a little more. She picked at her food in the Asbestos. She sat three rows down from me at the Ace. She insisted in taking the street car ahead of mine on the way home. And at once, she blew a kiss to me from her window. The window was closed. I never even got on the porch.

Gigolo Jim, what can I do? I don't mind walking 20 miles when my acquaintances kick me out of the car. I rather enjoy the power I have which enables me to get a seat on even the Wellesley bus. But Gigolo Jim (I'm not getting too familiar, am I?), I must know what is keeping Fermentia and I apart. Please tell me what I can do.

Worried,
III Pass.

Dear Worried:
Voids.

Dear Gigolo Jim:
What am I to do?

Signed,
Roger, IV Nursing

Dear Roger:
Never have I seen a letter which so poignantly expresses the true torment in the soul of a tender young man callously cast off by some designing woman after she has toyed with his easily-bruised emotions and had her way with him.

You must realize, though, Roger, that, the fault is partly your own. This vixen wouldn't have gone as far as she did if you didn't encourage her. No, Rogers, you must bear your shame. Perhaps some day you will find some understanding woman who will make an honest man of you, who will take the both of you to her heart and cherish you as her own. Have you spoken to the Better Business? They might be able to get you licenced.

OUR FRESHMEN

Meeting Girls

Last week we discussed in this column the problems involved in helping the freshmen become adapted to the faster life on the big campus. Too much emphasis cannot be placed on allowing the youngster plenty of time to become weaned away from his high school habits, many of which he might still consider to be "keen".

Today I would like to talk with you about the freshman and women. Any young fellow coming to Varsity can hardly escape meeting co-eds. Only the extremely shy spend all their time in the men's room.

Picking the right girl is a problem and should the freshman ask for advice you should accept the responsibility and help him make a wise choice.

Supposing he has to make a choice between three girls that he has met. June is soft and willowy and pliable—the kind of girl any fellow would be proud to take home to his father. Sheila is healthy, robust and has a Nash convertible . . . the kind of girl that he doesn't have to take home to meet father. And then there is George . . . any freshman who lost his glasses might have made a similar mistake.

If you laugh at the freshman and tell him that it is just puppy love, he may be hurt, deeply. And you should always remember that old dogs from young pups grow, or as the Hollywood starlet said: "It is just as well to have a wolf at the door if you want a mink in the cupboard."

I would like to close with the true story of Edgar and Mary. These two grew up alongside one another. When they were five years old they played together; when they were 15 they learned progressive games and had a wonderful time, and by the time they were 18 they had a deep understanding of each other's needs and wants. After a short engagement they were married and are one of the happiest couples that I know, with their 18 children.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Some 27,132 people watched the Grey Cup final at Varsity Stadium Saturday, according to the ticket wicket report. Besides these paid spectators, there must have been several hundred who hopped the fence or entered by other means, judging by the numbers occupying the aisles, and many others watched from various nearby buildings, until thrown out by the custodians of same. Meanwhile thousands milled around on the streets outside in the meagre hope of a ticket.

In spite of the fact that the game was played in Varsity Stadium, Varsity got only about 100 tickets from the CRU, and the Athletic Association's usual commitments were sliced drastically. Not even all the Association's staff got tickets. Needless to say, there was no sale or distribution among faculty or students.

Nevertheless, there apparently were enough, in spite of the great demand, to provide the members of the Athletic Directorate and the Senior Football team with two apiece. With tickets going at $30 a pair, it's very nice to have an extra one to scalp. Not many did sell, of course, but that did not make the distribution any more equitable.

In spite of annual reforms which promise to make the Grey Cup ticket situation fair to all, there does not seem to be much chance that this aim will be realized until football officialdom really wants it so. McMaster, with an enrolment about one quarter of Varsity's, got 400 tickets, we hear, and were able to hold a sale for the students.

The tickets were divided on a basis of 30% each for the Big Four, Western Big Four, and CRU, and 10% for the ORFU. McMaster got its block out of the ORFU share. The CRU divided its 30% among the Big Four (2000 to Toronto, 1000 each for Hamilton, Ottawa, and Montreal) and the West, with a few going to the Universities and other people and organizations connected with football.

The West, then, had about 8,000 tickets plus what they got from the CRU. About 1,000 people came down to see the game. Where did the other 7,000 tickets go?

Argos, according to President Bob Moran, got 2800 tickets to distribute among their 8,000 subscribers. This includes the 2,000 given them by the CRU, so their share from the Big Four, allowing for ducats for the team and exeuctives, could not have been much over 1,000. Where did other 7,000 go? The lion's share went to Hamilton and Ottawa, since they came out on top in the playoffs (though Argos tied them in league play).

It does not seem likely that many people came from out of town, either from the East or the West. The best that can be inferred from such a set-up is that Toronto fans got a pretty poor deal.

Blues Get Tie With West York Stevens, Conboy Net Two Each

By BARRY THOMAS

Led by two-goal efforts of Al Conboy and Red Stevens the hockey Blues managed to secure a 6-6 tie with West York Motors, in an exhibition game played last Friday night at Varsity Arena. With still 21 members on the Blues roster coach Bill Wade experimented with different combinations throughout the course of the game, which had its share of exciting hockey.

Save

A Varsity right winger fires a shot on the West York goalie which was cleared successfully, in Friday night's exhibition game.

The Blues led 2-1 at the end of the first period, trailed 3-2 at the end of the second and just managed to tie it up in the last two minutes of play on a shot by Stevens from the blue line, which the West York goalie never saw. The goal came from a so-called power play where centre Stevens was back on defence along side of Gerry Fitzhenry with the McKenzie-Rope-Conboy line up front. McKenzie won the face-off and flipped it to Rope who passed back to Stevens who sank the tying marker.

Jack McKenzie was the best man on the ice, and constantly bottled up the West York forwards besides leading many dangerous rushes himself. With many positions still in doubt, most of the players showed a lot of fight in their quest for regular berths on the team.

The Blues sported a different goalkeeper in all three periods. Doug Orr, Jack Ross, and Bruce Taylor divided the honours with Orr having the best record, allowing only one puck to get by him. Faced with a weaker defence this year, at the present time, Wade shuffled his rearguards in hopes of finding the right combinations. Fasane, Kane, Fitzhenry, Prendergast, Machin and Moreau took turn about on defence with Fitzhenry showing the best. Of the blue line brigade Paul Prendergast was the only one to score.

Jerry Henderson, who played with Jack Weldrake and Johnny Adams, was the other player to score for the Blues. Jerry, incidently, showed great improvement over his performance of last season, and this trio was the best for the locals in the first period.

In the second period the Stevens-Frey-Fox line looked good and missed scoring a couple of times only by the narrowest of margins. It was while Conboy was playing on a line with Pete Vernon and newcomer Gord Bennett, that he popped in his two goals in rapid succession to tie the score at five apiece. Both Vernon and Bennett drew assists on each goal.

Last Thursday saw the return of one of the Blues' high scorers of last season, when Phil Arrowsmith donned his skates for the first time this year. Just where coach Wade will use the veteran right winger is not known at this time as it will likely be at least a week before Phil will be able to get into good playing condition.

With considerable increase in offensive power, and probable decrease in defensive strength, the Blues' games will likely be of the high scoring variety this season. It seems at this early date that with a little more polish the Varsity entry should be able to maintain a reasonably firm grip on the intercollegiate silverware.

Four games were played on the intramural hockey scene Friday. UC lost to St. Mike's 4-3 in Group I. Trinity "A" took a close one from Jr. Vic. Russell and Steward scored for the winners and Holden counted for the Scarlet and Gold. SPS VII held the Vic Fourths scoreless in the first period but wilted in the second with Hauser, Passe and McCartney scoring to give Vic a 3-0 decision. Knox edged SPS VI on the strength of a pair of goals by Newcor.

In lacrosse, UC whipped Meds II 6-3. Longhouse and Young had two goals each for the Redmen Lawson and Watson added singles. St. Mike's "A" trounced Vic I, 7-1. Murphy was the big gun with four goals. Tallon got two and Morrison one.

Why Botherism

"Nothing succeeds like success," according to the old maxim, and undoubtedly this is as true of politics as anything else. But it is true only up to a point. And we suspect that the overwhelming success of the Conservatives in the Ontario elections passed far beyond it.

While such support must have been most gratifying for the victors, it may also have been a bit unnerving. For the Conservatives are in the uncomfortable position of being without an opposition.

Of course, being without an opposition is by no means a unique situation on the North American continent today. In the United States, the Democrats continue to prove their great staying power.

And at Ottawa, the Liberals have virtually a carte blanche as far as the effective power of the Commons opposition is concerned. Newfoundland at present seems to show promise of being a classical example of the one-party system in a democratic framework.

Even, or possibly particularly, at the University of Toronto, the Students' Administrative Council seems to be going its own placid way without any strong diversity of opinions within it. This might seem relatively unimportant in the scheme of things, but it is not, simply because it is so symptomatic of outside world

But then, is opposition important? Conventionally, it is considered to be the basis of the liberal democratic way of life, which we claim to be our own. But if it isn't should we worry?

One-party systems are easy and comfortable. They get things done, and efficiently, and on the other hand, it is very easy to do nothing when there are no nagging voices.

We are satisfied with the status quo, federally, provincially and even locally, it seems. Life is so full of a number of things, that we have convinced ourselves that we are happy as kings. And we all want to be happy, thence the "why botherism"

Yet there still remains a tradition of opposition, a belief in the value of scrutiny and criticism. And we are still worried when it doesn't exist, but not too much. "The Globe and Mail" has already gotten over its post-election hysteria and shows signs of concern at the lopsidedness of the new legislature. They don't quite know how to create an opposition, but then, who can blame them. More caucuses, less party discipline, they suggest. Possibly, part of the Conservative party should be turned into the official opposition — this is perhaps going too far.

Of course, the Conservatives are worried because they are not sure whether the Newtonian law "for every action there is always an equal and opposite reaction" still holds good. Or whether it is valid in political affairs.

The Students' Administrative Council is spared that problem. Where there is no action, there can be no reaction.

OUR READERS WRITE

For Gonzalez' God

Editor, The Varsity:

To begin with, we wish to congratulate Mr. Gonzales for his sane and excellent letter, "Facts for CBC".

Further, to your editorial "Freedom Please", you state that Mr. Hoyle "as a scientist gave a series of lectures on "cosmology". But since when is Mr. Hoyle, as a scientist, qualified to lecture on Cosmology, a branch of Metaphysics?

Mr. Hoyle should stick to his own field of science and not invade the realm of Philosophy

Sincerely,
Ann Carr, I St. Mike's,

Anti-View

Editor, The Varsity:

According to the obviously outdated information found in the United Nations' World of August, of 1949, and in the World Almanac of the same year, the distribution of religious "believers" on this earth is something like the following:

Roman Catholics	15
Confucianists	13
Hindus	10
Mohammedans	10
Buddhists	7
Protestants	6
Greek Orthodox	6
Taoists	2
Shintoists	1
Others	30

The problem, Mr. Gonzales and company, seems to be not "what do you believe?" but rather "whose heretic are you?"

Harold Chetkow,
Grad Studies.

The Old Cry

Editor, The Varsity:

I accuse The Varsity of biased reporting!

My statement is based on the article on Thursday's front page entitled, 'Engineers, etc. All Approve Russian Visits'.

According to the statistics published, seventy-two Engineers attended the meeting. This fact alone is open to question since no positive identification was required of those attending. While the meeting turned out to be a sounding board for NFCUS policies and organization, a few minutes at the end of the hour were allotted to open discussion of the question.

If the vote was as close as reported, I maintain that some mention of the views expressed by the opposition should have been made.

The Varsity neatly evaded this question by ignoring views either pro or con from a faculty of 1619 members and at the same time going to great lengths to give the views of a faculty of 254 members.

From the small turnout of Engineers (4.45%) several inferences can be drawn:

1. The majority of the Engineers couldn't care less about the Russian Visit question.

2. The NFCUS does not have the support of the Engineers. Since the turnout of engineers is representative of the interest shown in NFCUS questions across the country, no further comment is necessary.

3. Since the opinions of the very few representing the engineers were so nearly equally divided, I would think that in all fairness the NFCUS would have tried to obtain a more representative opinion instead of agreeing to a headline that borders on libel.

I suggest that The Varsity give more accurate news coverage and not slant the news to its own ideas of what the students should be told.

It is my opinion that the vote reported in The Varsity is not representative of the majority of Engineers. They have a more practical sense. My co-operation is available to any practical scheme whereby the true feelings of the Engineers can be ascertained and reported.

Frank M. Angebrandt,
IV Mechanical.

Ed. Note: The headline in question read: "Engineers, Nursing, P & OT All Approve Russian Visit."

Editor, The Varsity:

Evidently Mr. Gonzales' critics and the editors of The Varsity have both done a thorough job of missing his point. That point is clear enough, that for Christians criticism of Christianity is out of the question because for Christians Christianity is the revealed word of God and as such it is accepted, it is held with the greatest possible certitude because it comes from an indisputable source.

What point then, is there in allowing Lord Russell, Mr. Hoyle or anyone else to stand up and criticize truths which his audience accepts upon faith — in this case, faith in God. What "important views" can the speaker possibly air? What contribution can he make to his listeners? Must he be supposed to be strengthening their faith because he, the speaker, has none, and therefore thinks faith ridiculous?

Mr. Gonzales is accused of limiting speech, advocating censorship and injuring freedom of opinion. Whatever you may say, for the faithful of any creed, the faith itself is not controversial. As Mr. Gonzales says they believe it. Let there be opinion where it is legitimate, but in a matter of faith, belief is legitimate and opinion is illegitimate. And there is the question of justice involved when critics of Christianity are permitted blaspheme over a public means of communication.

There are certainly many faiths, all professing to lead their followers to God. Christianity is only one of them. But if you wish to follow it, assent, and not opinion, is required of you. If assent hinders or impinges your freedom of opinion, by all means remain faithless, but give religion its due.

There is not even a question of the rights of the minorities here. Canada is a Christian country, with a vast majority of its people supposedly holding a certain number of truths above dispute. It is perfectly correct that one should be annoyed at criticisms of these truths which are held in unique manner, which can only be accepted or rejected, not argued. If they are worth holding, they are worth holding fiercely.

William Ba
III St. Mik

For Christianity

Editor, The Varsity:

Recently the traditional inability of the CBC to please anybody due to its policy of trying to please everybody has blossomed into a controversy over the desirability of censorship of radio programs. Unfortunately the superficially religious setting of this controversy has provided the protagonists of both sides with ample opportunity to gnaw maliciously on each other's beliefs and convictions all in the interests of freedom of speech. I would be most happy to leave all this to abler hands than mine were it not that one Mr. Gonzalez, in trying to produce arguments for censorship, has succeeded only in presenting a travesty of Christianity. For those who may have been misled I would like to rectify a false impression.

According to Mr. Gonzalez Christianity consists of a set of infallible explanations of the universe. Anyone who dares to differ must be silenced, the obvious inference being that the infallible explanations could not withstand the least semblance of a logical argument. It is ideas like these that make it all too easy for the independent thinker to miss the meaning of Christianity altogether. But God honours our intellectual difficulties and is willing to meet halfway anyone who is sincerely seeking Him. "Come let us reason together, saith the Lord". Christ said, "I am come that ye may have life and that ye may have it more abundantly." Reconcile these statements if possible with "ideas that the Christian finds himself forced into a cramped intellectual world, having to accept some "party-line" collection of dogma. Rather, with Christ as Saviour, the Christian is free from the anxious and superstitious shackles that grip the unsaved man soul; he is free to exercise his God-given intellect and search to find the essential unity of knowledge in Christ.

St. Mike's Men, Coeds Defeat, Dents Approve, Russian Visit Principle

Three more groups voted yesterday on the question of Soviet student visits to Canada; two groups opposed to it; one in favor.

Opposed were St. Mike's men (who defeated the principle in an unanimous vote) and St. Mike's women. The latter came to a decision after a close 25-24 vote. In the third meeting held last night on the problem, Dents approved the visits 11-3.

St. Mike's Student Council President Paul Forestell said last night that a brief containing his college's position on the Russian question would be presented tonight at the meeting of the SAC External Affairs Committee

Although he could give no details of the brief, Forestell described it as "very complete and very positive."

This was the second meeting on the subject held by St. Mike's SAC. Since the first meeting three weeks ago, Council members tried to find out student opinion at their college, Forestell said, and came to the conclusion that majority opinion was against a visit of Soviet students.

In a 25-24 vote which represented 36% of the members of the two colleges, the Joint Council of Loretto and St. Joseph's Colleges defeated the principles of the Soviet visit. Of those voting in favor of the tour, almost 75% preferred a year-long tour of a short visit. It was felt that a three or four week tour would not accomplish the desired objective as the Russians would not meet a truly representative group of Canadian students.

The third meeting held yesterday on the question, the Dental Students Parliament, voted 11-3 in favor of a visit, and instructed its EAC rep to urge the visit be held this year if at all possible. The Dental Parliament also defeated a motion making the Russian visit to Canada conditional on a Canadian return visit, even though Canadians might not want to go.

The Parliament felt that Canadian students must meet the Russians halfway, and that the Soviets had already expressed their de-

Debate To Air Immigrant Plan, Harris Guest

The Federal Minister for Citizenship and Immigration, Hon. W. E. Harris, will be the guest speaker at the second Hart House debate, to be held tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Debates Room of Hart House. Subject of the debate will be: "Resolved that this House deplores Canada's Immigration policy".

Mr. Harris first identified himself with the Liberal party in 1921, after listening to a speech by the late Prime Minister William Lyon Mackenzie King. He won his first election in 1940, after 14 years' active work with the party, by defeating Agnes MacPhail, who had held that seat since 1921.

In 1947 Mr. King, as Prime Minister, named him as Parliamentary Assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (then Mr. St. Laurent).

During 1948 and 1949, Mr. Harris did background work on negotiations for the entry of Newfoundland into the Dominion of Canada. Late in 1949 he did other background work in connection with the formation of three new Government departments: Citizenship and Immigration, Mines and Technical Surveys, and Resources and Development.

In his present position, Mr. Harris is also in charge of the Indian Affairs Branch.

John Medcof (IV UC) and John Morden (Wycliffe) were chosen as alternate debaters by the three faculty judges after the trials held by the University of Toronto Debating Union. The motion debated was "Resolved that the Iranian Government was justified in nationalizing Iran's oil industry."

"The Iranian government permitted the British to build up the oil industry in Iran and once it was set up broke the agreement which had been signed in good faith," Taylor said. "Now that the Iranian government has succeeded in nationalizing the oil industry it is lying useless and rotting in the desert because of lack of technical ability to run it," he added.

Alluding to the nationalization, Morden asked if Canadians would care to have the U.S.A. controlling, owning and operating the staple industries of Canada. "It is even worse to be ruled by a company as a tyrant than by the government of another country which was elected by its people" he added.

"Premier Mossadagh lacks what is needed to make the oil industry in Iran a success and there is nothing to do now but wait and our waiting is playing into the hands of the Communists in Iran" said Barton. He also stated that the two-way pressure from the fanatic nationalists and the Communists put Iran into an impossible position and they had only to hold out long enough to hope Britain will come through and hope to save face.

Medcof agreed with the resolution, saying that despite the fact that Iran was faced with the possibility of national suicide by cutting off 50% of the national revenue nationalization of the oil industry was completed.

"Three driving forces formed this decision—a tremendous religious and nationalistic revival," Medcof added. "Communist agitators rosing the people; and the pressure of the nationalists 'Iran for the Iranians'."

The panel of judges who selected the winners consisted of Professor W. Field, Victoria College; Father J. Dorsey, St. Michael's College; and Dr. L. Woodbury of UC. "A balance of control of delivery amount of information, organization and expression in a logical, convincing way was necessary for the successful debaters", said Dr. Woodbury.

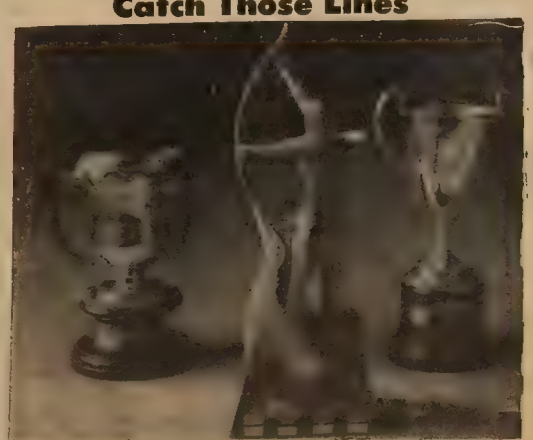
However, the Hart House staff has timed students going through the line-up from the time they enter the lower gallery door until they have put their trays away and sat down to eat. Miss Eames said that this time was never longer than ten minutes even at the peak of the rush.



Most students eating at Hart House do not know that they can get a bowl of soup for 10c rather than the small cup for a nickel, she noted. On Sunday night Miss Eames remarked the dietitians asked whether the students wanted a small or a large bowl and were surprised at the number who thought that the large bowls were something new.

Individual items on the special meals will be shown by small signs placed on the counter above them. Some of the meals will allow for cups of soup while others will include the large bowls.

Novel Target For Archers

The Hart House Archery Award, pictured above was introduced to the university in 1948, and now rests in the landing above the main door. The trophy consists of an abstract carving in natural colored wood mounted on an ivory base. The sculptor was Mr. Alfred Perry of Markham, Ontario, a noted Canadian woodcarver. East year, the member of the Hart House Archery Club Team who has obtained the highest aggregate in the year's competitions is presented with the Archery Award. To date the award has been made four times.

This article, the final one in a series on the National Federation of Canadian University Students, is concerned with the activities of the national body on the Toronto campus.

The main strength of NFCUS has always been found in its local committees on the various campi. In recent years the NFCUS committee at Toronto has been particularly strong, at a time when most campi report the national body playing second fiddle to the International Student Service (ISS) committees at their university.

Until this year, the NFCUS committee has been just like a miniature Students' Administrative Council. Each faculty and college elected representatives to the committee, just as they elected SAC reps. The Council was chaired by a member of the SAC, elected to that position by the Council vote. As with all Council committees, the decisions of the NFCUS committee had to be ratified by the SAC.

This year, however, in an attempt to provide closer co-operation between NFCUS and ISS, the two bodies were placed together in one SAC Committee, known as the External Affairs Committee (EAC) The chairman of the Committee (this year it is Graeme Ferguson, IV Vic) is still a member of SAC, and all EAC decisions must be ratified by the Council.

However, the internal organization of the EAC is more complicated than last year's NFCUS committee. Two vice-chairmen have been appointed: one (Joan Presant, III UC) to be in charge of NFCUS activities, the other (Peter Alley, IV Trinity) to take care of ISS work. These two vice-chairmen, along with the chairman, make up the EAC Executive.

Members of the EAC are elected (these replace the former NFCUS reps elected by each faculty or college) and non-elected. The latter group are interested persons, who are included in the committee in deference to the ISS practice of non-representative help. However, provision has been made to restrain the vote (if requested) to only elected members.

The work of the EAC is done through a number of sub-committees, which are in charge of such things as financial campaigns, taking care of visiting students, arranging for exchanges with other universities, and planning events like the Carabin weekend.

Movie theatre managers don't go in for philanthropy much, not during office hours anyway. But the manager of the Odeon-Hyland last week opened his doors to U of T students for three matinees; admission was a clipped ad from The Varsity.

The manager, of course, was crazy like a fox. With a film like THE LAVENDER HILL MOB, free admissions for a few meant widespread advertising among many. Because THE LAVENDER HILL MOB is a delightful movie and you can't wait to tell other people about it.

Of course, there has been as much talk about THE LAVENDER HILL MOB as there was about TIGHT LITTLE ISLAND when it was launched on its long, profitable stay at the same theatre. So you know that it is the story of two amateur criminals (Alec Guinness and Stanley Holloway) who rob some gold bullion from the Bank of England, nearly get away with the crime by exporting the gold to France in the form of Eiffel Tower models, but are trapped by some acquisitive and innocent (naturally) Girl Guides. The makers of THE LAVENDER HILL MOB also made that best of all British comedies, TIGHT LITTLE ISLAND and its successor, KIND HEARTS AND CORONETS. And like those two comedies, there is the same knowing dig at officialdom and stuffiness, the same straight-faced satire of Philistinian morality.

The most delightful thing about this delightful movie is Alec Guinness as the Boss of the Lavender Hill Mob. Two years ago, Pogo burst upon us and made us feel that we initiated were a race apart who doted on the Walt Kelly comments on the "human bean" types in swamp guise. Now after a brace of superior British films, it is Alec Guinness who we can be snobs about, superior in our knowledge of a private leprechaun who brings us special joy. (But beware, Guinness is becoming a Big Name.)

As the Boss of the Mob, Guinness is a non-entity of a bank employee who calmly and fantastically robs the Bank of England. His awkward bobbing out of his benign superior's chamber is as neat as the gleam in his eye when he is melting down the stolen bullion. There are great moments in THE LAVENDER HILL MOB when so much is said with so little: the solitary Guinness gesturing with the guard's pistol in the bank van — Milquetoast doing a Cagney, and Guinness making shadow rabbits on a moonlit wall during the vigil for professional burglars.

But the highest point is reached in the deft deduction of would-be accomplice Stanley Holloway into this glamorous career of grand larceny. The closeups of the Guinness and Holloway faces, one enticing and suggesting (but with complete British restraint, of course), the other battling with a whole sea of emotions, make a magnificent sequence.

In TIGHT LITTLE ISLAND, crime (in the form of whiskey looting and hiding) did/didn't pay. In KIND HEARTS AND CORONETS, murder paid the murderer. In THE LAVENDER HILL MOB, crime doesn't pay — Holloway is nabbed early by a bobby very good at pig noises. And Guinness is apprehended at the end, so there you are. But you should see that sheila Guinness has nestling up to him, whom he met during his year's stay down in South America before the Scotland Yard manage to grab him. What is more, when Guinness walks out of the door handcuffed, we feel cheated and resentful: there just ain't no justice in this world

THE LAVENDER HILL MOB should make you feel very good, benevolent, congenial and perhaps vicariously sly. I wondered if some opportunist shouldn't have stood in front of the theatre selling lead models of the Eiffel Tower to the after-show crowd. He would have done a roaring business.

Yesterday's short viewpoint mentioned the opening of THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE at the Uptown. Reason for suggesting that large crowds should go see the film this week is that this might make this new war film stay another week. This would be a tremendous triumph of Art over Corn in the Uptown, traditional home of Ma and Pa Kettle and Abbot-Costello. In other words, if we want good movies we have to prove it at the one place where it is felt by movie entrepreneurs: the Box Office.

Now Discuss "Tovarischee" In Alberta

Edmonton (CUP) — The Students' Council met at the University of Alberta were given an opportunity recently of taking a stand on the question of a Russian student tour of Canadian Universities. A report was presented to the council on the National Federation of Canadian University Students (NFCUS) conference held in London early this fall, from which discussion of the proposed visit was expected.

Alberta's delegates to the NFCUS conference did not cast their vote on the question of the visit. They were forced to leave the conference in order to catch a train before a vote was taken.

At the same time Alberta's NFCUS chairman urged that students there take a more active interest in international student affairs. "This university is, on the surface, completely oblivious to the world's problems as they apply to students," he said. "Very few seem to realize that in the student world, as in the outside world, each person must take an active interest if our present social and political system is to survive at all".

Ober In Steps Of Abdul-Baha

Mr. Harlan Ober, a graduate of Harvard University and the Law School of Northeastern University, will speak at the open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group tomorrow at 1:10 p.m. in Room 64, U.C.

Mr. Ober is an internationally known figure whose study of the Baha'i World Faith began in the Holy Land itself in the early years of the ministry of Abdul-Baha, the Perfect Exemplar of the Faith, whose teaching before his death in 1922 was largely responsible for vitalizing the growth of the Faith on the American continent. The speaker brings a rich experience in travelling and speaking in Africa, India, Burma, Europe, the United States and Canada. At present his home is in Beverley, Mass., and his life in the United States has been occupied as Sales Personnel Manager for Remington-Rand Co. and as a radio commentator in international affairs and current events. For may of these years Mr. Ober was an active member of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'i of the U.S.

International affairs have been a vital interest of the speaker for almost fifty years and he believes teaching the Baha'i World Faith to be the most significant contribution he can make to the cause of international understanding and unity.

University Mission Challenge Aid Student Faith - - Moore

"For many students the Christian faith is a dream which has refused to come to terms with reality", said President A. B. B. Moore of Victoria University, who addressed students and faculty members from all sections of the campus during a meeting held Saturday in preparation for the University Christian Mission to be held next January.

In discussing the reasons for this attitude, Dr. Moore stated that "there are two blocks to faith among students today—a mental block and a moral block. The mental block arises from the presupposition that the universe can be explained satisfactorily from within terms of natural laws observable in it."

Dr. Moore said, "The second block, the moral one, is created by our knowledge of the relativity of moral systems and consequent difficulty in believing that one may be better than another.

Dr. Moore asserted that many students reject Christianity "because they have seen it only in segments, and only in terms of some particular doctrine or supposed doctrine, which they consider unintelligible or unappealing. We must try to see the Christian faith again in all its wholeness and in its relation to every part of life."

"Thus the University Mission is a challenge to wholeness, both of those who reject religious faith and for those who have unresolved questions about their faith which must be faced as a preliminary to greater understanding and conviction," he claimed. "Our Chief Missioner, Canon T. R. Milford, through his training as a theologian and philosopher and his long experience with several generations of students at Oxford, is admirably qualified for helping us to meet this challenge," concluded Dr. Moore.

Usually there are only squirrels watching the students walking along the Philosopher's Walk, but lately some men have been digging a ditch across the valley and up the hill to Holwood House. While the squirrels seem to have hibernated, they may come back to the north-east corner of Trinity when the ditch is filled in.

Pol Sci Club Has Journal, Dana Porter

"The Hon. Dana Porter, Attorney-General, and former Minister of Education will speak on 'Law and Politics,' before the University Political Science Club Wednesday at 8 p.m.," announced the club publicity director John Campbell. The meeting will be held in the Junior Common Room at University College.

Campbell also stated that the Political Science Club is planning to publish a magazine containing articles written by students on material dealing with political science and economics. There will be no articles by authorities in the field, Campbell added. The entire magazine will be a student matter.

"The deadline is set for January 14," he said. Articles are to be regular essay style and size. All students may enter material for the magazine to any of the Political Science Club executive.

SNATCHES

from St. James

The reports which were issued occasionally last year from our sister college, St. Stephens will be replaced this term by intermittent reports from St. James' College.

Students were enthusiastic last week in heralding the return to the campus of our bursar, Frederick Feesmore, who has been on an extended trip to Southern France. His plane was met at Malton Airport by the school band and a group of students appropriately dressed in black and blue, our school colours. As Mr. Feesmore appeared at the aeroplane door the band played "Daddy, I Want A Brand New Car" and the faculty joined in a rousing yell: "Yea, Feesmore, Yea, Feesmore, collect, collect, collect".

Mr. Feesmore was accompanied by a friend from France, Miss Mimi Treschaude who will be his new executive assistant at an unrevealed salary. Immediately after their arrival at Simpleton Hall, the faculty hustled Mr. Feesmore off to the lounge to give an account of his travels and adventures. Miss Treschaude was seen speaking to a college police officer, something about a new business on the campus.

At the request of the former St. Stephen's scribe, we are going to clean up some correspondence that has been accumulating in the office for a few months. And, believe us, it really needs cleaning up.

To Worried: Legally speaking, Miss Worried, that in no sense constitutes a proposal of marriage. You have been duped.

To Miss Bopton: As far as we know Saxophone Sammy and his Synchopated Seven have never recorded "When the Cars Can Stop on Hoskin, I'll Be Coming Back to You". No, Sammy does not carve us.

To Frustrated: To get to Christie Pits, one takes a Bloor car to Ossington. Good luck.

To Miss R. Dent: It is indeed a problem but one for a doctor. However do drop around to the office. We can talk it over.

To Puzzled: Your letter was somewhat confused. However there are red lights on Jarvis Street, if that's what you mean. Green ones, too.

To Hart House Diner: The only Potage Jackson we ever heard of was an outfielder for the Chicago White Sox.

To D.T.S.: The next time, remember. It's one part of rye to ten parts of water, not one part of water to ten parts of rye. Bet it cured your cold, though.

And pip pip for the nonce from Dear old St. James', good readers.

VIC'S CORNER

Good morning, everyone:

This is the week that Vic society has been waiting for all fall . . . it's the Dance of Romance — The VIC INFORMAL . . . this Friday night at Hart House Dave Rose, President of the U.C. Lit, says: ". . . I am looking forward to what is traditionally one of the most enjoyable dances on the campus . . ." So you see, everyone is looking forward to the affair this Friday. For those who are still without their tickets, they are on sale in Alumni Hall (10 to 2) any day this week.

This Sunday evening will be the third in the series of V.C.U.-sponsored Chapel Services. The speaker is Dr. Johnson from Hartford, Connecticut. The student assistants for this service are Lorne Lodge and Ed. File. The last two chapel services were successful as far as student interest was concerned if numbers are any indication of enthusiasm. If you haven't been to one of these services yet then we recommend that you definitely take this one in and bring that friend along with you. The time is 7:00 p.m., Sunday, Dec 2, in the Vic Chapel. See you there and remember the eats, I mean the reception, over at Wymilwood.

As part of Vic's contribution to SHARE, the year execs under one of Tim Armstrong's committees is selling Xmas Cards. They are really something and quite reasonable Tim says you can have a thousand dozen for nine hundred dollars. We also hear that we made some SHARE money parking cars Saturday . . . saw our boy, Alex Longfeet, busy coining silver at Little Vic.

Victoria Debating Parliament is holding the first of their Impromptu Debates, Tues., Nov. 27, at 7:30, Room 18, Vic.

GATHLETICS: Vic came 3rd in the Interfaculty Swim Meet. Mary Crowther, Florence Nasmith and Pat [illegible] outstanding from Vic. Hockey practices continue with a good turnout. Practice at 8:00 Fri. Chalktalk Thurs. at 1:30. . . . Watch for volleyball lists.

MATHLETICS: TODAY IS THE BIG DAY for our footballers. They take on Jr. SPS in the Mulock Cup Semi-final. The place is Varsity Stadium. Coach Lew Frick has drilled the team steadily for the past week and they are all ready to roll except for "Steve" Rogers. The cheerleaders will be there in force — there'll be SGLIRPB — and of course Vic Students will turn out en masse . . . let's see each other there, eh.

The Vic Tennis Tournament semi-finals have been put over until spring. We all put our studies with them too, we think.

— EFFY.

P S — In case we run out of Vic's Corners before Xmas . . . don't forget the STS class party Dec. 8 and the combined STS-STA party Dec 14 — both are at Wymilwood.

Lengthy Hairs And Be-Bop At Hart House

Eugene Kash, the violinist known to Hart House audiences for his flawless performances of Bach and other eighteenth-century music, will present another program in Hart House tomorrow—a program with a difference. Instead of the conventional concert that is usually heard on the Wednesday afternoon series, this one will be an illustrated talk, entitled "Music and YOU, or Is Long Hair Music Really Long?"

Everyone with even a slight acquaintance with Eugene Kash is impressed by his ready wit, and his facility as an explainer. Among the groups tomorrow afternoon will be his violin, which he is expected to play. Additional illustrative material will be supplied by means of recordings. Among the items on the program will be an explanation of Be Bop in musical terms.

Eugene Kash, in addition to his recitals has given lectures on Canadian folk songs in England. He is director of the famous Ottawa Children's Concerts, and Music Director of the National Film Board.

Wednesday's program begins at 5:00 p.m., in the Music Room of Hart House. All members are welcome—no tickets are required.

TWENTY-THREE SKIDOO

We noted with approval the announcement in the public prints the other day that one of the motion picture studios is in the process of filming a Charlestonner's eye-view of those wonderfully raucous twenties, to be aptly entitled "Anybody Seen My Gal." From the sound of the title — and that is all we have to go on at this writing — this flicker promises to chronicle some of the glorious color and customs of that fabulously carefree era which our generation never knew, but whose fables and legends are continually being recounted for us by our parents and their contemporaries.

We hope the picture will not disappoint us. We hope the directors will include lots of songs and dances, ukelele strumming, flapper costumes and the like. We hope the camera will take us into the speakeasies and onto the vaudeville stage of that roaring postwar period.

In a confessional mood, we must admit quite frankly that we often feel we were born thirty years too late when we hear the songs and see the dances of that day. Five-Foot-Two, When You Wore a Tulip, Hello, My Honey, Down Yonder and the others appeal to us a lot more than most of the current hit paraders. And we think this is not just a personal feeling. When the sing-songs spontaneously burst forth at parties and get-togethers, these ballads are usually the first receiving tonsular exercise. Think, also, of how often they are revived by today's musical ensembles and how they receive the public's approval in the form of juke box nickels and disk jockey playings.

There's something about those old songs. The tunes are very catchy, the words are easy to remember, and the rhythm is contagious. You'd almost think they were made for singing by a bunch of the kids gathered round a piano after the dancing has stopped. And you don't have to have a wonderful voice with a terrific range to make them sound good; just carry the tune, relax, and let the lyrics do the rest.

In this non-connoiseur's humble opinion, they don't compose them like that anymore. Today's novelties (e.g. "The Thing) are strictly wassing fancies, and nobody sings them much longer that that short period when they are in vogue. Today's ballads, although very entertaining to listen to, don't often send you away singing, and when they do frequently you don't remember what comes after the second line. The folk songs ("On Top of Old Smokey", "Beautiful, Beautiful Brown Eyes") are mostly revivals, and their only saving grace is that they are designed for community singing, where the audience is merely an echo.

One can't talk of the melodies of that era without thinking of the entertainers who put them across. Yes, there is probably just as much talent about today, and maybe it's even of a better calibre than the vaudevillians of the twenties exhibited. But today's stars use different media. With radio, movies and films, modern entertainers merely perform to an audience which they rarely have to see or feel. They consequently concentrate on perfection of music and elocution. They have only as much personality as comes through beneath the words.

On the vaudeville stage, by contrast, you had to be a personality or you weren't accepted. You didn't perform to an audience, you worked an audience. As they responded so you produced. You got close to them, and you felt their reaction to everything you were doing for them. They didn't care if you slurred your words or if you hit the wrong note, just as long as you made them listen and enjoy what you were doing.

Perhaps we're just a square, but we think a well-executed Charleston has it over this jive stuff. You really have to be a fast stepper to keep up with twenty-three skidoo-ers. And those wiggles and shimmies — ooh, our aching back!

Could be we'd like to escape to other, happier times, and that's why the songs and dances of the twenties hold their special appeal for us. After all, they were conceived following the war to end wars, before the depression and Hitler, and Korea, and Iran and Egypt. The people of that day were having a good time, not regarding their happy moments with the catch-as-catch-can conscience we have today. Maybe that is why they don't write the same type of stuff now.

But pardon us. We're late for our appointment with the chiropractor. He's going to try to uncross our knees.

OTTAWA TRIP

Capitol Interest

By MARY MARTIN

"The Prime Minister has just granted you a private audience," Mr. George Fulford, MP, whispered and there was a sudden bustle in the public gallery of the House of Commons as we hurriedly scrambled to our feet. For 35 University of Toronto students, this meeting was the highlight of a trip to Ottawa sponsored by the International Relations Club.

Mr. St. Laurent's charming and gracious manner put us at our ease. He expressed faith and optimism in the future but stressed the necessity of strengthening Canada's defence in the interests of peace. One student commented afterwards on his sincerity and dignity of his manner. Following this interview we went on a tour of the Parliament Buildings and saw the Senate Chamber, the Library, the Memorial Chapel and the Peace Tower.

Under the auspices of Mr. Peebles of the Information Division, we were introduced to Mr. Escott Reid, Undersecretary of the Department of External Affairs and other division heads who explained the life of a Foreign Service Officer. Such things as reports, instructions, administrative duties, competitive exams and probationary exams were explained.

Saturday morning we met again tthe head of the Personnel Division who informed us pointedly that the first qualification of an FSO was not to go to late parties. He added that out of some 300 people who applied for this work in 1949 only 25 were accepted. Next the group ... ed a representative from the ... Council, the heads of the ... Nations and Commonwealth ... sions and Mr. Day of the Immigration Division. Mr. Day said ... was a need for more Canadian ... scholarships both for Canadians and foreigners. An accomplished speaker, he entertained us with a large repertoire of amusing incidents from his varied career.

Another feature of the week ... was an invitation to have lunch ... the Parliamentary Restaurant. Here we chatted with Mr. ... Martin, and, as one member ... "watched the great come and go."

Saturday afternoon some of us drove out to Kingsmere, Mackenzie King's estate, and surveyed the famous ruins. One of the buildings has a chapel-like effect; the sides are made from the old Canadian Parliament Buildings and the fourth from a piece of the old British House of Commons. A fee for tourists in the summer, the ruins were collected by Mr. King's great effort and expense. As we were in the November twilight they presented an unusual, rather eerie effect.

Three parties were given for the group. They also visited Moe's Burgers, La Tourraine and the Canadian Grill at the Chateau La... ier.

Almost Mythical Ross Editor For 25 Years

In Ross of the New Yorker, Dale Kramer has written a factual, light-weight portrait of the almost mythical Harold Ross and his magazine, The New Yorker; almost mythical because up to now the editor of that most sophisticated periodical has been virtually unkown both to the public and to most of his employees. By picturing Ross in a perpetual state of enraged creativity, Kramer does little to destroy the myth. He begins by relating the colourful early life of Harold Ross, changes subject in mid-biography and carries on with the colorful early life of The New Yorker. Both stories are equally fascinating, but the jolt of the change-over may unnerve you a little.

Ross spent his young manhood as a tramp newspaperman, and Kramer's description of his travels is as amusing as it is penetrating. Impersonally he assesses the exterior influences that have made Ross the brilliant editor he is: his father, his hobo-hood, the writings of Herbert Spencer, the hell-raising army journalists he met in wartime Paris.

Alexander Woollcott was a co-editor with Ross of the World War I version of Stars and Stripes. The truculent friendship they struck up served to make Ross a member of the famed Algonquin Hotel Round Table when it was formed in New York after the war. As a minor member of New York's Bohemia he passed from one editor-ship to another while he mulled ideas about the magazine he dreamed of editing. In 1925 he founded The New Yorker.

Many have written of The New Yorker in its salad days, but few so comprehensively as Mr. Kramer, who gives short life histories of nearly every staffer of significance: Katharine and E. B. White, Ralph Ingersoll, James Thurber, Philip Wylie, and many others. In the process he rehashes old jokes recounted elsewhere by members of the Round Table and The New Yorker staff. But equally often he reprints early work by New Yorker writers which has become deservedly famous, such as James Thurber's frightening A Box to Hide In and many of E. B. White's charming "Comment" pieces.

Ross, in starting The New Yorker, hoped to found an American humour magazine along the lines of Punch. Kramer's opinion of The New Yorker's achievement is of considerable value, for while realizing its tremendous effect on the popular writing of its time, he also recognizes the attitudes, especially towards humour, which may in the long run be detrimental to The New Yorker itself.

Ross and The New Yorker is written in the stereotyped, exaggerated, but often pithy style which, used to the point of suffocation, is characteristic of much popular American biography and often crops up in The New Yorker itself in the "Profiles" of Robert Lewis Taylor. It abounds in factual information, presenting an uncogent but delightful picture of an American magazine and its maker during twenty-five hectic years.

When Actors Roared ..And Walked Planks

Ghosts and Greasepaint, by W. Macqueen-Pope. Ryerson Press, 1951, $5.00.

Walter Macqueen-Pope comes from a very old theatrical family, dating back to the days of the Bear Garden of 1585. His ancestors appeared with Burbage, Shakespeare, and, since 1720, with the Theatre Royal of Drury Lane. Macqueen-Pope himself has done almost every job imaginable in the theatre-world.

So, with all this background, one might expect a broad knowledge and appreciation of the stage and its people. Which is just what one gets in this, the latest of Macqueen-Pope's many books on the theatrical life of England.

Ghosts and Greasepaint goes back to the nineteenth century, the "good old days" of the English stage, when actors were actors and roared their way into people's hearts, instead of "mumbling and throwing away" lines in the off-hand fashion the author attributes to today's stage.

It is a thoughly delightful book. Macqueen-Pope's style is vigorous and his memory inexhaustible. He tosses off amusing anecdotes about names that were greater in their day, or so the author fondly remembers, than any contemporary film star on the west coast.

Not only the glory of the stage and private lives of the giants are recounted, but the rigorous training which gawe them what Macqueen-Pope idolizes. Actor-managers demanded — and got — hard work, grueiling hours, detailed instruction and practice on the most minute aspects of the art. Charles Kean made his actors walk along thin planks raised above the stage, faster and faster until they could do it without swaying or falling. Rehearsals lasted all day, and often, if there was no performance at night, up to four or five in the morning. There was no break for lunch — and nobody expected one.

The book is obviously aimed at the old-timers, the nice old gentlemen like the author himself, who, by "second sight", recall their youth. Macqueen-Pope is mildly troubled about the new generation, whom he fairly generally classifies as ice-cream licking, and cigarette-

Churchill Lively For 700 Pages

Closing The Ring by Winston Churchill, Thomas Allen, 1951, $6.50.

The indefatgable Winston Churchill is on the last lap of a six-volume account of the Second World War. Readers who have followed this series through The Gathering Storm to The Hinge of Fate will not be disappointed in Closing the Ring, the second to last volume in this exciting historical memoir. Closing the Ring covers the year from June 1943 to D-Day in June 1944. The Sicilian operation, the fall of Mussolini, the Quebec Conference, the Cairo Conference, Teheran, the Anzio Beachhead, and the launchinng of the D-Day armada are all described as seen through the eyes of Britain's war-time Prime Minister.

Throughout the whole seven hundrew page account, the reader's interest is kept alive by Churchill's grand style of writing and the personal impressions that he throws in in the midst of history making events. Nor can the reader help but be amazed at Churchill's phenomenal memory for detail and his ability to keep about six different problems on tap in his mind at onee.

Our remarks about Closing the Ring tend to sound rather perfunctory, but how else can a reviewer approach works of such consideration as the Churchill War memoirs? They stand by themselves and need no recommendation. The best we can do is to remind you that the latest volume is now available.

An English Car Plus Two Gals

As We Came By, by Judith Robinson, J. M. Dent and Sons, 1951, $2.75.

Ten years and a World War had swept over Europe between Judith Robinson's first visit to Europe and her second in 1950.

The stories she wrote about what she rediscovered there appeared originally in several out-of-town newspapers and were incorporated into her latest book "As We Came By."

Miss Robinson, accompanied by her sister who drove the little English car which carried them on their journey, arrived in Britain in time for the February elections. From Britain Miss Robinson travelled through France, Italy, Holland, and then back to Britain, with a short stopover at Geneva, Switzerland.

The author has written a comparatively short account of the changes that have occurred in Europe since her first visit, not only in the countries, but also in the people themselves.

After five years of peace, Europe still bears tangible evidence of the war. In Britain, as in France and Italy, Miss Robinson encountered bomb-shattered buildings, empty spaces where buildings once stood, and the too-new buildings that are the aftermath of war. Vivid reminders of a none-too-distant past, but more vivid to the visitor who is unaccustomed to such sights than to the inhabitants who have learned to ignore the ugliness before their eyes.

Miss Robinson varies her descriptions of the sordid reminders of war with several amusing incidents, and descriptions of the more peaceful aspect of the European countryside. The description of the night she spent in a Franch hotel struggling with a French footwarmer is a welcome relief from the more serious problems she necountered.

Unlike most travel books, "As we Came By" is written mostly in short indirect statements. It makes the author's observations more effective because it seems to be an impersonal observation. But the reader sometimes finds difficulty in deciding which words are meant to be those of the speaker and which are not part of the conversation at all.

Judith Robinson, a former reporter for the Globe and Mail, has written one other book, Tom Cullen of Baltimore.

Printers' End Library Talk By McLuhan

Professor H. M. McLuhan will speak on "The End of the Gutenberg Era" at the Hart House Library Evening at 8:00 p.m. in the library tonight. Dr. McLuhan is the author of a recently published book, "The Mechanical Bride", on the effects of advertising and a complex technology on modern society. In his talk he will elaborate on his prediction that the impact of radio and television on the field of communication may well spell the end of the printing press because of a lack of desire for literacy.

This is the second Library Evening of the academic year. The previous speaker was Telegram Book Review Editor James Scott, who spoke on a related subject, the impact of today's technocracy as expressed in modern fiction.

The address will be followed by a question period, and an informal reception at which refreshments will be served.

Ave Atque Vale

Several members of the staff of the Institute of Child Study have compiled a check-list of the numerous articles published during the first twenty-five years of the live of the Institute. This Check-list, along with several introductory chapters on the history of the Institute and its aims and methods have been published in book form by the University Press ($4.00) as a tribute to Dr. Blatz' efforts to further the methods of child development and training.

Dr. Blatz has been the director and leading influence in the devolpment of The Institute of Child Study here for the past twenty-five years. During that time he has also been engaged in various activities outside the School. These include an intensive study of the development of the Dionne Quintuplets and organizing a training school in England for women to learn how to handle evacuees during the second World War.

Twenty-five Years of Child Study was planned and financed by families, friends and staff members of the Institute to signify their appreciation of Dr. Blatz's efforts to further the methods of child training and development.

The Institute of Child Study operates a nursery where children receive training and provide the staff with first-hand material for the study of children. Certain theories and stands have been expressed by the Institute which are exemplary of the spirit in which it is operated. Corporal punishment has been abolished, and competitive social relationships are discouraged. "Through learning all things are possible" seems to be the motto of the school, and its main tenet that total personality develops only as the child learns.

It is continually emphasized that the child must take unto himself a learning process which he will be able to use throughout his life, and the outsider is led to ask what the Institute's definition of learning is.

Two attempts are made in Twenty-five Years of Child Study to make such a definition, the one reads "Learning . . . (is) the response whereby the child seeks to meet his needs within his environment" and the second, a quotation taken from Blatz's Understanding The Young Child, reads "Learning is used to describe the fact that the human being, having few instincts, experiments in his activity and selects those forms which bring him satisfaction. By keeping the consequence of a particular activity consistent, satisfaction is invariable attained by the same means. Such activity is therefore selected by the individual or said to be learned."

Both these definitions express the Institute's main pre-occupation with training the child to relate himself to his immediate environment in a way that satisfies him. In the Child Study context, human beings are "basically experiencing and learning individuals," and it is up to the Child Study specialist to determine what goals are satisfying and how children can be taught to attain them.

In spite of the outsider's skepticism regarding some of the methods of the Institute of Child Study, Twenty-five Years of Child Study cannot help but impress him with the progressive steps that have been taken, and with a realization of his own responsibility to see that his children reap the returns of a quarter century of scientific investigation.

Big Binge For Office Described

"The Office Party" by Corey Ford. Doubleday, 1951, $1.50.

Corey Ford's hilarious new publication on the various phases of office existence will doubtless catch the eye of the Christmas shopper.

Opening with an entertaining description of the Office Christmas Party which starts about noon on the 24th of December and ends two or three months later, depending how long it takes the boss to find out who set fire to his waste-basket,' Office Party gives a stimulating account of the Office Picnic, The Company Songbook, The Bridal Shower for a member of the staff who is engaged, and a testimonial luncheon for the long-service man who is being edged out in favor of the boss' nephew.

Office Party depicts scenes only too familiar to the city-dweller, and many will appreciate Mr. Ford's ironical approach to office festivities. Needless to say, Whitney Darrow's illustrations are half the book and never fail to catch the spirit of the events described.

MULOCK SEMI-FINALS TODAY

Trinity Edges Emmanuel Earns Semi-Final Berth

By TOM BROADHURST

Yesterday noon the Trinity "A" soccer team edged out a fighting Emmanuel squad 2-1 in a fast, well played soccer game on the Back Campus. The two teams were evenly matched, with the superior finishing of Trinity paying off in two opportune goals snatched in the first half. The Theologians had numerous scoring chances too, but failed to make one good until the middle of the second half.

The game opened with Emmanuel doing most of the attacking, and keeping the play deep in Trinity teritory. But the Trinity defence held them out by consistently clearing the ball up the field. Then the Trinity forward line led by Hugh Rowan and company got moving and proceeded to score two goals in quick succession. Both were the result of playing with a slippery ball. The first goal came when an Emmanuel defender miskicked the ball in front of his goal, and Tim Clarkson swooped in to whisk the ball into the net for goal number one. Number two came a few minutes later when Murray Jackson hitched on to a pass on the left wing, and let fly from about twenty yards out. The ball slithered between the goal keeper's legs, and Trinity were two up.

Emmanuel attempted to reduce the margin, but again Trinity's defence came to the rescue, led by Hugh Wareham and Rick Gaunt, and kept the Theologians out.

The second half opened with Emmanuel pressing hard, and very unlucky not to score when the ball hit the inside of the goal post, but just would not cross that line. However their efforts were soon to be rewarded when Bruce Vanstone went in alone and took a shot at goal. A Trinity defender in attempting to clear pushed the ball into his own net to make the score 2-1.

Emmanuel continued to attack but no more goals were forthcoming as again the Trinity defence proved a hard nut to crack, and the final whistle blew with Trinity moving into the semi-final round against Senior Skule on the strength of their win.

Sr. Vic took the measure of Sr. SPS, 3-1, in yesterday's feature hockey match. Wooton, Walton and Andrew were the scorers for the Scarlet and Gold. Hookings saved the Skulemen from a shut-out. There were four penalties in the game. Wooton and Walton served time for Vic, Martin and Crann for SPS.

A Group 2 game saw Pre-Meds trim Jr. UC, 4-1. Robertson scored a pair of goals for the doctors, McDougal and Wilkes had singles. Ken Lawson got the one tally for the Redmen.

Play-offs are getting under way in lacrosse and volleyball as well as the major sports. In a boxla group play-off, SPS III beat Meds IV, 4-2. R. Clarke led with two goals. T. Beck and B. Lepore also counted for the winners. For Meds, Marse and Kerr had markers.

Forestry and UC III got the volleyball eliminations started with a close set at noon yesterday. Forestry ran away with the first, 15-2 by the Red and White came back to take the second, 15-12. The Timbermen prevailed in the saw-off taking a 15-8 decision.

Staff Meeting

There will be an important meeting of the Women's Sports Staff of The Varsity in the News Office tomorrow afternoon at 1:00 o'clock. The following are asked to be present: Joan Haggart, Shirley Lane, Carolyn Schmidt, Kay Schenk, and many others who have written women's sports this fall.

Jr. Skule Meet Vic UC Opposes Trinity

Come snow or sleet, rain or shine (the last a very likely prospect indeed) the Mulock Cup semi-finals will on this afternoon as scheduled. A full afternoon of footb is on hand; the first game of the doubleheader will begin 12:30, with Junior Skule facing Vic, and will be followed Trinity tussling with UC at 3:00. The games will be playe on tarpaulinless Varsity Stadium.

Actually this is nothing new for veteran Mulock Cup finalists, as nearly every year the season winds up in snow or very heavy frost for at least one of the games. Last year's final, in which Forestry beat Trinity, was played in six inches of snow on the back campus.

The winners of today's games will square off with each other on Friday in the final, again at the Stadium. The teams from group one, traditionally the strongest loop, are favored to take the opposition from the lower groups.

Vic, who won group one, have been at least in the semi-finals every year since the war (if not earlier). Mal Frazor, John Bond, and Jim Goodfellow do most of the ball-carrying, while Lorne Lodge, playing his fourth year for the Scarlet and Gold, shares the quarterback slot with John Fowler. George Hevenor does the kicking. Ends John Anderson and Art Williams are playing their third years in Interfaculty football. In the middle of the line Jim Rogers, Pete McMurtry, and Tony Lobraico do much of the heavy work.

Junior Skule, the group three champs, coached by OCE men Ken Yates and Jee Hunt, are built around triple threat backfielder Bill Horton, with Pete Bannist and Norm Newell also lugging t ball. Fred Spratt, last year wi the Intermediates, and Bob Var lead the line from the tackle po tion.

UC has a strong running attac with high scorer Ed Richards and Ralph Brown carrying most the time, and Dan Patterson quar terbacking. Ex-intermediates Ar Cringan and Carl Naumoff are up front.

Trinity were finalists last yea expect the Cup this year. Doug An dison is a fine quarterback, an throws a lot to Corcoran and Mer dith, while Al Scrivener and Do Lawson carry the mail.

Track

The members of the Intercollegiate track and harrier teams are requested to attend a meeting at Hart House Wednesday at 1 o'clock. The harrier teams' pictures will be taken at the same time, so members that have uniforms out should bring them.

Speaking Of Sport

By BRUCE MACDONALD

$11,000 seems like a great deal of money to most of us, especially when it is spent for a hunk of canvas, but when you compare that trifling sum with the 130,000 some dollars in ticket receipts from the Grey Cup game last Saturday and then walk out on the fields a few minutes before game time and observe the results, you will probably conclude, just as we did, that it was money well spent.

Coach Masterson of the Blues commented that he had never seen a field in much better shape at any time during a football season, and he was right. The ground was firm and dry, but not too hard, to allow the cleats of a pair of football boots to sink in for a good footing. The blanket over the field had not only kept the moisture off (Athletic Association hirelings pumped between 750 to 1,000 gallons of water off the tarp on Saturday morning), but it also kept the frost out of the ground, frost that would have made for a slippery surface even without the rain when the sun began to go to work on it during the afternoon.

As an ardent Regina supporter, we were inclined to feel that Westerners were being robbed again until the last four minutes of the game rolled around. Then, with the heat on, Ottawa powered their way to three first downs to eat up the major part of the remaining minutes.

With that tremendous pitching arm of Glenn Dobbs finally connecting, any mistake on the part of Ottawa could have been disastrous, but they played some of their best ball for that four minutes.

Regina ran head on into a lot of tough luck during the first half; two costly fumbles, a couple of illegal interference penalties, and no yards penalties on two of Bruce Cummings' kicks. Then in the third quarter, the Westerners began to unravel a running attack that they were not supposed to have. They more than held their own against Ottawa with the wind in their faces. As soon as the clock signalled the start of the final quarter, Lady Luck began to look at the whole affair in a different light. Regina recovered a couple of Ottawa fumbles, and capitalized on both of them under the field generalship of Dobbs.

It was at this point in the proceedings that we felt the West would be robbed if they did not win the game. Five minutes later we had changed our minds. That downfield march of Ottawa's in the dying minutes really took the heat off and made them look more like winners than they had all afternoon.

In the thrills and chills department, this year's edition of the Grey Cup final left little to be desired. Howie Turner's romp in the first quarter, O'Malley's heave to Karpuk in the third stanza, and the kicking and passing of Dobbs were sights that Grey Cup spectators will talk about for a few days to come.

The program was interesting in spots too. Ottawa's Wagner was listed as "Virgin Wagner." Oh well, what do we care if another typesetter loses his job.

Double Blue Puckmen Defeat Sr. UC 4 to 3

By JIM PROUDFOOT

A goal by Arrigo with but two minutes to go in the game gave St. Mike's "A" a 4-3 verdict over Sr. UC in a Group 1 hockey game Friday. It was a close and rough game that finally broke out in a donnybrook in the second period. There was plenty of hard play and plenty of good play and a tie would have been a better indication of the play.

Play was speedy at the start and the first goal came at the six-minute mark when Cole of St. Mike's popped one past Hadlow from close range. The Irish went two up three minutes later when Jerome set Gobin up in the clear and he had loads of time to score. The clip was stepped up a little then and at 11:30 Fullerton put the Redmen on the scoresheet when he nabbed the puck at centre ice, skirted the St. Mike's defence and scored with a nifty shot that fooled Grossi. The Irish went two up again at 13:30, Kane taking a relay from the corner to count. It was Fullerton again at 18 minutes, pulling UC within range once more and the period ended that way.

The respective coaches apparently had something to say to their charges during the intermission because they came out snarling. Plenty of thumping and plenty of hickory, and tempers were becoming somewhat frayed. D'Arcy MacDonald of St. Mike's went off for interference at 2 minutes and he no sooner took the ice than he was followed in the cooler by his mate Cole. Halfway through the frame the brawl broke out. Six men paired off in the St. Mike's zone. The referees got in to restore peace and when the dust had cleared, Tilson of UC and Cole of the Double Blue were sitting out majors while minors went to Tovey of UC and Harwick from St. Mike's.

At 12:30 MacDonald took a pass from Tovey and went in to score and tie the game for the Redmen. UC were threatening to take the lead by St. Mike's broke away and Arrigo deked Hadlow, sailing it away to win for the Irish.

UC Takes Soccer Dents

By DES BOULT

Dame Fortune smiled on a lucky UC squad and enabled them to climb another rung of the play-off ladder as they defeated a trying and hard working team of dentists by the odd goal in three at noon yesterday. The game was an extremely well contested affair, at times showing flashes of brilliance.

The first half of the game was characterized by a fair exchange of plays. The Molarmen were at times working like a well oiled machine, and only the fine clearing of the UC backs and the capable netminding of Freddie Brauer kept them from capitalizing. The first half ended in a nil all draw.

The Molarmen opened a determined attack in the early minutes of the second half, no doubt determined to avoid a repeat of last week's stalemate. Play for the first seven minutes was concentrated in the Redmen area. Ed Fast, Ralph Hunt and Wilf Hukman led the Dentists' forward line. Their precision passing, fancy footwork, their dribbling and their trapping were things of beauty. This fancy work was soon to bring results as on a pass from somewhere in the vicinity of the UC half line Wilf Huckman made an extremely clever pass to Ed Fast. Fast trapped, dribbled and passed to Hunt who was unmarked. Hunt lobbed beautifully and had the netminder completely beaten.

This seemed to be the fillip both teams were waiting for as it was at this point that the brightest spots of this game appeared. A roughing penalty against Dents led to the award of a penalty shot. Steve Dalinaki took the kick which went straight to the keeper. An obscure rule was drawn out and a second kick was awarded. Dalinaki made no mistakes this time. The half ended and the score sheet read 1-1. The first overtime period provided the only dull moments of the game as both teams became overcautious. The score sheet remained 1-1. Early in the second overtime period, the UC squad forced a corner kick, which Dalinaki converted and led his squad to victory.

Christ Or Ike? Pacifists' Policy Not Yet Decided

There was no decision reached on the policy of the Campus Fellowship For Reconciliation Club at its roundtable discussion in Emmanuel College yesterday afternoon. Camfor is the Pacifist student's organization on the campus.

The matter in question was, "Whom shall Christians follow, Christ or Eisenhower?"

In discussing the question it was remarked that Canadians had one experience of being caught, and still it seems, they are spending too much effort and energy to prepare for war. A student added: "If we have one gun, we are not pacifists at all," and added, "I am just as much in a dilemma as anybody."

The CAMFOR members discussed the possibilities for inviting speakers from both inside and outside the campus in the future, primarily clergymen, and ossiby a sociologist.

Music Review

Boszormenyi-Nagy

For the first concert in the annual Wymilwood Sunday evening series, Bela Boszormenyi - Nagy played a program consisting of four piano sonatas by Beethoven.

Virtually all of Beethoven's popular works belong to the middle period of his creative life, from about 1800 to 1815 (from his 30th to his 45th year). This is the period during which he expressed in his music the emotional storms that most listeners associate with such works as the third and fifth symphonies, the Apassfonata sonata, and many others.

Sunday's program was particularly interesting because it consisted of works preceding and following this great creative period of Beethoven's life. In the Sonatas Op. 13 (Pathetique) and Op. 14 no. 2, we see Beethoven still a little unsure of himself, struggling with his medium. These were composed between 1795 and 1800. And in the Sonatas Op. 110 and 111, composed in 1821 and 1822, we see him as an admired and respected composer, who can look back on his struggles with a certain nostalgia.

The program enabled the artist to present in very forceful terms his opinions on the performance of Beethoven. For instance, no one could possibly doubt that Boszormenyi-Nagy believes in playing the second subject of a sonata-form movement in very free time. He did so on three separate occasions on Sunday. He leaves no doubts that the details of his interpretation are part of a scheme which presents the work as he thinks it ought to sound. And whether or not one agrees on principle with all his views, he plays with a vitality and forcefulness that carries his audience with him.

In the two early sonatas, Boszormenyi-Nagy seemed determined to avoid sentimentality in the slow movements, by playing them fairly rapidly, not too quietly and in exact time. His fast movements were freer, both in tempo and in dynamics.

The hard, brittle touch in which he specializes was particularly effective in the brusque first movement of the Op. 111 Sonata. In the quieter more relaxed Op. 110, brittleness seems less appropriate, and in the tremendously moving recitative and the slow movement which follows it, the pianist abandoned it, playing with a smooth, clear legato. In the fugue, however, he returned to an almost staccato touch, with the result that its syncopations and rhythmic irregularities received special emphasis.

The Boszormenyi-Nagy concert deserves to be long remembered and argued about. The artist showed that Beethoven's sonatas are still living, controversial things, well worth the argument and thought that goes into their interpretation.

Warm Wave

Snow is here agai

When the snow comes, people change. Salesladies have something enthusiastic to say about the weather instead of the usual dull commonplaces. Little boys are bursting with energy and deviltry, while little girls are a bit frightened by the prospect of flying snowballs. And the old ladies patiently get ready to sit out the long months of confinement.

On the streetcars the change is most noticeable; even men in black bowlers speak to the conductor without condescending voices. Friendliness rises in direct proportion to the snowfall.

With the first snowfall comes the first faint foreshadowing of the Christmas spirit. Its essence is friendliness, and people stop being just people and become mankind again.

Snow never appears but it comes hand in hand with cold. But in spite of the cold, it warms people up.

We welcome this as an indication that the thoughts we print have some repercussions. Letters that we might print do not always agree with us. Often we print them because they disagree. We print them because we believe in the dissemination of opinion, and because we believe that the publication of ideas is one of the best ways in which a fast-held opinion can be altered, be it our opinion or yours.

Most of the letters we receive are written with serious and sincere intentions. Unfortunately this is not always the case. Once in a while a correspondent takes delight in sending us a vociferous, damning letter without a signature, pleading that he doesn't think that we "will have the guts to publish it anyway."

He is probably right that we will not publish it. But it is not a question of "guts." A newspaper has to preserve certain standards of decorum and decency, whether it likes it or not.

Letters are only printable when they do not damn outright without reasons. The essential criterion for a letter is that it be reasonable.

The question of letters brings us to the philosophy of university journalism, which any university journalist must have before he will be able to defend the words he prints.

Our view of the University newspaper is that it is on the campus to preserve the inquiring spirit. It is a sort of last stronghold of idealism. In editorials, editorial articles and letters to the editor, ideals can be voiced.

Many letters that we receive—and this year's mail has come close to setting a record—we cannot print, because our space is very limited. But we do welcome them, and we do attempt to show every pertinent point of view in current issues.

What Price The Press?

The Prostitute

By WILLIAM GLENESK

Men must communicate. Does the end justify the means? Is the Press free? Is the reader free? Or is it a free-for-all? In the last of three articles, the writer looks for a way out of the brothel of prostitution in the press.

On the other side of the distorted fence hangs the sign of the New York Times and its key headline slogan: "All The News That's Fit To Print." With its fabulous news-gathering army in the metropoli of the world, the Times turns the world into a city, and sets side by side human interest stories from Cairo to Toronto and from all levels of life. The front page is a series of cubes in print, a disconnected chaos of news tidbits spread over the page like gobs of oil on water, thin, floating islands of news, selected shorts, that lift the reader's eyes unto the hills and leave them hanging there.

By printing only the "news that's fit to print," the New York Times therefore must suppress news it deems "not fit to print." And this most respectable journal from which our own home-town Globe and Mail draws so much, falls under the fire of Pilate's question: "'What is Truth?" and like the Procurator, will not stay for an answer as it cubes and condenses news.

To be "holier than thou" the Boston Christian Science Monitor out-cubes the Times in suppressing the news that's fit to print. Like Blanche in A Streetcar Named Desire, the editors tell "what ought to be the truth." In a symphony of birds and bees and animals and trees, no liquor, crime or tobacco, the Monitor helps Boston vie with Toronto for the title of Most Moral City In America. Its policy of selection is the antithesis of the tabloids, as the Chicago Tribune or the Toronto Star. It revels in editorial prudery, honesty and philanthropy. The Monitor is the white tower of dailies, in short, the saint.

Like its cohorts in the 20th Century's prostituted press, these seeming lighthouses or missions among the tabloid brothels are as sharply fanged as the other wolves, but the fangs are cut. As seen in the Journal of Andre Gide: "The camera's possibility of choosing and presenting but one aspect of reality invites it to the worst kinds of deceit." And the news that parades as truth in a paper that pretends to primarily present the news when in fact it is propaganda, an incidental to the process of marketing products, to advertising, that news is abused, and plays the role of Delilah on every stand. News must sell the paper, and is printed with a mass market in mind. Any Star ad in Time or elsewhere proves the point.

The press is not free to print the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. There is too much truth to tell, and much of it might not sell. Therefore the reader is not free, as his horizon is bound by the printed page.

The hue and cry for freedom of the press is probably the worst witch hunt of the century in reverse. Just question the news of the dailies and listen to shouts of reaction that democracy is in danger and the bulwarks of society are threaatened. As Dr. Harold Innis states in The Bias of Communication, just yesterday off the press, "Freedom of the press has been regarded as a great bulwark of our civilization and it would be dangerous to say that it has become the great bulwark of monopolies of the press. Civilizations have their sacred cows. The Middle Ages burned its heretics and the modern age threatens them with atom bombs. . . . We are in danger on the one hand of losing our objectivity and on the other hand of being placed under arrest."

Caught between houses of ill fame, we may well ask the question: "what is the way out?" It would appear from the world stage that like Sartre's play there is "no exit." Yet in the press itself "two roads diverge in a yellow wood." Though Dr. Innis sees little light in the darkness, as he quotes Laski's idea of education as the art of teaching men to be deceived by the printed word, he holds a candle to the issue in a quote from Samuel Butler: "The most important service rendered by the press and the magazines is that of educating people to approach printed matter with distrust."

If, as the Daily Herald of England holds: "The chief function of a newspaper is to report current events and interpret them to its readers," let the readers be aware that the event is mediated and re-created in black and white. If the press must have almost unlimited freedom, then it's time the publishers wielded a little responsibility with that freedom. Most of the top powers, from George McCullagh to Bertie McCormick, Hearst to Beaverbrook count far too much on their alleged influence upon public opinion and on government, and overdosed with a tonic of megalomania, these gentlemen seek and have sought to mould the minds of the masses, and in each case have failed. Dr. Gallup blushed as Truman swept to power. McCullagh blushed after a coast-to-coast talk when George Drew and the Conservatives failed in the last election. The public's patience has reached the sticking-place, and it sprinkles the news and the editor's views with salt. The press has lost its grip on the mass mind. And apathy is the result.

We need a Billy Sunday of the press. A prophet to sweep out the cobwebs of distortion and prostitution is the answer to the rampant failure of the papers to communicate the truth. Submerged in the seaweed of amorality, the press cries for an "editors anonymous" to step in, and lift these drunken sailors onto a sober plane of print.

OUR READERS WRITE

Evading The Issue

The Editor, The Varsity:

"What happened to the CCF?" This is the question that thousands are asking now that the smoke of the provincial elections have blown away.

Mr. Rutherford of the campus CCF wrote in these columns last week condemning the LPP in a slanderous way for saying that there was a crisis in the CCF and that its present policies would only have tragic results. Students will best be able to judge the truth of the LPP's assertions by the results of the provincial election.

The CCF had 21 members in the last Provincial House. In the coming one it will have two. Does that indicate a crisis in the CCF? I would remind readers of The Varsity, particularly CCF readers, that Norman Penner, when he spoke here, said, "The policies of the leaders of the CCF have only confused, discouraged and divided the people in Ontario and have opened the way for the strengthening of the two old-line parties." (Varsity, Nov. 16) The 19 CCF seats now in the hands of the Tories illustrates, in a striking way, the truth of that statement.

Approximately 140,000 CCF voters who voted in 1948 did not come out to vote this time. Why is this? The LPP insists that it was because the CCF, the Liberals and the Tories were all agreed on the fundamental issues in the election, and that there were no real differences between them. By not coming out strongly for a program of peace and calling for a united campaign by labour aganist the high cost of living and the threat of unemployment, the CCF lost out to the Tories. Having witnessed the passivity of the CCF parliamentary group during the past three years, workers could see no reason for coming out to vote for a party that was no different from the old-line parties.

Even Mr. Jolliffe admitted on the radio after the election that the losses of the CCF were partly explained by the "lack of a central issue in the campaign." There were central issues but the CCF evaded them and as a result paved the way for its own defeat.

Campus CCF'ers arise! You have nothing to lose but your reactionary leadership!

Shirley Endicott,
Chairman, Campus LPP Clubs.

Intellectual Indigestion

The Editor, The Varsity:

In a recent letter to The Varsity, Mr. William Davis suggests that childish faith be the only enlightened attitude towards religious beliefs. Intelligence, so useful elsewhere, is denied a role in the most vital field of all. People then are children, unable to judge for themselves, and should be treated as such.

Does Mr. Davis think there are some beliefs that cannot at least be discussed? Since when have we become afraid to examine our beliefs? And wouldn't uncritical swallowing of ideas make for intellectual indigestion?

The best way to erase an idea is to produce a better one. Refutation rather than suppression is the method for meeting challenges to Christian ideas.

"'Tis not by guilt the onward sweep
Of truth and right, O Lord we stay;
'Tis by our follies that so long
We hold the earth from heaven away."

Where ideas are found to be opposed, the sensible approach seems to be to give each side a fair hearing.

Why should Christianity fear examination? It's been meeting challenges for 2,000 years.

Archibald Boyd,
Graduate Economics.

OKAY SOVIET VISIT 18-3

The cheerleaders were out in full force yesterday at the Vic-Skule semi-final football game, but Jack Frost was out in full force too, so the cheerleaders built a little bonfire to keep themselves warm in between cheers. The mercury dropped below freezing point and the field was covered with snow for the game.

Tour Plan Reciprocity Requested

The principle of having Russian students visit Canadian universities, and the University of Toronto in particular, was approved by an official recorded faculty vote of 18 to 3 at the External Affairs Committee meeting last night. The EAC report will be submitted to the Students' Council tonight for ratification.

A specific preferential motion was approved by a vote of 15 to 3. This motion asks that the National Federation of Canadian University Students be asked to execute the principle of the Russian student visit, and press for reciprocity in all arrangements.

The motion states that a year long exchange of academic study would be preferred. If this should prove impossible, then a tour would be approved. If a two-way tour is not possible, then a one-way tour would be preferable to none. The motion adds that the tour would be preferred for this year, but if this is impossible, the tour should take place next year.

The committee passed an amendment to this motion that stipulates that NFCUS should have no financial obligation for the Russian tour.

A motion proposed by the St. Michael's College representative Frank Olmstead, "that the EAC should recommend that NFCUS not undertake a Russian student exchange at this time," was defeated by a faculty vote of 11 to 7.

Olmstead explained that his college was proposing this motion because it felt that the students should support their representatives' decision at the London NFCUS conference, and because it did not want a split in NFCUS. He said that NFCUS leadership in relations with the International Union of Students and in the formation of the proposed Pan-American Union was too important to be jeopardized by possible dissentions in the Federation.

Olmstead added that it was suspected at his college that the whole question of the Russian visit had been brought before the university by a small minority group who wanted to cause dissentions in the national group.

Another suggested amendment, that ISS be designated as the body to handle the question instead of

Federal Immigration Policy Hart House Debate Topic

"Resolved that this house de-ores Canada's immigration pol-
" is the topic for tonight at the cond Hart House debate.

Guest speaker for the occasion ill be the Hon. W. E. Harris, Fed-al Minister of Citizenship and mmigration. According to Mr.
Medcoff, president of the Cams Liberal Club, Mr. Harris will o give a more informal talk on a ular subject in Cartwright Hall
St. Huda's at 4:30 p.m.

Upholding the motion is Mr.
Fry, president of the Macdonald Club, who stated that "The eration policy of the Liberal overnment at Ottawa has been ked by extreme lack of courage, gence and morality. In the e of all reasonable criticism, ey continue to do nothing in the ost dilatory manner possible. Ob-viously the opinions of a few students will not cause the government to rectify its policy but nonetheless Mr. Bloom and I intend to put forth questions to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration that he will be hard put to answer without exceedingly crafty footwork."

John Medcof of the opposition said, "The present policy of selective immigration may not be the most spectacular, but it is a sensible, sure way for increasing our population with a minimum of dislocation and friction. Simply deploring the present policy is not enough. The opposition must be prepared to put across an effective alternative. At the present time this appears difficult, if not impossible."

Upholding the motion also is Mr. J. Bloom, debates chairman of the campus COF club, who claims that "There is no doubt at all that Canada needs today as never before a vigorous immigration policy. To this belief the government pays lip-service only. Both our Federal and Provincial species of Liberals seem to be unable to cope with it readily.

Time Mag Misquotes President Of Acadia

Wolfville, N.S. (CUP) — The

Kirkconnel charged that he had the subject. He explained that in Washington earlier this the alleged declaration in

. he said in The Athenaeum.
I told the reporter that the student delegation would certainly be picked mem-

I also pointed out the difficulty of finding young Canadians who spoke enough Russian to enter into the Soviet university life, who would really want to go, adding that the type of student who would be keen to go would be the fellow traveller.

Apparently, concluded Dr. Kirkconnel, one's only protection against this dishonest sort of journalism is to refuse to make any comments to any reporter at any time.

The editors of The Athenaeum also charged Time with misquoting an editorial. The magazine quoted the paper as saying that there weren't any students at Acadia intellectually capable of discussing politics and economics with visiting Russians.

"No mention of the intellectual capabilities of Acadia's students was made," said The Athenaeum.

Model And Paint Varsity Art Night

The Varsity Art Gallery Night, this year, will take the Varsity students behind the scenes in the field of Art. Instead of looking at pretty pictures and statues, Varsity students will have the opportunity to observe art in the making.

Graduates from the Ontario College of Art will act as demonstrators. Three of the artists demonstrating painting portraits of a model provided for the occasion will be Gus Wisman, Royal Academy scholarship winner; Sydney Ledson, exhibitor, who paints English portraiture in the English style as distinct from the Canadian and American; Barbara Howard, winner of the OCA Lieutenant Governor's Medal for painting, and instructor of children's classes during the week at the Gallery. She is a painter of landscapes and figures.

Another section of this Art Gallery night is "Try Your Hand." Sculptors as well as painters will participate. Frances Gaye, honorary graduate of OAC works with clay. James Williamson will instruct the painting.

Three contests for the observing students are also a part of Art Gallery Night.

One is "Now I Ask You." After a conducted tour, the students will be asked details about the pictures they have seen.

Another is to match up six paintings with the three artists who painted them.

And the third contest is to make up titles for an abstract painting. The ones who guess the closest to the name of the painting get prizes. There are prizes for the other contests also.

Guides for the tour are: Ann Murray, IV Art and Archaeology at Trinity, and Mr. Simmonds, taking a Masters degree in Art and Archaeology.

This is the second annual Art Gallery Night. It was instituted last year and the debut was a success, according to Hugh Niblock, Blue and White Publicity Director to the extent that the President of the Engineering Society and the President of the Medical Society were seen sitting and sketching each other.

The Art Gallery Night will be held Thursday, November 29, at 8:00 in the Toronto Art Gallery.

Porter Talks In West Hall

Tonight's Political Science Club meeting will be held in West Hall University College at 8 o'clock. Dana Porter, Attorney General for Ontario will be the guest speaker. The topic of his address is "Law and Politics." There will be a discussion period after the speech.

UC Planning A Pep Rally For Finalists

"The campus is finally going to see a pep rally, according to Larry Nichols, 3rd year president at University College. Nichols said that there will be a pep rally at the Women's Union for the Red and White team on Wednesday night in conjunction with the Red and White night. UC will meet Vic in the Mulock Cup playoffs on Friday.

There will be a skit, from the UC Follies, a new cheer, and the team will be introduced at the pap rally, Nichols said. He felt that the Mulock Cup might as well be presented to UC at this time as he claimed that the UC team was undoubtedly superior as shown by their 15 to 5 win yesterday.

The UC Literary and Athletic Society executive, he said, feel that the team should be given the support of the whole college and have asked everyone at UC to come to this Red and White Night. He added that they were trying to make arrangements for a UC section at the stadium on Friday.

To Investigate Athletic Setup At Queen's U

Kingston (CUP) — An investigation of the athletic setup at Queen's University will be instituted following a recommendation of the Athletic Board of Control (the AB of C). The recommendation was made to the Alma Mater Society, Queen's student council.

The athletic organizations at other universities are to be studied, and if they prove to be more efficient than the present organization at Queen's the committee will recommend changes.

Included in the investigation committee will be a member of the AMS, of the AB of C and a person appointed by the principal of the university.

At the present time the Athletic Board of Control is constituted as a subcommittee of the AMS. It is composed of students, members of the faculty and private citizens who are interested in athletics at Queen's. It received its authority from the university senate.

The scene above is from the Great Hall in Hart House where new special meals are being served at noon every day. These meals are served for 35 cents and are, in most cases, cheaper than carried lunches. The action seems to be a result of a falling off of those who spend 50 cents or more for noon-hour meals as has been the case till now.

Campus UN Club May Have No Ve For Model Counc

Organization is already underway for the Model Security Council which the United Nations Club is holding on the campus December 5. The regular meeting of the U.N. Groups are meeting this week to study background material which will enable them to represent their chosen countries at the Council.

The Security Council on which the UN Club's function will be modelled is a permanent Council of United Nations. Painting For H H Chosen

Hart House permanent art collection recently bought a new picture. The new addition to the collection is Ghitta Caiserman's "Boy With Chicken."

Last week members of Hart House were asked to vote, indicating their preference, on which of the nine pictures hung in the Map Room the Art Committee should purchase. The Art Committee was not bound by the vote.

Many students felt that the paintings on display were not up to the standard of the Hart House Collection. The Art committee shared this view.

The picture purchased by the Art Committee "Boy With Chicken" polled fourth in the voting. The most popular painting on display was "Okanagan Valley" by Bruno Bobak.

Bishop's Is Sixth To Approve Russ Student Visit To Canada

Montreal (Special) — Bishop's University at Lennoxville, Quebec, yesterday became the sixth Canadian University to vote its approval of the proposed exchange of students between Canada and the Soviet Union. Since Canada's National Federation of Canadian University Students turned thumbs down on the proposal last September five other universities have voted approval of the question.

At the NFCUS meeting in September the national body decided not to participate in the exchange by a vote of 12 to six of the universities there. Bishop's University was one of the six that were in favor of it then.

Meanwhile, in McGill, the student officials there were still waiting to hear the NFCUS executive's answer to the request of the McGill student society that NFCUS take a new vote on the matter.

NFCUS President, Jean Demargerie, Laval medical student, has announced that he would ask the five-man NFCUS executive whether or not the case should be reopened.

Until now four student bodies besides McGill and Bishop's have declared their support of the exchange, and one, Saskatchewan, has voted against it. The four in favour of it are: University of British Columbia, the Universities of Montreal and Alberta, and McDonald College (affiliated with McGill in Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec.

Last night the SAC External Affairs Committee voted to support the visit. The EAC decision will be up for ratification at tonight's meeting of the Students' Administrative Council.

CBC Censorship Aired after Talk

By JERRY BROWN

"Science and values in Modern Culture" was the subject of a talk given by Professor John Irving to the Toronto School of Social Studies last night. Dr. B. K. Sandwell, editor Emeritus of Saturday Night was chairman.

One phase of the controversial CBC broadcasts was cleared up for the audience. The final three broadcasts are not cancelled as wos formerly believed, but were stopped only in Ontario for the purpose of allowing some time to the candidates running in the provincial election. The whole series of six talks was carried by the CBC across the whole of Canada. The only exception to this was the final three that were omitted in Ontario because of the provincial elections.

In an intervied after the talk Dr. B. K. Sandwell stated that there should be the "broadest possible freedom" in regard to public talks, writings and the like." He feels that radio on the other hand is a mode of communication that is different from the rest and that in this medium there should be "reasonable controls." He also stated that he felt that the control exercised by the CBC in regard to the broadcasts now being produced was sufficient so that no more "statutes" should be imposed in this regard.

Dr. Sandwell has been criticized for an article in which he was supposed to have supported the censorship that was advised by many listeners. Many listeners felt that the radio should not have been used to air the views of the scientists in fields in which they were not supposed to have been qualified. He felt that in this regard the radio, which is such an important and influential medium of communication, certain slight restrictions should be observed to preserve dignities of special groups of thought.

VIC INFORMAL

Something Fishy

Visitors to Hart House Friday night will find themselves on the floor of the ocean at the Vic Informal. For this occasion, King Neptune, Davy Jones and a bevy of mermaids have been transported to their natural setting to Hart House.

The whole idea of decorating Hart House in an underwater setting was originated by a small group of Vic students headed by Alex Gigeroff. Starting with a budget of $75 which was spent entirely on paper and paint, forty Vic students responded to an appeal for people with no artistic talent and set to work.

Each of the three teams, headed by Mel Moyer, Lois White and Alex Gigeroff, was made responsible for decorating one room. Since most of the volunteers have had little experience in art, they were given the task of filling in outlines of figures drawn by the more talented workers. The few "artists" of the group added the finishing touches to the drawings to give them three-dimensional qualities.

The ideas for the weird-shaped fish and exotic underwater plans came from library books, but the designing of the actual decorations was done by Alex Gigeroff.

In keeping with the aquatic atmosphere, the program will be printed on green paper. Included in the entertainment will be a quartet singing sea shanties, a comedian telling fish stories, and a ballet by three girls costumed as fish. Some may be interested to know that to save money the girls will be wearing green kerchiefs — over ballet tights.

Through the haze of blue, green and amber lights in the Gym of Hart House, three - dimensional fish made of revolving discs will be suspended from a false ceiling of waves made of triangles of colored paper. Along the walls will be painted schools of 12-foot sea horses and huge fish swimming among colorful sea plants. One of the monstrous octopi which has tenacles 20 feet long, was so large that it had to be constructed in sections.

The decoration of the East Common Room posed a serious problem due to strict rules of Hart House which prohibit the use of sticky paper on the walls, and the pictures hanging on the walls cannot be removed. It was finally decided to suspend panels of pictures all around the room. This room will be turned into King Neptune's Throne Room. At one end of the room will be a 12-foot high picture of King Neptune seated on his throne, guarded by two seahorses, and across from it will be a maypole with mermaids riding around it on porpoises and turtles.

The final room to be decorated will be transformed into Davy Jones' Locker, but in the style of a cabaret with tables grouped about the room. On the walls will be pictures of a party with sailors, pirates and mermaids dancing and drinking at tables, served by walrus waiters and an octopus bartender. And dominating this room will be Davy Jones himself, complete with peg leg; a mug of beer in one hand and with the other pulling up a beautiful blonde mermaid by the hair.

Discuss Aid Plan At Special Meet

A special meeting to discuss the scheme for Student Help for Asian Relief and Education was authorized at last night's meeting of the External Activities Commission. The meeting has been scheduled to review the structure, budget and method to be used to raise the $11,000 objective of the campaign.

It will be urged that EAC representatives, college and faculty students and all students interested in the campaign attend. Object of the meeting will be to assure that SHARE will function in the best manner possible to assure success. The meeting is scheduled for next Friday.

At the meeting the proposed budget was adopted for the campaign. Universities in five South East Asian countries, Pakistan, Thailand, Indonesia, India and Assam have been chosen to receive $4,200 aid specifically, while an equal amount will be used for relief for universities that the International Student Service (World University Service may designate. All funds are to be administered through the WUS (WUS) just as last year's All-University Aid Campaign funds.

The remainder of the budget will be used for campaign expenses, exchange scholarships, and maintaining the national and international office of ISS (WUS).

A motion was also passed at the meeting requesting that all correspondence relating ta the receipt of shipment of 1950-51 All Varsity Aid supplies to the universities in India and Pakistan be placed before the EAC. The motion was put on the floor after comment suggesting that effort should be put forward to find out what has happened to the supplies. It was also remarked that knowledge of receipt and appreciation of the supplies would be a great incentive towards contributing to the campaign.

By the time SHARE came up for discussion most of the people at the meeting had left. It was felt that such an important question as SHARE needed to be aired there was more complete representation.

By DAVE PEDDIE

Christopher Fry, who wrote the two plays to be shown next in Hart House Theatre, THE BOY WITH A CART and A PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT, has had a rapid and remarkable rise to fame. Two years ago he was unknown here and just coming into the limelight in England. Yet in those two years he has had four plays produced on Broadway and about six in London and he is being acclaimed by all as a great poet and dramatist — the successor to the Elizabethans and the leader of the movement back to poetic drama. Whether poetic drama needs verse (Ibsen and Chekov were poets) is not a question to tackle here, but Fry has brought many to hope for a new poetic drama. People are prone to go overboard at first but there is no doubt that Mr. Fry has ability and, whether he improves or not, his plays are still very entertaining to listen to.

His first plays were religious one-act plays that try to explain the religious experience of ordinary people to ordinary people. BOY WITH A CART is such a play and though there is an elaborate allegory worked out this is not essential for an understanding of the play. It certainly cannot be grasped while one watches the performance. The play is, however, an improvement over THOR, WITH ANGELS which was put on by the U.S. Plays Guild last year. The verse is still awkward and the structure of the play heavy, but it has a certain charm and spontaneity that was missing in THOR.

The other play to be shown at Hart House A PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT, is more like the long plays which have earned Fry his reputation. It is straight comedy with no religious message. Any thought as such is given in an epigramatic form and is usually a happy coincidence of thought and poetic style.

Fry loves metaphors and he loves especially unusual metaphors. Often this leads to a debased poetry where he strains after some effect and loses both the meaning and the effect. But by the time he wrote PHOENIX he was beginning to get control of his style and the figures and images are often both surprising, delightful and illuminating.

In the longer plays, THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING and VENUS OBSERVED, Fry has written simple comedies. These two plays were written for John Gielgud and Lawrence Olivier respectively and the chief character in each is the type of person one expects to break out in sophisticated comic verse. In this way Fry has esaped the earlier criticism that his characters were not people but recters of poetry. By suiting the man to the verse Fry has been successful. Would Shakespeare or Jonson do such a thing? But of course Mr. Fry must learn the craft anew and he must break through his verse. As things stand he cannot make the poetry take on the character of the person speaking. It is a grievous fault but perhaps Fry will eventually overcome it. Certainly the improvement that is noticeable between THE LADY'S NOT FOR BURNING and VENUS OBSERVED is heartening. In the former there are only about three distinctive characters aside from the lead Thomas Mandip, but in VENUS there are at least four very strong characters and the others are individual if not terribly strong and life-like.

To my mind this last named play is the best Fry has written and PHOENIX is a close second. Fry has as yet nothing to say in his comedies except "ain't life grand — also love!" He says it of course in a delightful swinging way so that it is entertaining but it can be said as easily in a short play like PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT as in a full-length play. We are lucky, I think, to be able to see so good an example of the new poetic dramatist's work as A PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT.

It might be added here that when this play closed in New York after a run of only a few days, the excuse given was that the actors could not handle the verse and the play lacked the charm and spontaneity that are its excuse for living. Let us therefore hope and play for those students who have to give this mouthful of words on Hart House stage on Friday night.

Attention Skulemen

Editor, The Varsity:

Herewith are some comments on Monday's letter of F. M. Angebrandt, IV Mechanical, in regard to your report on the Engineering 'Russian Student' vote.

Mr. Angebrandt is certainly entitled to his own views on your reporting, but a few misunderstood items of information need clarification:

1. Seventy-two engineers voted, and the Engineering Society has every ballot. (One ballot was given to each S.P.S. student, and to nobody else, upon his appearance at the meeting. Identification was made by presentation of Registration Cards, or, as in the case of Angebrandt, by recognition of a known Skule face.

2. The meeting lasted 46 minutes, divided as follows:

(a) 16 minutes for a description of N.F.C.U.S. and its International Affairs Commission, by Syd Wax, including a brief outline of events leading up to the campus vote.

(b) 6 minutes for the answering of any questions about N.F.C.U.S. (and some of these involved the Russian question) by Joan Presant, local N.F.C.U.S. Chairman.

(c) 2 minutes for introduction of speakers, etc.

(d) 9 minutes for a listing of some pros and cons for each question on the ballot, by Ron Turner, Engineering Society External Affairs Representative.

(e) 13 minutes for a question period on the vote.

The pre-publicity for the meeting did not imply that the meeting was for the Russian problem only; furthermore, no sensible vote could possibly be taken without a reasonable understanding ing by all of the background information. You shouldn't vote on Russian students being invited by N.F.C.U.S. if you don't know:

(a) what NFCUS is (and many engineers don't).

(b) why and how the problem has arisen.

3. The vote was as close as reported. The Varsity recorded the results as given to the News Office by the meeting chairman, D. Sherk.

4. NFCUS did not sponsor the meeting. The Engineering Society (of which every undergraduate engineer is a member) did.

5. Although the arrangements made were last-minute, causing a very short notice for the meeting, announcements were made in all four years. All Skulemen, then, (who attended lectures) were notified of the meeting, which was held in the lunch hour. There seems to be little justification in the statement requesting 'any practical scheme whereby the true feelings of the engineers can be ascertained and reported'. The secret ballot, at a meeting open to all, is the best recognized method of registering opinion.

I Hope that some misunderstandings have been cleared up.

Doug Sherk,

Defeat Explained

Editor, The Varsity:

In yesterday's Varsity, Miss Shirley Endicott attempted to explain much too simply the cause of the CCF defeat in the Ontario election of last week. Simple answers to complicated problems are always wron, and that certainly applies here.

She assumes that our defeat was due to the fact that we didn't come out for peace and labor unity. In other words we refused to support the Moscow version of peace and unity with the LPP (Communist Party). We do not know any one cause which defeated the CCF, but we do know that these reasons are entirely irrelevant. Had we done these things that would have meant the end of the party. Some of the tactics used by the Communists against the CCF in this election amply prove that any sort of co-operation with them is unthinkable.

In our post-mortems we have merely suggested some of the reasons for our temporary defeat. It may be one or all of these, but has nothing to do with the Communist program of peace and labor unity.

(1) Many people voted for the CCF in 1948 because they were opposed to George Drew and they felt that the CCF had the best chance to beat him. The central figure of the controversy in this election was Walter Thomson, and believe that many people thought they had a better chance to defeat him by voting Conservative. This is a negative attitude on the part of the voters, but is nevertheless a strong factor in elections.

(2) The Frost Government had made considerable concessions in the matter of social security since 1948, with the CCF prodding them. However, this was apparently enough to satisfy some people or make them so indifferent that they stayed home on voting day.

(3) The Conservatives had larger amounts of money for propaganda purposes than the CCF did, and they used this method very effectively.

(4) The figures point to the fact that the union support did not turn out to vote as before. This might indicate that the CCF should do more of its work directly among the union members than through the union organization itself. Some union men have already suggested this alternative.

These are not necessarily my own opinions or the opinions of my club, but they are the varying opinions of a large body of CCF supporters. However, we have suffered defeats before, and we have made come-backs, which will happen again.

Five Approaches To World's Problem

Editor, The Varsity:

Hereunder you will find an answer to the world's problem re: war.

Different persons will require different answers, therefore this letter will consider five good days of solving personal war problems. They are: Religion, Nature, Fanatacism, Channelled interest, Love of mankind in general.

Religion. Whether you be Hebrew, Christian, Hindu, or if your religion is sufficient unto you, there is nothing more important, then your problem is already answered. For in religion one finds the answer to death and to the many dangers which the world inflicts on you. Religion overrules the fear of death or of wounds, and as a result the true believer has no fear of war which will bring no worse than these two. No matter what you read in the remainder of this letter in this I am absolutely sincere.

Nature. The person who is not covered by this former safeguard from the horrors of war, may perhaps find in nature the answer. The greatest geniuses have looked at nature, and found solace from the mental torture that confronts them. I consider that a man must suffer to ever become a genius. Men look at nature and sees the beauty around them. It is good and they look farther and see themselves as a part of that nature. If we be a part then what happens to us is good, because nature is good. In this way a person may answer the problem of war (through philosophical considerations).

Channelled interest. An example of this may be found in a consideration of the members of the "little red skule house." Here we get channelled interest to the greatest degree. Why should a war put any into members of such a clan. They could go into war singing "Lady Godiva," and drinking forty beers. With forty beers any followers of the channelled interest theory would have no fear or dissatisfaction with the results of war.

Fanaticism. This is a higher form of channelled interest, and is more likely to be found in (as skule would say) an arts type. If you can become reasonably fanatic about a philosophical consideration, it will become more valuable than life itself, and as a result war, the taking of lives, will be no menace to the person. As a matter of fact it may be be a blessing to die before the truth comes in and overcomes ones fanatasticism or is it fanaticism.

Love of mankind in general. This is a much used phrase and perhaps overworked. But my idea of its meaning will put a new light in your eyes. Some say that a substance, or principle is measured, or understood only in relation to the amount of, or abscence of its opposite. I have tried and tried, and I still cannot believe that one person will without any other reason, but to cause harm, actually commit an act which will have a harmful effect on his fellow man. I therefore come to the conclusion that love of mankind is universal.

Round Two

By BILL HOYT, Vice President NFCUS

The editorial referred to here was reprinted in the November 22 issue of The Varsity, entitled Isolationism. It contended that the reason for Acadia's rejection of the Russian student exchange proposal was not made on isolationist grounds.

Reprinted from the Acadia Athenaeum

Our October 16 editorial has begun a great controversy among the Canadian Universities that compose NFCUS. Our only reaction is: Great, it should have happened a long time ago.

The main thesis in that editorial was that the larger institutions were attempting to force their opinions on smaller colleges. As an example we cited the proposal to bring 15 Communists to this country on a sea to sea tour of Canada in general and universities in particular. One university in particular, McGill, has from the first attempted to bulldoze its ideas on the remaining members. At London they displaced four men on the commission which studied international affairs, while the four Maritime members only placed one. A look at commission reports will show how one McGillian would move a question while another would second it. Their proposed Canada-wide referendum is another example. If the students of the five largest universities voted 2-1 to bring the Commies over and the students of the remaining 17 voted unanimously to reject the proposal, still McGill's stand would triumph. We call that tyranny of the majorities. Their biggest display was yet to come. It came with the November 19 issue of Time. Here we were conveniently misquoted with Time's usual sensationalism. Still they have the face to continually accuse us of using the same tactics.

We would remind McGill and all others that the "N" in NFCUS is for National and as yet we aren't IFCUS, which we are fast becoming. If McGill has so much excess energy, then she might help to establish NFCUS more firmly in the Maritimes rather than kill it completely here. Remember our last venture into international affairs cost us a leading member—St. F. X., while at the same time we have nothing to show for that loss. Let's not let it happen again. Next time it might be more than one. Once we have established NFCUS strongly on all campi, then let us sally forth into that great field of international diplomacy. Then, and only then, will we be able to be assured of the support of all member colleges in all phases of NFCUS work, both here and abroad.

Cannon Opens Auction Of Unusual, Unnamed

The third Skule Auction in two years, to be held today, is guaranteed by D. K. Turner, Chief Auctioneer, to sink to lower depths than ever before. Although the nature of articles to be sold cannot be released for security reasons, it is reasonable to expect that they will be, at the least, unusual.

It is rumored that some surplus football equipment, left over from Skule's unsuccessful Mulock Cup effort this year, will be on the auction block.

Contrary to reports, neither Johnny Metras nor the Medical Building will be sold.

Doug Christie, Publicity Member of the School (not Skule) Dinner Committee, said yesterday, "The auction is traditionally held to publicize (or subsidize) the annual School Dinner, which this year will be held Wednesday, Dec. 5, in the Great Hall of Hart House. There are less than 350 tickets for the dinner, many of which have already gone. Price of the ticket includes the smoker to be held afterwards, and two pints of liquid refreshments.

"The proceeds of the auction," he continued, "less the buckets they are collected in, will be donated to the Red Feather Campaign."

The Skule Cannon will be out of hiding to announce the official start of the auction. The Lady Godiva Memorial Band, bolstered by a new Latrineophone, will also be there to make the proceedings more audible.

The auction will be held when the cannon strikes one, at the north door of the Skule Building.

ART REVIEW

Calgary Show

The current exhibition in the Hart House Art Gallery consists of twenty paintings by four young Calgary artists. The show will remain on the walls until December 9th, 1951.

The show has surprising unity. All the artists use contemporary idioms, mostly to achieve a rather representational effect. They understand and appreciate what the abstract can give visually and emotionally, but realize the danger of isolating painting from other visual experience. They are progressive, but not preoccupied with their avant-garde'ism.

All the paintings have exceptional spatial qualities and an openess suggestive of the western prairies. All four artists are city dwellers, which explains their interest in people, figural composition with architectural backgrounds and the search for the more spectacular in the landscapes. All four artists handle their colors well, in both the harmonies and the values. Every picture has a certain restraint and a definite colour scheme which, perhaps with the exception of R. F. Spickett's canvases does not tend to be stereotyped and sterile.

Gregory Arnold's abstracts are the liveliest shown in the gallery for a long time. The two oils "Abstract No. 1" and "Abstract No. 3" have a great deal of plasticity, mainly by the use of transparency of superimposed planes.

Roy Kiyooka achieves the highest degree of a happy blend of the abstract and a moody, almost romantic, painting. His evening scenes of city dwellings depict a treasury of geometric shapes and at the same time they suggest the sleeping, tired people inside. In the two black-and-white water colour-tempera drawings, the use of pure abstraction is more pronounced but used only as a device for enrichment and a better understanding of reality.

George Mihalcheon's "Newsy", "Shoppers" and "Boy and Kite" show his sensitivity for design and colours. These have a lightness and a sort of transparency which is rarely found in the works of artists living on this continent.

R. J. Spickett supplies the largest and most complicated canvases. He blends the geometric and the human. Unfortunately, in most cases, the human element becomes too hard to be human and too complicated to be a comprehensive pattern. Only in the "People of the Citadel" and "Work" the human element gains by being forced into geometrical forms.

On the whole the show presents a very mature approach to art, influenced by both the American and the European outlook. It seems rather surprising that this blend should come from the West, rather than from the East, but the exhibition certainly indicates this.

Mr. A. Y. Jackson, member of the group of seven, will review the show on December 5th at 5:00 p.m. in the Gallery. Both women and men of the University are cordially invited.

J. Kamenicek.

UC, VIC GAIN MULOCK FINALS

Hidden Ball Trick ?

Redmen Turn Eskimo Beating Trinity 15-5

By DAVID ROTENBERG

University College Redmen ground out a 15-5 win over Trinity College at the Stadium yesterday afternoon, and moved into the Mulock Cup finals. The big game for the silverware will be played at the Bloor Bowl on Friday at 1:45 and UC will meet Victoria, who defeated Junior Skule by an identical score in the first tilt of yesterday's twin bill.

The game was closer than the score would indicate, but the UC squad were able to take advantage of the breaks and score the points. Both of the winners' majors were the direct result of intercepted passes, and they added a field goal arfter a blocked kick.

Both teams were unable to gain ground on line plunges as the defenders played well. The Trinity squad took to the air for their big gains, while the Redmen used the end sweep to advantage. Red Andison, who plays quarter for the Buttery Boys threw the amazing total of 26 passes but was able to complete only eight, most of them of the short variety.

Biggest factor in the UC win was the stellar play of the team on defence. Carl Naumoff at centre secondary did a terrific job, while Pete Gawinski turned in one of the best tackling performances of the season. Further back Danny Cucin and Pete Nichols looked after the tertiary spots very well. Both turned in some hard tackles and led the team in intercepting five of the enemy passes. They also showed well in running back Gaunt's kicks.

It took less than three minutes for the winners to hit the scoresheet. After an exchange of kicks, Trinity took over the ball on their own 31. Andison threw a pass on the first play, but it was intercepted at the 45 by Gerry Love, who ran unmolested over the goal line for the touchdown. UC coach Max Lister finally found a place kicker in Pete Nichols, and he booted the convert to give the Redmen a 6-0 lead.

The rest of the half was pretty even, with most of the play in the Trinity end. Both teams made four first downs in the half, with Trinity relying on off-tackle smashes and short passes, while the UC'ers made their big gains on long end sweeps by Brown and Richardson.

UC's second major, early in the third quarter was set up by another interception. Nichols snared a Trinity pass on the Red and Black 40 and ran all the way to the seven before being brought down by three tacklers. Brown hit the centre for two and then Richardson swept around the left end and went over standing up. Nichols again made the convert good.

Trinity took the kickoff but on the second play Bruce Evans broke through to hit Andison for a 15 yard loss. Gaunt dropped back to kick, but Pete Earl got in front of it and Evans fell on the loose ball at the ten. The Trinity line tightened up, and on third down Nichols booted a field goal to give his team a fifteen point lead.

The Buttery Boys finally got rolling late in the third quarter, and for the first time in the game took the ball over the centre stripe. Gaining possession on their own 39, they took the ball all the way, scoring the major early in the last quarter. Doug Lawson did the majority of the carrying in the TD drive, but the big gain was by Rick Gaunt who ran for 15 yards on a fake kick. Al Steedman got the major smashing over from the one, but the convert attempt went astray as the snap was bad. This made the score 15-5, and the Buttery boys didn't come close to paydirt again.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

1951 is just about history as far as the grid game in Canada goes, but there are a couple of rule changes which you can bet your next year's season ticket will be made before the teams start practising next summer.

One will be the elimination of the rule requiring players entering the game to wait behind the head linesman one full play bfore entering the game. With the introduction of two-platooning with offensive and defensive teams by Argos' Frank Clair and Ottawa's Clem Crowe, and to a limited extent by Alouettes' Lew Hayman and some Western clubs, this rule came under plenty of fire this year. Whenever there was a fumble or intercepted pass, the defensive team would find itself in there with the ball and the offensive team would be standing on the sidelines looking daggers at the head linesman's posterior. The affair became slightly ridiculous last Saturday when Regina recovered fumbles twice in two consecutive series of plays, and defensive backs went off faking injuries in order to get Dobbs, the quarterback, on for the first play.

Another one that will very likely go in this year's sessions of the rules committees will be the dressing limit of 24 players for Intercollegiate and Big Four games. The Intercollegiate just raised the limit from 20 to 24 three or four years ago, but at least one coach would like to see the limit raised or thrown out entirely. If Hart House theatre boss Robert Gill had ever seen the dramatic heights which Bob Masterson is capable of attaining in denouncing this rule, while at the same time tearing his hair trying to decide which players would not play the next Saturday, he would be after Bob to mix a little Shakespeare in with his coaching duties. Almost every week the same decision came up — which of his right halfbacks would have to watch the game from the stands, John Adams or Murray Hadlow? We see no reason why a player who is able to make the team should be forbidden to play in the games.

Blocking for the receivers of punts and kick-offs will not likely come in for another year or two, but we think it would liven up a rather deadly aspect of the game. With the tacklers rolling up on the receiver like a blanket, and no blockers to take any of them out as they prepare to make the tackle (which after all is the only time a block does much good) he has a hopeless task. The only times we have even seen a punt or a kick-off run back a very long way on this side of the border were when the receiver hynotised the tacklers. There are few prettier sights in football than that of blockers cutting a path right across and down the field for a ball-carrier, much better than most plays from scrimmage where the play is usually bunched in tight.

To allow blocking beyond ten yards from scrimmage would not make much difference, except that it would make the officials' job easier . If a team could clear away all defenders for ten yards every other play they could march right up the field, as the rules are now. Nevertheless, unlimited interference would at least rid the game of the spectacle of beautiful runs being called back because somebody blocked too far.

Scarlet & Gold Oust Jr. SPS

By BRUCE NORTH

Victoria College gained the right to enter the Mulock Cup finals yesterday afternoon at Varsity Stadium as they defeated Junior SPS 15-5. The score should have been at least three touchdowns higher. Victoria failed to score from inside the Skule 5 yard line on three different occasions and the Engineers were robbed of another.

Surprisingly enough the standout of the game was an Engineer. Half Bill Horton put on one of the best passing displays seen in the interfaculty loop this season. However his receivers had dropsy. He completed only 11 out of 26 but at least six more of those should have been complete. During one phase of the game he dropped the ball right into the arms of his teammates three times in succession and they in turn dropped it also. On another occasion, a touchdown pass to Babirad hit the goal-post.

The Skule line played a spotty game. They allowed the Vicsters to score twice on running plays from fairly far out, but when the Artsmen got close to the goal line, they tightened right up. Ends Bob Cockfield and Fred Smale did a good job in stopping one of Vic's most potent plays, John Bond's sweep around the end. Captain Fred Spratt and centre Dave McCamus also turned in stellar performances for Skule on the wingline.

But Victoria obviously had the better team. They kept the Skulemen bottled up in their own end for nearly three quarters of the game. There weren't many defensive standouts for Victoria mainly due to the fact that they were hardly ever on the defensive. Ends Mel Moyer and Art Williams, tackles Ed File and John Wilson all played well for Victoria. The Engineers never made any large gains through the line.

Victoria took the lead early in the first quarter when George Hevenor got off a booming punt well over the SPS goal line and Paul Evans conceded the point.

At the start of the second stanza, John Bond took a handoff from Lodge and went forty-five yards around the right end to make it 6-0.

Late in the second quarter, Lorne Lodge threw a pass to Mal Frazor who carried to the Skule 20. After an end run and another pass gained nothing, Frazor went off-tackle for the second Vic major. Ross Murry and Carmen Cummings did the blocking on the play.

Skule had their backs to the wall throughout the third stanza. Lorne Lodge caried the ball to the Skule 7 on a couple of long runs. Victoria than took three cracks at the line and failed, After a poor kick by Skule, Hevenor took a pass from Bond and went to the SPS 5. Two more bucks and a pass and Victoria flopped again.

Early in the fourth quarter, the Engineers were trying to advance the ball from their 1 when Mel Moyer broke through and nailed Bruce Day behind the goal-line for 2 points.

In the fourth quarter, Horton's receivers finally settled down. Starting on his own 50, he threw Small which carried them down several passes to Cockfield and to the Vic 14. He then hit Norm Newell with another and Newell went over standing up for the lone Skule touchdown.

Skule halves Pete Bannister and Oliver Babirad were also good. Art Williams converted both Victoria majors.

Women's Sports Staff

There will be a meeting of the women's sports staff today at 1:00, in the News Office. Will Carol Logan, Joan Haggart, Shirley Lane, Carolyn Schmidt, Kay Schenk, Ann Clark, Heather MacPherson, as well as any others who have written or would like to write women's sports, please attend.

Pitching Sportshoes

Aside from the Intramural football semi-finals, sports activity was at a minimum yesterday. There was only one hockey tilt carded, and in this, SPS IV trimmed Meds III 6-2. Hayman led the winning Engineers with a three goal display, while teammates Bolton, Jessop and Eloranta netted one apiece. For the losers, Jones and Gear tallied once each.

The volleyball play has reached the play-off stage. In last night's activity, SPS teams came up with two wins. The Skule IV's beat UC VI 15-4 and 15-5 while the III's took Meds IV 15-6, 16-14. In the other contest, Emmanuel A took a 15-11, 15-8 win from the Dents A crew.

"THE NOTE TAKER (Higgins): Heavens! What a sound! Ah-ah-ah-ow-ow-ow-oo!

THE FLOWER GIRL: Garn!

THE NOTE TAKER: You see this creature with her kerbstone English; the English that will keep her in the gutter to the end of her days. Well sir, in three months I could pass that girl off as a duchess at an ambassador's garden party. . . ."

Bernard Shaw, Pygmalion. (Transcribed in a certain type of cultured South of England English.)

Direct speech, or speech transmitted into some sort of code, is the only unfailingly exact way of cummunicating thought. Besides this, a man's use of language tells an infinity of things about his personality, his intelligence, his social milieu and his entire upbringing. Change his speech, and you change the man; this was Shaw's idea, and many people would agree with it.

Considering how vital language is, it is surprising how little people know about the mechanics of it. A speaker's most eloquent outpourings can be reduced to precise scientific terms of sound, with its varying qualities of pitch and intensity. There is nothing hit-or-miss about the science of linguistics.

One's speech depends on habit and exercise, and the obstacle in the way of learning a new language or dialect is largely psychological. It has been demonstrated by research that any normal human mouth, whether it belongs to an Oxford professor, an African Bushman, a Kentucky hillbilly or Charles Boyer, is mechanically capable of making any human sound whatever. By careful training of the ear and the organs of speech, a good phonetician can do wonders with any cooperative subject. It takes a person with a better-than-average ear to achieve perfection in a foreign anguage, but a moderately talented student can come closer to this goal by phonetic training than by any other method.

A simple, practical phonetics lab like the one in University College may be equipped only with sensitive recording apparatus run by skilled teachers. Students are taught that if their mouth is in exactly the right position, the right sound is bound to come out. They are taught the rhythm and the pattern of intonation in the language they are studying. They hear the instructor speaking it correctly, and records of themselves speaking it incorrectly. They practise until they start dreaming in phonetics. At regular intervals, records are made of their progress. This was how Shaw's Eliza was trained to speak like a duchess.

Naturally there has to be a solid backing of research for all this, and much of it is done by instruments. One of the most important is the kymograph, which records the sound vibrations of the voice into an accurate pattern of wiggles in a white line. This way phoneticians can detect differences in sounds which might seem identical to the untrained ear. They can also pick up fascinating bits of information — for example, that there are usually precisely five taps of the tongue to a Spaniard's trilled double RR, as in "perro".

The international phonetic alphabet which has been developed from this research can record on paper any human sound — including coughs, glottal stops, Bushman retrogressive clicks or indignant snorts. A scientist sufficiently skilled in phonetic transcription (like Higgins of Pygmalian) can reproduce in script any kind of individual peculiarity of diction.

S. Carpenter Going North On Icy Trip

Dr. Edmund S. Carpenter, Assistant Professor of Anthropology, will be leaving for the Arctic next Monday night. He intends to spend four weeks there, on Southampton Island, doing research work for his book, "Time and Space in a Primitive Society."

The information which he hopes to get is concerned with the Eskimo's techniques of expressing time and space. He was in the Arctic one and half years ago, collecting the same kind of information.

On this trip, Dr. Carpenter will fly from Churchill to Southampton Island. There he will be met by his Eskimo friend, Ohnaierwrk, who speaks English. They will travel to Ohnaierwrk's village by dog-sled, probably spending one night at a weather station.

During his stay there, he will be living in the same igloo with Ohnaierwrk and all the Eskimo's wives and children. He will fish, hunt, and trap with the natives, in temperatures which he expects will be fifty to seventy degrees below zero.

UNDERGRAD

Bigger and Better

This year's first issue of the Undergrad has already gone to press to the tune of forty pages — larger than is usual for a first issue. Some of the advertising cuts have yet to be received as these were delayed by a change to a better quality paper which necessitated coarser screen cuts.

Editor Ken Jarvis reported that the style of the magazine is pretty much as usual. This year the highly successful experiment of holding an art competition is being repeated. This was tried for the first time last year as it was found impossible to print an adequate selection of the many art works submitted; it was also found that too much of their life immediacy was lost in the process of printing in black and white.

So last year a new policy was tried. Art contributions were solicited as usual (only more so) and a committee of judges was appointed to select winners who received prizes which the magazine was able to afford as a result of the economy of not printing the cuts of the works. All the works (including the winners and losers) were then hung in the common room. The art space in the magazine was now left available for an adequate appreciation and criticism (which had been impossible when the cuts took up all the art space).

This year the Undergrad is an anxious as ever to have contributions in any art medium by trained or untrained artists. The prize money this year has been donated by the W.U.A. Editor Ken Jarvis will have the entries hung in the J.C.R. again where he expects they will have the same high degree of appreciation which marked last year's show.

Normally undergraduate literary magazines fluctuate between the two alternative ways of soliciting copy — seeking as much as they can get and printing the best of what comes in; and asking specific people for articles, poems, etc., on specific subjects so as to achieve a unified order and balance to the magazine as a whole.

This year Ken Jarvis tried the latter method but actually achieved a mixture of the two. Some of the people who promised articles did not actually produce, while there were also a few unsolicited articles of sufficient merit to warrant publication. Thus there is an element of spontaneity to the issue now at press while editor Ken Jarvis also reports a degree of orderly balance.

Already plans are under way for the next issue. Filling this is usually a fairly simple matter for all the contributions submitted for Epstein awards become available. Ken Jarvis hopes to see some new names among the by-lines to join the traditions of the Undergrad and take their place beside such men as Michael Hornyansky now at Oxford on a Rhodes Scholarship where he won a big poetry prize recently, and Robert Weaver, now with the C.B.C.

This year, as ever, copies of the Undergrad will be sent out on exchange to all Canadian universities as well as a good number in the States and Great Britain. A copy will also go to CBC who watch such undergraduate works closely for usable works and for future talent. Also to Chatelaine who follow the same enlightened policy.

Campus Politicos Topic of Forum

What use campus politics? This and many other questions will be put to the representatives of the campus clubs at an open forum today in Room 6, UC, at 1 p.m. The place of the campus political party will be the main topic but the student party spokesman will come under fire on all subjects in the free-for-all question period that follows.

John Medcof, IV UC, President of the Campus Liberal Club, said, "A campus political club is a medium for developing political awareness, and new ideas. It should present its ideas to the students in active fashion and disdain a shrinking violet role."

David Fry, IV Trinity, President of the Macdonald-Cartier club stated, "We feel that a campus club should provide a means for the discussion of the dominant political philosophy (in our case conservation). We like to think the ideas of the future are born in the campus political clubs of today."

Shirley Endicott, President of the campus LPP Club, announced, "We oppose the ivory-tower conception. Students are members of the community and should take active uart in campus political life. Further, there are special problems of students to be solved in a political way and campus clubs should be active in their solution."

Norma O'Dell of the CCF club asserted, "A university is a place for education and the political variety should be included. A club should concentrate on the study group aspect and political activity is more important than factional participation."

This is the first of the open battles of the coming Mock Parliament elections to be held on December 6.

New Cornell Fish Wrapper Hits Ithaca

Ithaca, N.Y. (CUP) — Cornell's undergrad daily hit the campus recently headed "The Cornell Deadly Sin — Ithica's Only Morning Fish-wrapper" as the editors of The Cornell Widow, college humour magazine, took over for one issue.

The front page of the special issue describes a student council meeting ending in a brawl following a proposal by one of the members that each of the 674 bars in the town send representatives from among its steady customers to Cornell's student council, according to the number of people who patronize the establishment.

Taking full credit for the contents of the issue, The Widow editors also take a dig at faculty members, American Secretary of State Dean Acheson, the editor of the Cornell undergraduate paper, as well as drinking and sex.

Drinking is the subject of the lead editorial in this mock issue. Explaining how Cornell students learn to drink, it explains that they start as freshmen choking down the distasteful liquid to show off. After a while they are able to convince themselves that they are having a good time. "Sham, all sham", the editorial comments.

After pointing out the evils of drink and the bad impression it makes, the editorial concludes: "The situation is one to which we might all devote a little attention. Start Saturday night."

The editor of the Cornell Daily Sun, actual name of the undergrad paper, is reported as complaining about the conditions of the older men's rooms, describing them as horrible and "medevil".

"Racket buster No. 1 (editor) Al Friedman's clean-cut face settled into a firm mask of intent as his clear brown eyes bespoke his hard-hitting determination," it continues, "Let's clean this place up," he barked to his adoring staff. His adoring staff grabbed mops and mopped. His firm jaw relaxed a minute, as the SUN chief mused, "When I say mop, mop."

Not even the classified column escaped the pen of The Widow editors. Under the wanted column an ad reads: "One way ride for guy who needs one. Call 8627, and, in a furtive voice, ask for Vince."

Dandelions

Campus clubs are like gardens; both are beset by two conflicting schools of thought. There are the formal garden advocates whose main aim is to secure a symmetry of design and orderliness of execution. Then there is the naturalist school of thought which says to hell with the design, just let the garden grow.

On the principle of the survival of the fittest, we are inclined to agree with the naturalists. In a given amount of space and time, only the healthiest plants will grow; the rest will just fade away.

An examination of the Students' Handbook would convince anyone that the campus is crawling with active clubs. But this is far from the truth. Most of them lead a quiet ghost-like existence; they cause no confusion because they do nothing. They just don't matter.

We would suggest, however, that there are a few dandelions among the political species of forget-me-not campus clubs. And the most hearty dandelion of the lost would seem to be the newly formed United Nations Club.

At its inception this fall, the formal gardeners expressed concern at the creation of yet another club. Some urged the United Nations advocates to join the International Relations Club if they felt that way about international affairs. Others simply tried to discourage them by saying that too few students would be interested.

But the United Nations Club has disproved all theories of the pessimists. In a few short weeks it has blossomed forth from an executive into a club with over a hundred members. Good organization, intelligent programming and the zeal of its initiators account for such meteoric success.

In no way does it seem to have conflicted with the plans of the International Affairs Club. Both have proved their raison d'etre by the amount of response they have received from the student body. Both hove capitalized on what seems to be an increasing awareness of the importance of international affairs.

In the final analysis, the success of any campus club depends on the capacities of the people organizing it. Of course, there is an inevitable lack of continuity where organizers change from year to year. This year's dandelion may be a forget-me-not in a few short years. But as long as there are some forceful clubs on the campus, this doesn't matter too much.

As always, we congratulate the dandelions and ignore the forget-me-nots.

...Forget-Me-Soons

The University Peace Council seems to be a forget-me-not of a different colour — almost a forget-me-soon. In view of its rather colourful past, this seems rather unfortunate.

Last spring, in a delightful, if undemocratic coup, a group of Engineers took over the then communist-dominated University Peace Council. They received plaudits from all sides, from "The Globe and Mail" to "Time".

This year they proposed to continue the Peace Council now "reformed on non-party lines" and stated that "Peace, the avowed object of the organization, remains the same. The means to this end will be purified this year."

Now they seem to be backing down. Or so their move to amalgamate with the United Nations Club would suggest. Peace may be one of the fundamental aims of the United Nations, but the purpose of the UN Club has been to study all the aspects of international affairs as seen through United Nations eyes.

While we would be the last to urge a club to continue its existence, if such a continuance seems to pointless to its executive, it seems regrettable that such is the case. It almost looks as if only communists are capable of organizing a club with peace as its one and only interest.

In short, this year's University Peace Council would appear to be not only pacific, but passive. Their only positive move seems to be dissolution.

OUR READERS WRITE

Bamboo Blasts

Editor, The Varsity:

On November 22nd, we listened to a speech by the Very Reverend Trivett, Dean of the Holy Trinity Cathedral, Shanghai, China. The topic of Dean Trivett's speech was "Life behind the bamboo Curtain," delivered at the UN Club.

To be frank about Dean Trivett's interpretation of the change which has taken place in China, we were not impressed that he is a true Christian serving for the cause of human brotherhood and friendship. His many misleading remarks about China have achieved no other effect than to excite hatred between the pepoles of Canada and China.

On the other hand, one could hardly blame Dean Trivett for his hostile attitude towards New China. The Dean has lived there for more than 31 years, but was there only as a pastor of an all-foreign congregation, most of whom were wealthy business men, in what had been the foreign dominated city of Shanghai. The Cathedral with which the Dean was associated was situated in the former British Concession, as he described it, "—a magnificent building surrounded in a beautiful compound," in the business centre of Shanghai. Perhaps Dean Trivett should also have mentioned that Chinese were, at one time barred from attending services in the Holy Trinity Cathedral. The Dean obviously has had no real contact with the Chinese people, he has travelled very little in China. His knowledge of China is therefore negligible..

The Dean began his speech by defending Chiang Kai-shek. He said the Chiang was an honest man, but was completely ignorant of the corruption in his government, which is the reason of its downfall. And to illustrate this point, the Dean mentioned how only a small fraction of the UN relief goods really reached the war-stricken Chinese millions, because of the black-marketeering and squeezing in all ranks in the Chinese part of the organization (called CNRRA); but we regret that the Dean has failed also to mention to the UN Club; that the director of CNRRA at that time was none other than Dr. T. Tsiang, who up to this very day heads the Nationalist delegation in the UN.

The Dean's comments on land reform are also very superficial. He neglects in the first place, the significance of land reform with regard to mass education. Last winter, more than 20 million peasants throughout the country, men and women alike, attended spare-time classes. The Ministry of Education anticipated that more than an additional 30 million will enrol during this winter. And what are the contents of this mass education? Besides literacy, the peasants study the local press, seed selection, rirrigation, maternity, and child hygiene as well as other subjects directly concerning their daily lives.

But most unfortunate of all, is the fact that the Dean ignores the role of land reform in class transformation. Before land reform, poor peasants constituted 60% of the rural population and owned no land; middle peasants, constituted 20 to 30% of the population and owned 20 to 30% of the nation's ariable land; while rich peasants and landlords, less than 10% of the population, owned 70 to 80% of the land. Today the situation is different. In northeast China, for example, middle peasants constitute 80% of the rural population and 70% in North China. The landlords as a class have been abolished while the old feudal system has been transformed into a peasant land ownership system.

Yet in spite of all this, Dean Trivett is convinced that the entire Chinese population is overshadowed under the dark cloud of starvation. Dean Trivett insists that commodity prices are regulated regardless of the people's needs and the purchasing power of the currency. But contrary to all this is the fact that this year's harvest in China will be at least 10% higher than last year, good rice harvest has been reported from the various provinces of south and central China because starvation has been checked decisively for the first time in the last 50 years. Even the Dean admits that the flood controls in the Yellow River Valley has been successful for the first time in centuries.

II SPS.

Forty Beers Or NFCUS?

Editor, The Varsity,

I am interested in a statement appearing in a letter in Monday's 'Varsity' by F. M. Angebrandt, IV Mechanical:

"The NFCUS does not have the support of the Engineers. Since the turnout of engineers is representative of the interest shown in NFCUS questions across across the country, no further comment is necessary."

I disagree. Mr. Angebrandt's observation may be to a great extent correct, but further comment certainly is necessary.

In my opinion, the turnout of engineers may be 'representative of the interest shown' but it is not also indicative of the lack of knowledge (not information, but knowledge) about NFCUS? It's a vicious circle: the less you know the less you care, the less you read, the less you know, etc. Although it may be a difficult fact to impress on the mind of the average Skuleman, with his crowded time table, — who more often than not turns to matters Skule Nite, Skule Cannon, 40 beers, and chariot race in his leisure time,—NFCUS, and all it stands for is a good thing.

It sums up actively in a concrete organization the basic aims of most of us, both as students now, and as citizens later. By embodying cooperation among students of all Canadian Universities, NFCUS puts Canadian student opinion (that's us, brother) on the world map.—And in these troubled days the world map, even on the student level, is very important. The trouble is that it's a long way from the lab report due tomorrow to the Edinburgh Student Conference next January, and in a crowded schedule, a lab report is going to get more attention.

The 'Russian Student' meeting the other day attempted to demonstrate to the several interested engineers present (in 15 brief minutes) what and why NFCUS is. It isn't 'an excuse for Artsmen to argue and present their long-winded views in The Varsity' (as I once overheard); it's far, far, far, far from that.

If we as undergraduate professional engineers could try to find a little time to be professional citizens also, (and that starts by taking active part on campus activities such as ISS, NFCUS, the SHARE campaign, The Varsity, Torontonensis, the Hart House clubs, the UN Club, and so on) we would find that we as persons are needed, that our opinions are valued. We are not merely Skule examcrammers; we are also University of Toronto men, and Canadian University Students.

If we could take part in some measure of these activities, and not sit always on the outside of the circle, the actions and facts which arouse our daily disinterest and/or our daily ire, would all automatically vanish. NFCUS, like the Engineering Society, should mean something to us, and if we are part of it, it will. Then we would not have to witness a shameful 4.5% meeting turnout, or a 35% by-election vote.

This rather lengthy exposition is not criticism of Frank Angebrandt—it is merely an attempt to put on paper the thoughts of a number of us at Skule who have been fortunate enough (by virtue of last Spring's elections) to be in a position to see where we at Skule fit into the whole picture.

Russian Question

FIND RESULT ON VISIT

Principle Of Russian Visit Ratified By SAC Yesterday

The principle of having Russian students visit Canadian universities, and the University of Toronto in particular, was approved by a vote of 14 to 4 at a meeting of the Students' Administrative Council held in the Mining Building Board Room last night. The motion was presented by External Affairs Committee chairman Graeme Ferguson after the EAC approved the motion by a vote of 18 to 3 on Tuesday night, in an officially recorded faculty vote.

Caroline Gratton, St. Mike's, said that she did not feel that all faculties had voted on the principle when a vote was taken in each faculty for the EAC. She said that in presenting the motion to St. Mike's women she had not been sure whether they were to vote on the principle or on the fact of the visit. Miss Gratton said that many who would support the principle of the visit would not support the fact. Her stand was approved by Paul Forestell, St. Mike's, who said that while he approved the principle of the visit, he attacked the motion on the basis of a visit at the present time.

Forestell said that president Syd Wax would not be given the united support of a strong NFCUS when he attends the Edinburgh Conference of western student unions if NFCUS is split over the Russian question.

Forestell also said that the votes in each of the faculties was a faculty vote and not a student vote as in no case did more than 50 per cent vote.

Vice-president Valinda Burruss replied that there was never a good turnout of students and that the majority of the students were voting on the principle of the visit.

Chuck Hanley, UC, said that it would be an "ivory-tower type of thinking" to approve a motion on principle and not in fact. He supported an amendment deleting section (f) from a second motion which stipulated that NFCUS should have no financial obligation for the Russian tour. This amendment was defeated by a vote of 13 to 7.

The second motion was then passed, by a vote of 13 to 7, that NFCUS be asked to execute the principle of the Russian student visit and press for reciprocity in all arrangements.

Varsity Comes Under Fire At Student Council Meeting For Editorial Irresponsibility

The Varsity came under sharp criticism at the Students' Council meeting last night for irresponsibility in its editorials. However, at the end of the discussion, SAC Chairman McBirnie assured The Varsity's editor, Barbara Browne, that the criticism was meant "in a good spirit" of healthy criticism, and backed his statement by the fact that the Council had made no motion of censure on The Varsity) regarding the matter, in spite of a request from the editor.

Discussion began when Bud Trivett, Law, prefixed his report of the Finance Commission with some remarks regarding a Varsity editorial of Nov. 26, entitled "Why Botherism".

In this editorial, the paper complained of the tendency, seen in the federal and provincial legislatures of Canada, towards a one-party house, with little opposition. The editorial included the Students' Council in this category of "one-party Houses", complaining that there seems little diversity of opinions within it."

The editorial concluded The Students' Administrative Council is spared that problem (of worrying about reaction to their policies). "Where there is no action, there can be no reaction." Trivett took particular exception to the implication that the Council is doing nothing.

"This is not only an insult to the Council," he said, "but I also consider it a falsehood."

When papers write about specific facts, it is possible to refute them, Trivett continued. However, in this case the editorial deals only with generalities, and there can be no answer, he continued.

Trivett quoted an editorial article in The Varsity by William Glenesk, "The Prostitute", in which Glenesk remarked, "The function of a newspaper is to report current events and interpret them for its readers . . . If the press must have almost unlimited freedom; then it's time the publishers wielded a little authority with that freedom."

As publishers of The Varsity, it seems strange we (the Council) should be condemned by our own paper, Trivett remarked.

"We are giving the editors of The Varsity too much rein," he continued. "The Varsity considers itself the only champion of the people. But its criticism is not constructive. It has great influence and little responsibility. This condition is really intolerable," Trivett concluded.

He also gave examples of work the Council has done this year, to prove it was not guilty of "no action." Among the items he listed was the prompt action taken after the vandalism of Hallowe'en and the reaction of the SAC to the Executive Council's action, the institution of SHARE and a translation bureau, tthe plans for the All-Varsity Revue, and the Book Exchange.

The Varsity also came under fire for an editorial of Nov. 22, in which it criticized the SHARE campaign for failure to state its aims before it was organized.

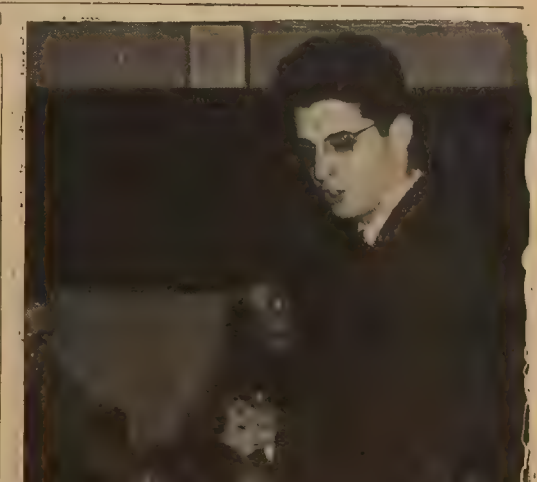
Graeme Ferguson, chairman of the External Affairs Committee which controls SHARE, said his committee was "very hurt" when the editorial and accompanying cartoon appeared. He said that at the time the editorial was written, the material it demanded was prepared, and was awaiting mimeographing.

Rising to the defence of The Varsity, Editor Barbara Browne complained that Trivett was quoting the "Why Botherism" editorial out of context.

"I am a firm believer in the liberal tradition that the Opposition is one of the most important things in a democratic institution," she said. "I feel that there has been too much material recommended by committees which has not received sufficient criticism by the Council as a whole," she said. "This is largely because the members are not well enough informed of what will happen at the meeting," Miss Browne continued.

Regarding the SHARE editorial, Miss Browne explained that she approved of the campaign, and only wanted it run in the best possible way. When the editorial was written, she continued, she had attended the SHARE open meeting, and had heard no definite plans regarding the campaign's target, budget or aims. Organization had preceded formulation of ideas, she said.

She added that The Varsity had printed the SHARE editorial in the hope of provoking some response from the campaign officials, which would answer these questions.



Concluding the discussion, SAC President Syd Wax said that while the Council was not objecting to the right of The Varsity to be critical in its editorial columns, it did feel that the criticism should be constructive, and that both parties should be fairly represented. "You must also realize that the influence of an editorial is far greater than any letter which might be sent to answer it," he added.

At the end of the half-hour discussion, the Varsity editor asked for a motion from the Council to give an official stand to the Council's criticism. No motion was forthcoming from the members present.

"The fact that there is no motion shows the criticism was meant in good spirit", Chairman McBirnie remarked. "It is just as if they took you off in a corner to make their complaint, except that here they did it in public. I don't feel any motion is necessary," he concluded.

Mast Head Meeting

There will be a masthead meeting in the editorial office today at 5 p.m. All masthead members, from the editor-in-chief down to the staff cartoonist are expected to attend.

Dr. McLuhan Discusses Decrease Of Literacy

Our modern technology is causing a decline in literacy that spells the end of the printing press and of the printed word as a major form of communication, said Dr. H. M. McLuhan, speaking on 'The End of the Gutenberg Era' at a Hart House Library Evening Tuesday night.

This decrease in literacy, noted in Cambridge in 1929 at the level of poor command of language, and more recently as even grammatical incompetence, was due, he suggested, to less practice in the spoken word. He noted that the literary level of the popular press — the equivalent of our pulps — was highest in the first century of printing, and has been declining ever since — an atrophy of literary skill because of less vigorous discussion.

In addition to this negative effect, he suggested the growing tendency to pictorialize — to use the ideogram instead of the printed word — instilled in the growing child before he was taught to read, would eventually reduce the printed word to a mere curiosity. He cited television, the comics, the movies, and modern advertising as influences which were replacing printing since on this continent children became very skilled in these pictorial methods before they gained literary skill, the problem was only to develop techniques for treating all thought in this manner; printing would become progressively less important as this was done.

While most trends in communication were not definite due to the constant discovery of new techniques, the present pessimism re the future of printing, in contrast to the initial optimism, was probably justified.

SAC At A Glance

At its meeting last night, besides approving a visit of Russian students to Canada and criticizing The Varsity, the Students' Administrative Council:

—heard that it might take two or three years to sell the Tweepers which vice-president Valinda Burruss said had been bought at a time when it was feared that the street-vendors might sell them. She described the street-vendors as being the "bug-bear of the Blue and White Society." President Syd Wax suggested that Tweepers possibly could be used on the Russian visit.

—decided that council members, and the presidents of the faculties should be urged to attend a meeting being held by the Toronto Traffic Conference on either Dec. 5 or Dec. 19 at which time the problem of the traffic on Hoskin Ave. will be discussed.

—decided that because of the urgent need for blood donors by the Red Cross for plasma to be used by the troops in Korea, that a blood donor campaign should be set up on the campus in co-operation with the Red Cross. It was decided that the Student Service Commission should organize the campaign towards the end of January and that the campaign should be organized through the presidents of the various student governments.

—decided that the Gesteiner duplicating machine after long and faithful service (13 years) should be replaced at a cost of $527, after a discount and a $90 allowance for the old machine. The council also passed an expenditure of $77 for additional office equipment.

—accepted the financial statement of the Blue and White Society.

—decided to present band members with one year's good standing with a crest which will cost 7c each, for a total cost of $31.50. A committee of four was formed to consider the purchase of greatcoats for the members of the band.

—heard a report from the caput-council Liaison Committee commending the council on the stand taken regarding the investigation of the damage to buildings on Hallowe'en. The committee felt that a forward step in student government had been taken.

—suggested that it should be made known to the student body that there is a registration of official faculty colors available at the Council office and that any faculty may consult this list. The Executive committee said that any faculties adopting a new official crest should submit this to the council for approval.

—approved the purchase of a piano for $50 by the All-Varsity Revue. Secretary-treasurer E. A. Macdonald told the council that arrangements have now been completed for rehearsal space for the Revue in a large room at the stadium where the piano would be kept.

—appointed Ann Gostling, IV UC, a committee of one to assist secretary-treasurer MacDonald in arranging the publicity and other arrangements for a concert by a group of visiting Austrian students.

—heard a letter from Warden Nicholas Ignatieff of Hart House commending the Blue and White Society for combining cultural activities with the Rugby dances and stating that more students had seen the Lee Collection and the Art Gallery on that one night than usually do in a year.

—did not second a motion from Charles Hanley, UC Men, that the name of the Brading Trophy be changed.

Breshcia To Debate St. Joseph's

The St. Mike's Senate Club will be hosts to St. Joseph's Collegiate Debating Congress tonight at 8 p.m in Brennan Hall. The motion will read, "This house opposes the Canadian-Russian student exchange plan" said the president of the St. Joseph's group, Anne McGinn.

Anne McGinn went on to say that St. Joseph's team, acting on an international plane, has invited members of Breshcia Hall, London, Ont., to debate with them. When the invitation was received there was no debating society at Breshcia. They formed one then and there, have accepted the offer to debate at St. Joseph's on Monday, December 10. St. Francis Xavier University of Antigonish, N.B., has also been invited, and will come in February.

Trillium Trio

This picture of trilliums won the prize for photography in the Literary Issue of The Varsity two years ago. This year the deadline has been set for January 10 and no Literary Issue will be published if enough entries have not been received by that date, or if the entries do not come up to the standard set by the judges. Entries will be welcomed in prose, fiction, non-fiction (essay and short stories), poetry, light and serious, as well as photography and cartooning.

Canvass Here Soon For Civil Service

Starting the end of the month the officers of the Civil Service Commission will again canvass the campus in search of promising students for careers in the Public Service of Canada, announced the bulletin sent by the Commission to the University. They will be able to supply information to both undergraduates seeking summer employment and graduates looking for permanent positions.

Students may expect better pay this year because the Commission has revised salary scales comparable to those offered by private firms. Although the exact figures have not been released yet, it appears that an engineer can be appointed at a salary between $3,000 and $4,000, a Physics student may begin in the field of meteorology at the same rate, while graduates of any faculty who are interested in administrative work may compete for salaries of $2,600 to $3,000.

A wide range of jobs are available. The Department of Insurance requires an Examiner of Companies in the Province of Quebec, and the Department of National Defence wants a History

Politicos Question Elections

In the first Mock Parliament forum of the year, the four campus political clubs considered "The position of a Political Club on the Campus".

The forum, conducted by the Political Science Club, was held at 1:00 p.m. yesterday in University College.

Speaking for the Macdonald-Cartier Club, Paul Forrestal, IV St. Mike's, stated that it was not the job of a University political club to provide political experience to its members. "It should, rather, provide an opportunity for University students to establish their political views and tenets," he said.

"It is not right for a university political club to monopolize the student's time with activities that are of no interest to them. We heartily endorse the Mock Parliament, but we oppose the mock elections since they do not provide an opportunity for the student to develop his own political principles," Forrestal added

A University political club should provide students with the opportunity to participate in elections," said Dwight Fulford, IV Trin, speaking for the Liberal Club. A campus political club should not duplicate the work of the Political Science club or other philosophical clubs on the campus. They should rather provide an opportunity for a student to get acquainted with political parties and how to win elections," he said.

"As university students," he pointed out, "they should both challenge the beliefs of a party, and take an active concrete part in the program."

Shirley Endicott, IV Vic, on behalf of the LPP club, stated that because there are so many problems in the world today, it was essential that university students take an active part in the study of politics. "Since the government has a direct relation to the fees question at the university, student participation in politics acquaints them with problems outside the University," she said.

Orvin Millett, IV SPS, speaking for the CCF club said. "We are very lucky here at the university of Toronto to have so much political freedom on the campus. We should take every opportunity to make use of this advantage and participate fully in the coming election campaign." Continuing he pointed out that there was no student apathy toward campus politics in the post war period, and he hoped that this election would bring it back.

Men Show Spirit At Skule Auction

Yesterday's Skule Auction seemed to mark a revival of the old Varsity spirit. It started off quietly on the front campus until about 12:55 when the arrival of the Lady Godiva Memorial Band which noisily opened the auction with one of the three songs in its repertoire. The members of the band were attired in a variety of different costumes ranging from Hallowe'en costumes and Engineers' caps to lab coats and straw hats.

The Skule Cannon, veiled in a yellow and black banner was carried in on an Ajax-Hart House billboard and on the completion of the ceremony of loading, was fired by Ken Gradwell, IV Electrical.

Finally the Master of Ceremonies appeared and after advertising the Skule Dinner and Skule Smoker while braving a shower of snowballs, proceeded to introduce the Chief Auctioneer, I. M. A. Checkgrabber. Although the jokes and descriptions of the articles that were auctioned were very colorful, they are unprintable.

With numerous interruptions by the Master of Ceremonies, repeated explosions of the Skule Cannon, volleys of snowballs, the Chief Auctioneer continued to auction off a varied and colorful assortment of articles. The list included feminine underclothing and bathroom fixtures humorously labelled. This procedure was further interrupted by cascades of water which were dumped on the Chief Auctioneer by playful Skulemen from the second floor windows of Skule House.

After bids had been received on each article to the satisfaction of the auctioneer the auction was adjourned for another year with a fanfare by the Lady Godiva Memorial Band and yells of Toike Oike by satisfied bidders.

Vic Rally Before Game

University College won't be the only one with a pep rally, according to Victoria Publicity Director Ed File.

File said yesterday that the Victoria College Union is planning a rally to be held on the steps of Vic at 1:15, just before the Mulock Cup Game. This game, for the University Intramural championship, will be between UC and Vic.

Vic is planning to have cheerleaders and the Scarlet and Gold Light Infantry and Regimental Parade Band out for the rally, File said. He added that it would be under the direction of Bob-Revue Director Terry Lawson.

Going . . . Gone

Seen in action above is Don Turner, IV SPS, the auctioneer at the Skule Auction held yesterday. The affair was to promote the Skule Dinner and Smoker, and offered for sale among other things — two goalposts.

Liberal Immigration Policy Is Upheld In Close Debate

Canada's present immigration policy was upheld by a vote of 37-32 in last night's Hart House debate, Speaker H. Krever, Grad., also announced that women, whether reporters or not, were now forbidden by a Hart House Board of Stewarts' ruling to attend future debates.

The motion, "Resolved that this House deplores Canada's Immigration Policy," was moved by David Fry, IV Trin., and MacDonald-Cartier Club president, who criticized the "selective" immigration policy. "The Government still thinks small," he said, mentioning the over-population in Europe, especialy England.

"If the twentieth century is to belong to Canada, as Wilfred Laurier once stated, the country needs a much larger population," he said. Increased population was essential for economic growth and to fill up unsettled land, expand home markets and lessen our dependence on the United States, he stated.

Honorary guest, federal citizenship and immigration minister W. E. Harris, defended the policy, emphasizing that the policy was flexible, being altered as Caanda's capacity dictated, always keeping in mind that immigration should "not alter fundamental character of the Canadian people."

"Over the course of years to come, this country requires many more people; however, their numbers must be spread out as employment conditions indicate," he said.

John Medcof, IV UC, speaking for the opposition, stated that the present policy was not an open-door one which admitted everybody and anybody. He stated that the government was successfully trying to fit each one into Canadian life as easy and as quickly as possible.

Bert Bloom, speaking for the motion, IV UC, stated that "Canada's immigration policy makes us the laughing stock of countries abroad due to the selective policy. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt says racial discrimination is the weak spot in our democracy — yet Asians (Indians and Chinese) are excluded now from Canada."

Bill Dawson, IV Trin., said that "Canada today is faced with a different immigration problem than fifty years ago. The great lands of the West are gone, immigrants must buy farm land now."

Speaking from the house floor, S. F. Weisio, Grad. Stud., an immigrant himself, stated that Australia and Canada were the only countries which encouraged immigration, offering loans for part-

NFCUS Grant Cut At U Of Manitoba

Winnipeg (Special) — Serious budget difficulties have forced the Council of University of Manitoba Student's Union to cut its grant to the National Federation of Canadian University Students from twenty to ten cents per student, said The Manitoban in a telegram last night.

The move to halve its NFCUS assessment was made in the face of a budget which left the student treasurer almost no operating surplus on which to work.

The stipulation was made at the Tuesday meeting, however, that the full twenty cents grant should be maintained if finances at the end of the year permit. It was considered highly unlikely that this could be done, considering the financial picture.

A strong minority viewpoint held that NFCUS could be dropped altogether at Manitoba because it served no function which could compete with local activities of wider interests and participations.

Nevertheless, most Council members felt that NFCUS was ideally a valuable thing, but that, unfortunately, the financial situation would not allow full support of it this year.

The motion to reduce the fee to ten cents came in the form of an amendment to a finance committee recommendation for a fifteen cent fee. Council felt that a five cent reduction (from twenty cents) would not go far enough toward putting Manitoba student organization out of financial danger.

Guy Lindsay To Lecture On Waterway

Mr. Guy A. Lindsay, director of the Special Projects Branch of the Department of Transport will lecture on "The St. Lawrence Deep Waterway" to the Royal Canadian Institute this Saturday at 8:15 p.m. in Convocation Hall. Mr. Lindsay has been in close connection with all work and studies made on the St. Lawrence Waterway Project since 1920. The lecture is open to all and will be illustrated with lantern slides and coloured sound motion pictures.

The speaker will give a history and description of the existing Great Lakes-St. Lawrence route and of the power potentialities in this area. He will discuss the legislative action which has been taken in connection with this project and his lecture will also include a short summary of its estimated cost.

Mr. Lindsay is a graduate of McGill University and has been in the Dominion Government Service since 1920, first with the Department of Railways and Canals, and then with the Department of Transport when that department was formed in 1925. He served as assistant to the Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Joint Board of Engineers in 1924-26 and was appointed Chairman of the Canadian St. Lawrence Advisory Committee in 1940.

Foreign Students To Tour Ryerson

Students from abroad are invited to visit the Ryerson Institute of Technology on Thursday, Dec. 5, when a tour is being arranged by the Toronto chapter of the International House Association. The tour is one of a series which the Toronto chapter are arranging as part of its program of introducing students from abroad to Canadians and to Canadian institutions.

The Ryerson Institute is an advanced school for training students in modern technology. Students are instructed in fashion design, furniture, graphic arts (including journalism), and jewellery arts. There are other courses in retail merchandising, institutional and home management, and mechanical and industrial technology.

Students are asked to meet at the Ryerson Institute at 50 Gould St., which is just east of Yonge and north of Dundas. Those interested are asked to telephone and make a reservation by calling Mary Whiting at MI. 2909, after 5 p.m.

Student Jobs At Christmas Are Plentiful

While there are a lot of vacancies, there is not a great variety in the jobs available for students this Christmas, according to E. J. Halse of the National Employment Service, at the Hart House employment office. However, he said that one student has a job demonstrating electric saws this Christmas while another is demonstrating electric razors.

About 1,600 students have applied for the Post Office, he said. The office in Hart House is still accepting applications for the Post Office as there are around 6,500 jobs available, although Halse said that the University was only supplying a fraction of this number.

There are roughly four types of jobs available according to Halse: the Post Office; department stores; some other retail stores; and the beer and wine stores.

VCU Chapel

This Sunday evening, Dec. 2, at 7 p.m., in the Vic chapel will be the third in the series of V.C.U. sponsored Chapel Services. The speaker will be Professor George Johnston from Hartford, Connecticut. The student assistants for the service will be Lorne Lodge and Ed File.

Trinity Awards Scholarships

Scholarships were presented to 31 students of Trinity College on Monday evening in a ceremony for the admission of scholars and fellows of the college. The ceremony which took place in the Trinity College Library was the first which has been held.

Dr. R. S. K. Seeley, Provost of the college who addressed the students, stressed the need for scholarly minds in the field of journalism, diplomatic service and theology, although that in order to prevent "Canada from becoming a nation with second-hand opinions it is necessary to build up a scholarly community of our own in every field of thought."

Among the winners were: Mary Alice Hunter, I Trin., Dickson scholarship in English, History, Latin and French; Ronald L. Watts, IV Trin., Chancellor Worrell Scholarship in Philosophy; John Stewart Pettigrew, IV Trin., Sir Gilbert Parker Scholarship in English Language and Literature; and Jean Catto, III Trin., winner of the Provost Seager Scholarship in the general course. The college also awarded two fellowships.

CO-OP

Domestic Democracy

Utopian as it may sound, here on the U of T campus there are student-operated residences, complete with coed dining facilities and all at a cost of less than $40 per month for each member.

These Campus Co-operative Residences, on Willcocks Street, are not new. They were originally founded in 1936 by a group of Vic undergrads and became part of the Co-operative Union of Canada a few years later. Since its inception, however, this organization has grown from a single house with a dozen members to a $40,000 business — four houses and over seventy members, run almost completely by the students themselves. With the exception of a cook, a secretary, and an external auditor, the campus co-ops are run entirely by their members.

According to co-oper Frank Mooney (Engineering), "democracy is the key-note in co-op life." The C.C.R. operates on the basic principles of open membership, and neutrality with regard to race, religion and politics. The present membership has students from as far away as Siam and Nigeria, enrolled in almost every course in the University, bringing together a variety of traditions and culture.

Freedom and responsibility work hand in hand in the co-ops. They abide by the principle: "the fewer rules the better," but on the other hand, there is compulsory attendance at general meetings, for this body holds the supreme authority, all members, managers, and the student Board of Directors being responsible to it. At the last meeting for example, they decided to purchase another house, an $18,500 venture.

There are four houses in the Co-op, three for men, and one for coeds. But one dining room serves them all. The individual houses have, in addition, small kitchens suitable for breakfast preparations, snacks etc. There are no curfew laws. The system depends on the integrity of the individual, and such restrictions have not been found necessary. The one rule that is strongly enforced, however, is the observance of quiet periods from seven o'clock until ten each weekday night. This may be the reason why co-opers have such a successful academic history, in spite of their added responsibilities.

Each member is required to put in about four hours work per week in the maintenance of the residences. The exact amount and the nature of the job is decided by the Kitchen Manager (a position that would tax even the greatest diplomat), in accordance with the time available and the aptitudes of the particular student. Sundays (cook's day off), the boys even get a chance to practise their culinary arts.

But life in the co-ops is not all work. Parties occur spontaneously on the slightest provocation, and at present there is in progress an important competition — to see which house can hold the best affair, entertainment and all. Plans for the next four Saturday nights are already in full swing, the girls maintaining typically feminine secrecy concerning their program!

Work and play, freedom and responsibility, all are inherent in the ideals of the co-ops. These are not ordinary student residences. They are student-operated, have coed dining rooms, patronage dividends (10% last year) — all this plus rich democratic experience, for less than $40 a month!

Liquid Air Research Continues

Professor Kenneth R. Atkins of Cambridge University has accepted an associate professorship of Physics in order to carry on research with liquid helium. In his experiment which is set up in the basement of McLennan Laboratory, Professor Atkins said he is attempting to reduce the temperature of the storage tank to near absolute zero, for a more accurate study of the gas.

The helium has already been cooled to a temperature of minus 458 degrees Fahrenheit, the liquifying temperature, which is one degree warmer than absolute zero, the temperature at which movement of atoms comes to a stop.

Professor W. H. Watson, head of the Physics department has consented to the assembly of apparatus worth $50,000 with which Professor Atkins can produce about two quarts of liquid from gas by a single operation of experimental equipment.

During the last war, Professor Atkins worked in the British Admiralty on radar jamming and anti-jamming transmitters which were fitted to British ships and planes. After the war he returned to the Cavandish Laboratory at Cambridge to work with materials at the lowest temperatures man has been able to produce. His work at the University will be a continuation of this research at McLellan Laboratory has been a centre of low-temperature research for more than 30 years.

Eugene Kash Lectures On Listening To Music

"The Twentieth Century is pampered!" So remarked Eugene Kash commenting on the habits of the contemporary listener to music in a demonstrated lecture delivered in the Music Room of Hart House yesterday afternoon. "With the advent of the push-button age, we do not listen to music with discrimination, contribute something to the musical experience, but wait passively for it to 'hit' you."

In an appeal to obtain a greater attendance at the "live" concert, and a less lethargic and apathetic attitude to music, Kash began his observations in the very beginnings of articulate communication, speech. Once man began to utter comprehensible sounds, and at the same time felt emotions, there followed inflection. Music, then, is one step beyond language.

Music found its origins in the primitive rhythmic patterns of native ceremonies, some of which are still extant, particularly in Africa. Kash played records of Zulu music to point out its complexity of counterpoint, harmony, and rhythm and its strange intervals.

He then went on to briefly sketch the activities of the mediaeval schools of music with their rich harmonies and emphasis on counterpoint rather than the vertical chord; the Flemish school even had developed the fugal form to sixteen and eighteen parts! It was Bach who organized music into strict form.

It is Kash's contention that contemporary music has revived primitive techniques and we shall find great enjoyment if we listen with our minds, exert the intellect and not just listen. In 1910, Stravinsky deliberately tried to go back in Le Sacre du Printemps to primitive forms of music, though Kash is not sure whether the experiment was one of research or atavistic.

He pointed out how Dizzie Gillespie's Bop has a remarkable similarity to the Zulu chants. Later, he made it clear that he was not providing an argument for primitivism in music, but trying to get his audience to share the reactions of the composer, to feel and live the music of our own age as the primitives felt and lived the music of their time. Our music is not a part of our life, but something set completely aside.

Kash felt the only barrier preventing a greater understanding of music was one of semantics, the comprehension of such words as counterpoint and fugue. He used Bing Crosby's recording of Simple Melody and Benny Goodman's recording of Bach Goes To Town as examples of the use of counterpoint and the fugue form respectively in popular music.

He concluded his informal talk by re-emphasizing the fact that we must not be passive in listening to music. We have to know what we are listening for; we must participate visually and intellectually in the musical experience. It is only on this basis that music will continue to be a robust, living art.

"Sold Out" Weekends At Theatre

It is a proveable scientific fact! The whole student body cannot be seated in Hart House Theatre on two Friday and Saturday nights. This is the latest word of the management of that establishment, and they are therefore requesting students who intend to see their latest production to seriously consider going to the shows on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday nights. THE BOY WITH A CART and PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT run from Nov. 30 to Dec. 8. In the past students have not bought tickets far enough in advance and consequently have been disappointed when trying to get seats on the weekend when the seats are already sold.

The Christopher Fry comedy opens an eight-day run tomorrow night under the direction of Robert Gill. The play is part of a double bill of Fry comedies, the other one being THE BOY WITH A CART.

Coloratura Erna Sack Warbles Popular Concert

The famous German coloratura, Erna Sack, gave her annual concert at Massey Hall Tuesday evening to a half-full but enthusiastic house. Miss Sack's program was mixed and ranged from her opening offering, Handel's "Largo" through two operatic arias by Mozart and Meyerbeer and some Schumann Lieder to a Strauss waltz. Her several encores included German and Italian songs, the Vesper Hymn and a composition by a local musician called "Little Bells are Tinkling."

In spite of the fact that we were pleasantly surprised at Miss Sack's competent handling of the Schumann Lieder, we still think that she is best with her lilting interpretation of Strauss waltzes. Strauss gives her a chance to use her phenomenal voice and provides her with a rhythmical backdrop which doesn't demand too much in the way of feeling or interpretation from the artist.

The "bird songs" are obviously Miss Sack's dish of tea, too, but once we have gotten over being impressed with the fact that Miss Sach can rise to F in altissimo, F sharp and even high G, then her lack of feeling and mechanical virtuosity give the concert-goer no other alternative but to class her as possessing a phenomenal voice but certainly not as being an artist.

By this we don't mean that Miss Sack can't sing, because she can, and her pitch is perfect. We just contend that from the beginning to the end, her lack of stage presence and her unsympathetic interpretation of the arias did not impress us. The less attractive but technically necessary calisthenics to which she has to subject her voice in order to hit those phenomenal notes, left us cold and uninterested, once we were convinced that she actually could hit high G.

Hart House Film Showing

Another in the regular series of film showings in the East Common Room of Hart House will be held today two films will be shown: "Architects of England", a fourteen-minute film tracing the history of English architecture from the time of the Druids to the present day, and "The History of the Animated Cartoon", also sometimes known as "The Toy That Grew Up". There will be two performances, one at 12:30 p.m., the other at 1:30 p.m. All members are welcome to attend.

Afternoon Concert Of Ancient Music At Conservatory

The Early Music Ensemble of the University of Minnesota, a unique group of six musicians who play ancient instruments and the music written for those instruments, will be heard in the Conservatory Concert Hall today at 2:30 p.m.

The all-but-forgotten music of the Gothic and Renaissance eras will be performed on instruments actually constructed in those days. This curious collection of antiquities includes such things as a minstrel's harp, and an ancestor of the violin, played while held between the legs.

Another stringed instrument that has long passed out of use is the hurdy-gurdy. Its strings are made to vibrate by means of a polished wooden wheel, and a bag-pipe-like drone results. This instrument was used to accompany dance tunes.

Among the wind instruments in the ensemble is the cornetto — an ancient wooden trumpet, and of course, recorders, or flutes, which are played endwise instead of being blown across the hole.

The backbone of the group is provided by the viola de gamba, an ancestor of the modern cello, and the harpsichord, a keyboard instrument like the piano, whose strings are plucked by quills instead of struck by hammers.

Other art of the centuries from 1200 to 1700 is relatively well-known, but only very seldom do we ever hear any of the music of this age. Textbooks on the subject are apt to be as dry as most textbooks. Here then is an opportunity to hear this music as it really sounded — the music the translators of the Bible were thinking of when they wrote of "the sound of the trumpet: the psaltery and the harp: the timbrel and the dance: stringed instruments and organs."

Free tickets for this remarkable musical event may be obtained from the SAC office. Since the Conservatory Concert Hall seats only 350, and only a few of these tickets are alloted to university students, it is important to arrive early if you want tickets.

Magdalene Choir Here On Sunday

Once again the final Sunday evening concert before Christmas in the Hart House series will be given by St. Mary Magdalene Singers under the direction of Dr. Healy Willan.

Dr. Willan is well known to university students both as an organist and as a composer. On Sunday evening, some of his compositions for the church service, and some of his settings and arrangements of Christmas carols will be on the program.

In addition, there will be church music by various early English composers such as Tallis and Byrd and other Christmas Carols, both traditional and by modern composers. As on many previous occasions, the program will conclude with the singing of "The First Noel", with the audience joining in the choruses.

Tickets are available to members of Hart House free of charge at the Hall Porter's desk, or through faculty representatives. Like other Sunday evening concerts, this is an officially recognized "special occasion" and ladies may be brought as guests on a double ticket.

SPS Puts Trinity Out Of Playoffs By 1-0 Soccer Win

By DES BOULT

Senior SPS soccer team edged themselves through to the finals of the Interfaculty Soccer Championship yesterday by defeating Trinity College A's 1-0. Both teams battled to a nil-all tie at the end of regulation time and it was only a penalty kick awarded against Trinity late in the closing minutes of the first overtime period that made the difference.

From the opening whistle both teams battled on even terms, scoring chances being far between and few. Skule came close when Wally Dhipendale crossed a beautiful corner kick onto the head of Tony Seljac, who headed it towards the goal, the ball hitting against the past, but refused to go in. Trinity's skillful forward line led by Hugh Rowan, took the initiative, and both Hugh Rowan and Doug Andison came close to scoring on a couple of occasions. The Skulemen were determined and managed to ward off the Buttery Boys. Per Berg-Johannesen showing off some fine defensive works. This brought a keenly contested first half to a close.

The second half opened at a fast and furious pace, with the defence of both teams taking control of the ball. Trinity was extremely unfortunate when Tim Jackson's shot merely edged the outside of the cross-bar. Sr. SPS followed with a couple of break-a-ways, both John Kahn and Tony Seljac, being in reasonable reach of the goal but failing to score. Both seemed to have left their scoring boots at home.

Trinity once more tried to puncture the Engineers defence and almost succeeded when Tommy Antiresen, Skule's goalkeeper, fumbled the slippery ball. Only quick presence of mind and speedy action gave him a chance to save the day, as he fell over the ball, thus making sure of it.

Overtime began with Trinity leading the play to the Skulemen end of the field, but the Engineers defence shone and sent the ball back to mid-field. With a minute of play left, Trinity handled the ball in the penalty area and Tony Seljac made no mistake placing the shot far out of John Pettigrew's waiting hands. Trinity tried hard to even the score up to the last seconds of the game but the final whistle blew and Skule had placed themselves in front one goal to nothing.

Trinity's Hugh Wareham and Rick Gaunt played wonderfully well as they formed a tower of strength, while Doug Andison shone at outside right. Starring for the Engineers were Berg Johannessen on the back line and Tony Seljac among the forwards.

Blues Open Season Tonight Beginning Tour At Hobart

The Basketball Blues, after only about three weeks of practice, are off to the States to open their 1951-1952 schedule. They play three teams in Upper New York State tonight, tomorrow and Saturday, the first set of a series of pre-Christmas games with American colleges in preparation for the Canadian Intercollegiate season which begins after Christmas.

Tonight the Blues face Hobart College, a small sports-conscious college at Geneva, New York. Toronto beat Hobart 43-41 by ragging the ball for three minutes solid here at Hart House last year. The Hobart crew has only three lettermen returning this year, but the team's coach, "Spike" Garnish, is reported to have been very pleased with the efforts of the men trying out for the team.

Tomorrow night Toronto plays Hamilton College, whom the Blues laced 70-55 last year. Hamilton will have to have improved a lot, or else the Blues will have to be much worse, for this game to be much more than a breather.

Saturday night's game is at Colgate. Colgate is generally one of the better basketball colleges in the State. The Blue did not play them last year, but lost decisively in the game the year before.

The starting line in this week's workouts, and the line which will probably be starting in tonight's game, consists of Bud Natanson and Lou Lukenda in, and Garry Glover, Ed Maynerik, and Bill Huycke out. Natanson, 6' 6" tall, last year. Lukenda, 6' 2", played designated as centre in the official line-ups, was scoring leader for all three Varsity basketball teams last year, Blues, Orphuns, and Intermediates. On one occasion he played a game with the Intermediates and then came on again with the Blues in the final game of the doubleheader.

Maynerik, 5' 11", is the possessor of a deadly set shot which will be displayed before the Varsity fans quite a bit this season. Huycke, 6' even, is probably the best ball-handler of the bunch and possesses the greatest variety of shots. Glover is the shorty at 5' 10", is a steady ball player.

Long lean (6' 5") Ray Menott and Art Binnington (6' 4") play in on the second line, while Don Fawcett and Jack Garbutt play out. Steve Oneschuk is not making the trip because of an injured ankle.

City League B-Ball Orphuns Play Tonite

Varsity Orphuns take on Central Y tonight at Hart House as part of a basketball doubleheader in City League play. The other half of the bill will feature YMHA against Tri-Bells.

The Orphuns, composed mainly of the Varsity Intermediates, will probably start George Stulac, high scorer in last week's game against YMHA, as centre. Jim Stevens, who played with East York Grads last season and finished off with a game for the Intermediates, will likely team up with Doug Reeves, last year with UTS, as forwards. Starting guards should be Doug Kettle, of OCE, who played last year with Interfac Championship UC, and Dave Primeau, a freshman from St. Catharines.

New talent with the Inis has come up in the form of two American basketball players of considerable renown, Leo Madden and Jim Russell. Madden went to high school in New York City last year, and was all-city all-star. Being in St. Mike's prep course this year, he is ineligible for Intercollegiate, but will be able to play City League ball. Russell was the standout with St. Mike's Interfaculty team last year.

The team was cut down to 13 men from 20 or so three nights ago. Remaining are, besides the above mentioned, John (Buckets) MacKenzie, Bob (Reverend) Rumball, Al Brown, and Bob (Nobby) Milne.

Central Y has not played in Hart House yet, and is an unknown quantity as far as Varsity is concerned. In the other game, the power-laden Tri-Bells should have little trouble with YMHA, whom Orphuns beat last week. Nevertheless, Tri-Bells provide an evening's entertainment just playing amongst themselves.

Admission is being charged to the tune of 50c per head to see both games.

Wortman Elected Track President

Chuck Wortman was elected president of the Track and Harrier teams for a second term, in the election of representatives for 1952-53 held by the teams yesterday. Herb Tilson was elected vice-president, and Jim Bassingthwaighte to be secretary.

Directorate Meeting

At the Athletic Directorate meeting last week, it was decided that on the recommendation of the University engineers, the refrigeration pipes for the entire ice area be replaced next summer.

Since the Intermediate football team won the C.I.A.U. championship for the first time in University of Toronto history, it was approved that the team be invited to the athletic dinner.

In the field of Water Polo, the resignation of Mr. Dunstan was accepted. Mr. Warren Clayson was appointed in his place as coach. Mr. Clayson has been coaching U. of T. swimmers for several years, but felt he was too busy to take charge of the water polo squad at the first of this fall.

Pitching Sportshoes

The interfaculty hockey series continued yesterday with Jr. SPS winning from Jr. Vic. by a score of 4-2. Worth and Reid each scored twice for the Skulemen, while North and Mason tallied for Vic.

Another hockey contest ended in a 3-3 tie, between Dents "B" and Vic. IV. Murdock scored twice and Sortome once for the Dentists with Blakely and Merrifield drawing assists. Hare, Passe and Pegg did the scoring for Vic and Swanson was credited with two assists.

In the lacrosse playoffs St. Mike's "A" trounced Trinity "A" by a score of 10-3. The Mikemen took an early lead in the first quarter and never looked back. Grossi was the big scorer with five goals, Tallon and O'Connor potted two and Murphy scored one for St. Mike's. Brown, Stinson and Ross each got one goal for Trinity.

In the volleyball playoffs, UC 8r. advanced by overpowering Vic IV 15-1 and 15-10. In the other set Forestry took Premeds in two straight, by a score of 15-10 and 15-6.

West End YMCA Lose To Blues In Water Blues

The Varsity Senior Water Polo team, annual contender for the Senior Intercollegiate championship, added another notch to its swimming fins last night by defeating the West End Y team 15-5. The game was a regular fixture in the Ontario Senior League, a circuit in which the Blues have been entered along with the Intercollegiate one for several seasons.

Norm Mortimer, who has been heaving water polo balls for Varsity teams as long as the coach can remember, and John Bate, a newcomer with the Blues this fall, paced the winners with a five-goal effort apiece. Bill McIlroy, who earned his colors with the team last season swam for two counters. Other Varsity scorers against the Y team were Bob MacKenzie, Larry Rosen, and Phil Rosen.

The scoring for the West End team was left in the hands of Finn and Wood who managed two goals each against the Blue defence. Fraser also notched one counter for the losers.

Hart Robins was a standout as Blue goaltender. His efforts at the goal mouth were a great help in defeating the West End team.

The Blues next take to the pool against the McGill Red Men this Saturday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. in the Hart House pool.

Sportswoman

PHE I came out on top of a 28-19 score in a thrilling basketball game last night with St. Mike's A. Shirley Roberts led the score with 17 points, aided by Nancy Kercher, both playing a good game. It was a hard fought game but Phys. Ed. really pulled ahead in the last quarter and deserved to win. St. Mike's put forth a terrific showing with Kay Schenck and Jane Timmins starring all the way, backed up by Nancy Primeau on defence. PHE's defence line of Scott, Binnie and Capel were outstanding.

Winners of league two will be decided tomorrow night in a game between POT 1 and PHE 1. A loss by PHE will result in St. Mike's taking the league championship.

Interleague playoffs in the female basketball circles are under way this week, and last night, Nursing defeated I PHE B's by a 14-13 count. Jane Reycraft paced the winners with an 8-point effort to lead the teams in scoring, while Mary Dippell and N. Maybell notched 6 apiece to take care of all the scoring for PHE.

Sisters Of St. Joseph's Mark 100th Anniversary In Canada This Year

This year marks the one hundredth anniversary of the Canadian community of the Sisters of St. Joseph, and the fortieth of the establishment of St. Joseph's College in Toronto.

A little more than three hundred years ago in LePuy, France, the congregation of the Sisters of St. Joseph was founded. All went well until 1793 when the French Revolution broke loose and all religious communities were suppressed. During the Reign of Terror many Sisters of St. Joseph died in prisons or under the knife of the guillotine. Mother St. John Fontbonne, sentenced to be guillotined along with other Sisters, was freed at the last instant by the sudden fall from power of Robespierre.

It was she who refounded her Order in France in 1807, and when asked to send nursing and teaching Sisters to America she unselfishly parted with two of her nieces and four others. They settled outside St. Louis, Mo., and in 1851 they in turn contributed of their number to help the Diocese of Toronto start an Orphanage on Nelson Street.

The four intrepid Sisters who arrived in October, one hundred years ago, never despaired although at times they were close to starvation and underwent many privations. To care for the poor and destitute ophhans of whom they were given charge, they often had to go out with baskets on their arms and beg from the citizens of Toronto. In addition to the orphanage they soon were given the responsibility of the House of Providence, and in later years it was felt that the blessings that the Community received, stemmed from their care of the poor, homeless old folks.

The Hon. John Elmsley, hearing of the crowded quarters of the Sisters in the House of Providence, in 1863 gave them two acres of his Clover Hill Estate, with the proviso that they build their Mother House on it. This land now runs south of Wellesley St. W. to Bread-albane, and west from Bay to Surrey Place.

The Mother Home was the first cradle of the College which in 1911 was affiliated with St. Michael's College, as the latter is a Federated College in the University. Since that time St. Joseph's College has had more than 500 graduates together with many girls from provinces across Canada and the U.S.A. who have been in residence from one to three years. In 1928 the College moved to its lovely home on Queen's Park Crescent.

Physeds Start Trust Fund For Self Aid

The Physical and Health Education Undergrad Association is planning to start a trust fund to give financial aid to undergraduates of the course, announced president John Miteff, III PHE. This help will not be in the form of bursaries, but of non-interest loans, he added. Students will pay back the loans when they have graduated and are earning money.

Miteff said he hopes the money will be raised by contributions from undergraduates and members of the alumni. He has talked to Dr. H. A. Cates, Dean of the Faculty of PHE, and to Miss Z. Slack, who is in charge of women's athletics for the University of Toronto, and some members of the staff have promised to give personal contributions for the trust fund. Miteff mentioned the possibility of a gymnastic or aquatic display for the purpose of raising money.

The committee which will be working on this trust fund, says Miteff, will probably consist of two undergraduates, one of them himself, two members of the alumni, and Mr. G. Neil, Honorary President of the PHE Undergraduate Association.

Misquoted By Gazette On Religion

London, Ont. (CUP) — Denying that he had charged the University of Western Ontario with barring religious speakers from the UWO campus, national secretary of the Student Christian Movement, the Rev. H. L. Puxley, said that he was misquoted in a long-distance telephone interview with the UWO Gazette.

The London Council of Churches announced last week its intention of reviewing the religious discrimination charges said to be made by Mr. Puxley.

The original story, carried by the Canadian Press and many Canadian newspapers, quoted Mr. Puxley as saying, "It means (the barring of representatives of religious orders) that anyone with a religious message is not given access to the UWO campus."

"I've waged every kind of possible warfare to change the situation at the University of Western Ontario as this problem is more important to us than the problem of the cold war or the Iron Curtain," it continued.

UWO President G. E. Hall labelled the statements "false" and an "insult to the student body."

When asked by the Western Gazette if he would verify the statements carried by the wire service, Mr. Puxley said that he had been "badly treated by the UWO" but said that his speech had been garbled by the press.

He said that he was speaking of permanent Christian workers, not of speakers, in his reference to the UWO ban.

SCM President Ralph Johnson at UWO said that apart from the secretary ban, his organization had never had any trouble with the administration.

Immigration

payment of ocean fares. "If it were not for this assistance, many would not have been able to immigrate here," he added.

Another member on the floor, Prof. W. Friedmann, speaking for the affirmative, stated that there was too much "laissez-faire" —immigrants were not told what to expect here, were not asked to learn our language before embarking, and many expected the same jobs at their former rates of pay.

He suggested that the government supply clear, sober, fuller information on what to expect here, plus firmer initial advice on their arrival.

Travelled Teacher Speaks On Baha'i

"The BAHA'I FAITH is a world religion," said Mr. Harlan Ober at the open meeting of the Baha'i Student Group yesterday. He pointed out that the source of all the great religions of the world has been the Orient and that each has produced a great civilization.

At one time after the coming of Zoroaster the people of Iran were the outstanding people of the world, and the Hindu, Buddhist and Moslem peoples have all made a contribution of great significance. Each of the religious leaders has come in a definite period for a definite purpose renewing the law of love and bringing new regulations for the health and social benefit of society. Each has foretold the advent of one great faith although the followers had no concept of a faith with the essentials of all religion as the foundation of a new civilization.

Ober then explained how the Baha'i World Faith fits into this pattern. "The Baha'i Faith has the capacity to assimilate these different types of people and carrying them on to a unified humanity." The coming of Baha'u'llah is the impetus through which this unifying process will gain strength. Already the international headquarters of the Baha'i Community have been established in the Holy Land"

Ober was taught many of the principles of the Baha'i Faith by Abdul-Baha, the son of the Founder, who at the time was imprisoned in the fortress of Akka. Ober and his friends were smuggled in to see Abdul-Baha and after the visit headed for India where they proceeded to teach.

Since that time the speaker has lectured in Burma, Africa, Europe and America and is at present continuing his teaching work on this continent.

Liberals Table Policy Change

At an open meeting of the Campus Liberal Club at Cartwright Hall in St. Hilda's yesterday afternoon, W. Dawson, IV Trinity presented a resolution that "Before any drastic changes are made a Provincial Convention should reconsider the principles, policy and leadership of the Liberal party in Ontario."

In view of the fact that only fifteen percent of the members were present, the president tabled this resolution. It will be presented at a meeting after Christmas.

The Hon. W. E. Harris, Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, was guest speaker at the meeting. According to Mr. Harris the German immigration question is a ticklish one. German immigrants are being admitted to Canada although no peace treaty has been signed between Germany and Canada. The Italians became admissible to Canada only after the Italian peace treaty was signed. Mr. Harris also stated that the percentage of U.K. immigrants has been subject to criticism.

Squeeze Them!

Once again the young men from University College have attempted to inflict their affected simon purism on the university. Or at least have advertised it. In view of their motion to the Students' Administrative Council to change the name of the Brading Trophy (because of its commercial implications) the latter motive seems more obvious.

The Brading Trophy does not belong to the University of Toronto. It is a prize given in the debating competition between four Canadian and four Scotch universities, in which we are participating. The University of Toronto has no power to change its name and the UC Lit probably knows this very well.

The "gay, cynical Georges" from UC, as Morley Callaghan termed them in "The Varsity Story", are either trying to be exhibitionists or prudes. It seems that they are succeeding in the former.

Unfortunately, the opinion that brewery money is tainted by commercialism is more widespread and more serious than the ludicrous position of the UC Lit would indicate. Only last year the ISS Committee had to cough back $100 donated by the John Labatt Co. for a raffle in aid of the Red Feather Campaign.

Again, we have heard of a young man under the guidance of a missionary family who was forced to reject a scholarship donated by a brewery because of the insidious source of the money. He never did get to university as a result.

This concept of brewery money as being Something Different and Evil is, as we have said, widespread. But it is not completely logical. One of the largest sources of revenue for the provincial government lies in liquor taxation. One of the largest expenditures of the provincial government is directed towards education.

In terms of taxation, then, no one seems to mind liquor money or think of it as such. Perhaps this is a process of purification through taxation by which money loses the insidious personality attributed to it. Money wrenched from the breweries' hands by the provincial government is somehow all right; it has been liberated from the clutches of its evil masters.

On the other hand, philanthropic gestures from the brewers are looked on with doubt and suspicion. "What good can come of evil?" cry the temperance advocates. And if donations are accepted, they are hushed up or slurred over. If they are ever refused it is with a fanfare.

But money is money, no matter how you look at it, no matter where it comes from. If it is needed, as it is at the University of Toronto, then it should be sought from all sources. Canada is not the home of a great many capitalists; we cannot afford to overlook the brewers among them — and there is no valid reason for doing so.

By all means, name the Student Union Building after O'Keefe's, if it means getting a sizeable contribution from them. The University of McGill has their Molson stadium. London has its Labatt's Park. So far we have nothing from the breweries save a few scholarships.

The breweries are rich plums, ripe for the picking. The University of Toronto should not hesitate to squeeze them.

U of California

What Price Hysteria?

A '51 graduate of the University of Toronto in Commerce and Finance and winner of the Flood Fellowship in Business Administration at the University of California expresses some of his first impressions of the University of California, particularly concerning the Loyalty Oaths.

By JOHN S. BULL

Greetings University of Toronto! It has been some months now since I left that "dirty little old JCR" and since I received my shipping orders beneath that "large sprawling turtle", Convocation Hall.

From my Varsity subscription I have noticed that you are taking some interest in what is going on at my new Alma Mater.

What is all this business about Loyalty Oaths, Rule 17, and the rest? Among other tasks I set for myself before coming to Cal, was to find the real answer to this question — I DID!

Cal is generally recognized to rank with Harvard, Chicago, and Columbia as one of the best universities in the USA. From my experience, I would whole-heartedly agree; the teaching staff and class of students is excellent. Many of you will be acquainted with such men as M. M. Knight, J. Van Nostrand, R. A. Brady, H. S. Ellis, R. A. Gordon, and W. J. Fellner to mention only the social scientists. How could a University with these men and this reputation be affected so strongly by the American Communist "Craze"; I will not try to answer this but here are the facts:

1. No communist may be employed by the University of California for any position — administrative or instructional.

2. No political literature may be distributed on the University campus, but must be handed out outside Sather and West Gates.

3. All professors at the University of Cal have signed the Loyalty Oath and the fact that the Regents have now rejected this oath at their first session this semester (it still must pass the next meeting to be held on Nov. 16) has not had any effect yet; the feeling among the students is that it really does not make much difference since the Regents have proven their power to overrule the wishes of the staff and student body whenever they see fit.

4. Rule 17 of the University policies states in its nucleus, ". . . discussion of highly controversial issues normally will be approved only when two or more aspects of the problem are to be presented by a panel of qualified speakers." That is, discussions on campus must be approved by the head of an authorized department, and again by the Dean of Students, H. E. Stone.

Last week the Forum Council of the International Board, one of the four departments of the ASUC (similar to Toronto's SAC), proposed to sponsor a debate between Max Schachtman, national co-chairman of the Independent Socialist League (a supposedly non-communist organization) and Prof. F. Herrick of the department of History at Mills College, an authority on British politics and a Rhodes Scholar in 1926. I, as Chairman of the Forum Council set about to have this debate on the British political elections approved, Prof. Van Nostrand head of the department of History, gave the debate immediate preliminary approval; however Dean Stone would not do so. After considering the socialist speaker, Mr. Schachtman, the latter was found to be named on the "Attorney General's List", which is a blacklist of suspected communists. Nothing in Schachtman's record from any research indicated that he was more than a radical socialist. Moreover, there is nothing even in Rule 17 which states that communists cannot speak on campus if they are opposed by another speaker. Dean Stone's reason for rejecting the debate was that the Regents of the University would take a dim view of it.

I wish to level no criticism at the University of California Administration, least of all Dean Stone or the Regents. The cold callous facts are that both are victims, in my opinion, of irrational public hysteria. If anyone as much as expresses an opinion that communists should be heard, they are linked irrationally as communist sympathizers; I quite unwittingly have placed myself in this position, so much so that the Chairman of the International Board found to his amazement that I have long been a member of the Canadian Young Progressive Conservative Party!

These then, are the facts, Toronto. Perhaps now you would like to review again a motion passed by the UC Lit last year stating in essence that University College students were against any legislation or order which might force Toronto University Professors to be investigated for Communist leanings. This motion was tabled by the SAC last year; do you think that is where it belongs? McCarthyism and the communist purge have gone to far in California for organized student opinion to have any effect. Perhaps the Communist who plans real treason against the state should be put on an Attorney's list, but certainly clear distinctions should be made between traitors and democratic socialists, and above all, this "list" should not be made a public document for anyone interested to view.

In the meantime, the uncensored Daily Californian and the sun shine brightly at Berkeley California; in fact, this is a pretty warm spot this winter.

OUR READERS WRITE

Freedom To Learn

Editor, The Varsity:

May I reply to two letters which appeared in your paper Monday, November 26, regarding the censoring of the CBC? It is quite evident that the four young ladies from St. Mike's know very little about the subject of natural Philosophy, and are merely expressing opinions inspired by the dogma of their Church.

Firstly, Science and Philosophy are not two separate studies; they are mutually connected subjects. In the summer, I read Mr. Hoyle's book entitled "The Nature of the Universe" which, I believe, was based on his BBC lectures. From reading it, and in my opinion from reading any book on cosmology or astrophysics, it is impossible to separate the two studies of science and philosophy. In his book he presents a theory which traces the origin of our solar system back to a binary star system; he does not speak disparagingly of the story of creation in the Bible. Naturally if he, as a scientist has conceived his theory using scientific methods, he cannot but prefer it to a theory which has no scientific foundations, and is, in point of fact, a myth which is accepted literally by only the very gullible.

If I remember correctly, in a chapter entitled "A Personal View", the author outlines his personal opinions regarding different cosmological theories and his theological beliefs. If this latter subject is to be included in the study of Metaphysics and therefore in the subject Philosophy, it is done so with the understanding that Mr. Hoyle regards Science and Philosophy as mutually associated subjects.

I cannot agree with Mr. William Davis that the majority of the CBC listeners who are Christians accept Biblical cosmological theories on faith; most of them either try to reduce these theories to a rational form, attempting to reveal the presence of some inner meaning, or they accept them as myths . . .

I agree that "for the faithful of any creed, the faith is not controversial". That is the unfortunate part about it. Faith, if not controversial, becomes so authoritarian that the purpose of Mr. Hoyle's lectures and in fact the purpose of the University itself is defeated by an ever-answering faith . . . What is the use of our studying natural Philosophy, Biology or Anthropology when, as Mr. Davis states, "in a matter of faith, belief is legitimate, and opinion is illegitimate"? Because matters of faith, matters which are disputed in philosophy, are so closely related to science, then matters of opinion will become illegitimate in scientific studies also. In mediaeval times, the Church was notorious as an enemy of scholastic inquiry, and in modern times its tools of dogma and faith might very well strangle free-thinking and rationalism.

MULOCK FINAL TODAY

Using the Body

his afternoon Vic and UC will join in mortal combat for the Mulock up, emblematic of Intramural Rugby Championship. Both colleges are anning to have cheerleaders at the game. In the picture above, Vic heerleader Elizabeth Baysely and UC's Chummy Reading, are showing at they won't be satisfied to stand on the line today, but want to get o the game too.

To Crown Intramural Champions

The Interfaculty football season finally draws to a finish today, as University College and Victoria play off for the Mulock Cup at Varsity Stadium, 1:45 p.m.

Vic, the college which won the trophy four out of five years from 1945-49, was eliminated from the semi-finals last year by Trinity, to miss the finals for the first time in years. This year, however, they came back to their usual form and beat Junior SPS 15-5 in the semi-final.

For UC, however, the event is an unusual one. UC has not won the Cup since 1944, and has not been in or near the play-offs for several years. After coming second to Vic in the leagu- standings, the Redmen dropped Trinity in the semi-finals, 15-5.

It may be a good omen for UC that Mac Lister, who is aiding in the coaching at that

President Off To India Meet

Next Thursday President Smith will leave on a two-months trip to ndia as one of the Canadian delegates to the conference of the Association of Universities of the British Commonwealth. Dr. Smith will be accompanied by President Wilmour of McMaster; both were chosen to represent Canada by the National Conference of Canadian Universities.

The purpose of the conference is to discuss common educational problems including exchange of students, scholarships and academic standards.

During Dr. Smith's absence, the assistant to the President, Dr. C. T Bissell will handle his correspondence and look after the affairs of his office. Described by Professor Bagnani of the Classics Department, and an "up-and-coming young man", Dr. Bissell has been acting as a general liaison officer between the administration, the faculty and the students.

The first stop for President Smith after leaving Toronto is the Seymour Hotel in New York; from there he sails for Southampton on the Mauretania. According to the official itinerary of the trip he will spend about two days in England and will stay at the Connaught Hotel in London. Leaving London on December 13th he will fly to Delhi, India, via Brussels, Frankfurt, Istanbul, Beirut, Basra and Karachi.

On December 20th he will arrive in Delhi to attend a joint meeting of the Inter-University Board and the Commonwealth Delegates. During his stay in Delhi he will visit Delhi University, the National Physical Laboratory, Parliament, and the Agricultural Research Institution.

President Smith will see the largest university in the British Commonwealth at Calcutta, and the University at Hyderabad. Also included on his tour of India are visits to Agra, Jaipur, Patna, Madras, Bangalore, Mysore, Bombay and Poona.

Cancelled Lectures

All college lectures and labs in University College and Victoria will be withdrawn after 1 p.m. today so that students may attend the Mulock Cup football rals, college authorities announced yesterday. This cancelation does not affect lectures and labs in separate departments however, they said.

Two pep rallies are planned for 1:15 p.m. The UC Lit has urged that all UC students meet in the Junior Common Room to parade to the Stadium en masse, while Vic has announced a pep rally on the front steps of the college.

IUS Reply Indefinite Regarding Unity Meet

A reply — although not a positive one — has been received by the national Canadian student body to their request for a Unity meeting next month between western national student unions and the Communist-dominated International Union of Students.

The reply came almost a month and a half after the first proposal of the meeting was sent to the IUS headquarters in Prague. Receipt of the message was announced yesterday by Syd Wax, Chairman of the International Activities Commission of the National Federation of Canadian Universtiy Students (NFCUS).

The text of the wire reads: "IUS SECRETARIAT OPINION DECEMBER DATE TOO EARLY FOR UNITY MEETING STOP LETTER FOLLOWS APOLOGIZE LONY DELAY ANSWERING (signed) PESCETTI IUS."

"The letter which they promise is the important thing," Wax remarked. "What it says will really determine the possibility of a Unity meeting. It might suggest a later date for the conference."

Wax also said that if the IUS suggested a date in the late spring or summer of next year, he thought it would be a good idea to have the Unity meeting in Canada, possibly in Toronto.

"It would be preferable to have the meeting in a neutral (i.e., non-Communist) country if possible," Wax commented. He quoted a statement of the French national student union that "there is a special atmosphere when the IUS holds meetings in its own country; they are very artificial."

The proposed meeting would be between the IUS and the national student unions of western countries who have in the past found it difficult, or even impossible, to co-operate with IUS. At the meeting the two parties hope to find some means of working together.

The British National Union of Students has said the meeting "may well prove to be the last opportunity for the settlement of outstanding differences" between the students of Communist and non-Communist countries.

The idea of such a meeting was approved at the annual NFCUS conference held in London last September. The conference explained its desire for such a meeting by saying that "since IUS already exists on the international student scene and by virtue of its international nature, we deem it desirable to achieve a maximal degree of relationship with the students of the world through IUS."

The conference also set out a list of points which had to be met by IUS if Canadian students were to participate in it. If these points were not met, the conference decided, NFCUS would withdraw from all active participation with IUS and seek the establishment of another organized international student body.

These points request respect for the rights of minority members, a secretariat more representative of the membership then the present proportion of American and African coverage in the IUS publicity releases, and a decentralization of activity.

The conference also called upon the IUS to refrain from taking sides on political affairs which more properly belong within the scope of the United Nations.

These points and the desire for a Unity meeting were transmitted to the IUS in a letter to its President, Joseph Grohman, on Oct. 19. Since then two wires have been sent asking for answers to the request for the meeting. Wednesday the answering wire was received.

The meeting was first suggested to NFCUS by Denis Lazure, last year's Chairman of the International Activities Commission. In his report on the annual IUS conference in Warsaw, he said that he felt IUS was interested in working with the western unions, in spite of past differences, and suggested a Unity meeting.

This was in direct opposition to his stand one year before. After the 1950 IUS conference in Prague, which he also attended (along with last year's SAC President Bill Turner), he said there was no longer any hope for co-operation with the Communist-dominated body.

Xmas Cards Sold By Vic To Help Asia

The Victoria College Union has already started campaigning for Student Help for Asian Relief and Education announced a Vic official. Official Victoria College Christmas cards went on sale yesterday, with proceeds to go towards Asian Aid.

The Christmas cards will be on sale in the VCU office at Vic and in Alumni Hall until December 15. The cards cost 90 cents a dozen.

Professor E. J. Pratt of the Vic English department has written a special rhyming couplet for the cards, which have a new design this year, the official went on to say.

The VCU also plans to take over the Hart House Tuck Shop at the Vic Informal to be held this Friday and to donate the profits to the Asian aid campaign.

A tobacco company has donated one thousand packages of cigarettes which will be sold at the dance with proceeds to go to the campaign.

Literary Issue

The annual Literary Issue of The Varsity will be published again this year, if sufficient entries of high enough quality are received. The deadline for submitting the poetry, essays, short stories and photos for the issue is Jan. 10. If enough contributions are not received, this issue cannot be published.

Mr. President

For years, Toronto was the only university that didn't have an office for the president of its Students' Council. This year office space has finally been provided, and sitting behind his desk in the picture above, is Syd Wax, the President who got it. His desk, along with a new chair and filing cabinet, is in the corner of the Women's SAC Office in the basement of University College.

NOTICE RE NOTICES

Students are reminded that information for coming up and today is to be in The Varsity office before four o'clock on the day prior to publication. The forms to be filled out with name of organization, place, time and date, as well as date of issue, are to be found in The Varsity News Office, room 78, basement of University College.

Contract Binding For Music Club

The University College Music Club is being held to its three days at Hart House by the Board of Syndics although the club is not producing an operetta, according to Bill Kotcheff, president of the Music Club. He said that on Nov. 15 a letter was sent to the Board of Syndics, who control Hart House Theatre, asking that the club be released from its commitments for the nights of Dec. 14 and 15. He has received a reply from the Syndics saying that they regard any reservations for dates made in the previous spring as being as binding as a contract.

Kotcheff said yesterday that the club could not possibly work an operetta within two weeks or put on an operetta for the three nights. He said that the club would put on an operetta on Dec. 13 and that if they had a sellout the club might possibly break even.

The Music Club reported a deficit at the first open meeting of the UC Lit and as a result it was suggested by the Lit that the Music Club should curtail its activities for the coming year.

Kotcheff said that the club has a fairly reasonable budget for its operetta and "now we are caught between two fires." He added that the club could not afford to have a loss as the UC Lit has said that any club that goes in the red this year is finished.

Keep Veto In Council Club Votes

Yesterday afternoon the United Nations Club voted overwhelmingly to retain the veto power in the Model Security Council to be held this Wednesday afternoon in U.C. Women's Union.

A motion was introduced by Bud Trivett, II Law, "that the veto power be abolished for the purpose of this Model Security Council." Bill Dawson, IV Trin., opposing the motion, said that the almosphere of the Security Council should be retained and the members use their own discretion when using their veto power.

Due to the fact that there was no one at the meeting willing to take on the duty of speaking for Israel in the Security Council, Pakistan will be seated in its place.

National speakers were elected. Members of the groups will act as advisers to the speakers. Speakers will have ten minutes to be used at their own discretion during the entire evening.

On Monday and Tuesday, up-to-date movies on United Nations activities, including the war against narcotics trade and the war against plague and epidemic, will be shown at three different locations on the campus.

A letter from the President, Dr. Sidney Smith, was read to the Club congratulating them on their fine enterprise and consenting to be patron of this event.

Caledon Talk Topic Culture This Weekend

A group of foreign students and Canadian students are going to Caledon farm this weekend to discuss Canadian culture as the first of a series of such weekends being arranged by the host committee of the External Affairs Committee.

Letters have been sent to foreign students by the Host Committee telling about the the trip and stating that future activities of this type will depend on the number of students interested. Carol Rogers, IV UC, said yesterday that about half the students going on the trip over the weekend will be from foreign countries and the other half will be Canadian students.

The main purpose of the weekend is to get foreign and Canadian students discussing problems and meeting together, according to Miss Rogers.

McGill Cuts All Activities

Montreal (CUP) — Last week was "No Activities Week," at McGill. All extra-curricular activities, including publication of the undergrad paper the McGill Daily, dances, debates and club meetings were cancelled.

The plan was instituted by the Students' Executive Council in an effort to reduce some of the outside activities considered as a leading factor in the large numbers of failures at McGill in the last few years.

Use of the Student Union was also curtailed sharply for the week.

Oxford was no place for European DP's, he ...d It would encourage one to a champagne ...petite with a beer income. Europeans, he main...ned, with their over-intellectual and impra...al attitude to life which had made such a mess ...things could learn something from the Anglo-...xon virtue of a greater practical outlook.

So Nicholas Ignatieff went to the University of ...ndon and enrolled in Engineering. But he was ...illusioned with the narrow training in Engineer... at London, and, in extra hours, read history, ...onomics and literature.

"I just managed to squeeze through," he remem...rs "But the mental attitude developed through ...gineering was very useful. The disciplined ...ocess of thought is on the whole foreign to ...ussians (in Russia the classical humanities had ...en stressed to make people forget their ma...ial needs). Training in the objective approach ...as also invaluable, since one can't feel pas...nate about Engineering," he said.

Then, in his third year, he suddenly decided, ...ch as he liked England, that a Russian could ...er be an Englishman. He had a great yen for ... open spaces. Canada wanted farmers, and the ...ng student came over as a harvester. He ...rked as an axman for a Hydro project on the ...kawa River (just recently completed), and was ...otivated by the country.

"What captured my imagination in Canada ...as that it was one of the few countries left for...nate enough to be able to build a new civiliza... avoiding the errors and difficulties, narrow ...judices and traditions which were destroying ...urope."

So in 1925 he returned as a graduate engineer. ...e centred his attention on the frontier and its problems, on colonization, land settlement, and assimilation problems of New Canadians.

"The lack of unity here is considered a weakness. But I feel more and more that this very lack is one of the great Canadian virtues, and might be one element in this new civilization to which Canada is moving. Pressures towards unity and uniformity are among the most vicious aspects of civilization and part of the reasons for its disintegration. The difference among people is what makes them interesting and exciting."

After the depression, the practical did not seem the most important thing in building a better civilization, and the new Canadian turned to education. He taught modern and Canadian history at Upper Canada College, taking out expeditions during the summer to acquaint young Canadians with their country, with its vastness, and the lack of imagination in crowding into a few cities.

After much free-lance writing, particularly for "Saturday Night", on assimilation of new Canadians, and on international affairs, Mr. Ignatieff joined the Engineering branch of the army, in September 1939. Sent to England, he was loaned to the War Office for intelligence duties, and became an "armchair strategist". His field largely concerned the Russians.

"Present relations between the allies, and the cold war, did not come as a surprise to us. Everything, overlooked before in the attempt to present a united front to Hitler, had pointed to the inevitable collapse of allied relations."

Returning to Ottawa after the war, still in the Intelligence, he began to feel more and more that the solutions to major problems were not primarily military, nor did these problems all centre on Communism. "One of the tragedies of the cold war is that issues have become over-simplified."

So Warden Ignatieff, his very charming wife, and his young son came to Hart House. His job here is largely concerned with the mental outlooks and lives of the men of the University, outside the classroom.

"Our only hope is to turn out a generation which can tackle our problems in a more imaginative fashion. And we must not leave the frontier as a sort of last resort of the disillusioned and the escapist. University often acts as a sponge, bringing in the best and turning out city dwellers. For a better civilization, we must pump out bold, original men to all corners of the country. Not the escapist, but the man who is going to build!"

Role Of Quaker Discussed By Haslem At Hillel House

Mr. Fred Haslem, Executive Director of the Society of Friends discussed "The Role of the Quaker in a Troubled World" Wednesday night at the Hillel House.

In his introduction, Mr. Haslem told how George Fox, the founder, came into contact with the Seekers in the 17th Century. This group met in quiet meditation to seek God. By the end of the century they were a strong active group. They believe that "inward light" is a part of inheritance through which one can achieve the highest spiritual motivation. They also believe an oath useless, as you will only tell the truth if you want to.

"War", said Mr. Haslem, "destroys homes and properties. We have come to a point where the weapons of tomorrow are unknown. Brutality has also advanced; we speak glibly of 'Operation Killer' and throwing the Koreans into a meat grinder." The Quakers, he continued, feel that Communism can only be changed by implementation of better ideas, not by war. During and after a war, the Quakers attempted to put the land back into production and to settle the homeless. They do not take sides.

In July, 1951, seven Quakers went to Russia to encourage an interchange of people; less vilification of the press of both sides; release of Soviet prisoners, and co-operation in raising the world's standard of living. There has been no official reply as yet.

The Quakers have published two books stating their ideas for reaching an agreement. The first book Mr. Haslem discussed was "Russia and Us." The points emphasized were: export policies be dropped to encourage East-West exchange; Germany must not be allowed to build up her munitions; the products of the Ruhr should be for East and West Germany; the U.S. should affirm her faith in the UN and strengthen the bond between U.S. and Russia. Some provision should be made for a substitution of negotiators if there is a stalemate; Egypt be under UN trusteeship.

The second book was "Steps to Peace." "America should "listen more," read Mr. Haslem, "and have more skilled mediators." "All governments willing to accept responsibility be accepted, disarmament

REDUCED RAILWAY FARE FOR CHRISTMAS VACATION

The Canadian Passenger Association has announced that reduced fare arrangements have now been authorized for the Christmas and New Year vacation period. Students and members of the teaching staff may obtain at College and Faculty offices forms which will permit them to buy a return ticket at current normal one-way fare and one-half.

These forms carry the dates of the University vacation period, December 21st to January 7th, and no member of the University staff has any authority to alter these dates.

Bounds and Rebounds

St. Michael's college regularly turns out two publications both of recent vintage but both increasing in their scope and following.

The younger of the two is the "Mike", a weekly paper mimeographed right in the college. This is now going into its third year of life. Its character has varied greatly. Recently it turned to a less newsy format, sloughing off much of its former gossip and sports reporting and turning instead to a more philosophical plane.

Editors Nick Treanor and Skip Olmstead asked in their columns for criticisms of the new policy. All year there had been a number of letters to the editor each week. The next week after the request was made, the flood was increased by even more — uniformly praising the new style and even the quality of mimeographing work.

The older publication is the Trireme, a printed magazine founded five years ago. It was planned to appear twice annually and contain fiction, articles of a thoughtful nature, and poetry.

Soon the idea of two issues annually was replaced by a contentment with one, and two years ago the editorials were reduced to a minimum and articles were no longer to be found.

This year editor Miles Kennedy, some weeks after the start of the year surprised the joint Student's Council of the men and women of the college by asking permission to have the magazine professionally mimeographed (with illustrations in colour to help appearances). He also asked to have three issues instead of two. After some considerable discussion it was felt that it would probably be impossible to get enough advertising to make this possible. It was also felt that, since this is the college's centennial, one issue at least should be printed and enlarged to celebrate the event. When his suggestion was turned down, Kennedy resigned. His resignation was accepted and a memorandum was made advising his successor to seek extra issues next year from the very start, when budgets have not yet been drawn up and when advertisers are more amenable to additional burdens.

Wayne Kurlinski is now in the chair. The creative writers' group continues to meet on alternate Monday evenings to read over and discuss each other's work. From this group Kurlinski hopes to draw the core of the forty pages (larger than usual) magazine which is the plan for this centennial year.

Student Blood Sought Soon For Soldiers

The Students' Council decided Wednesday night to set up a blood donor campaign on the campus in co-operation with the Red Cross.

The decision was made as the result of recent publicity in the newspapers, which indicates that there is a great need for blood plasma in Korea. It was also suggested by a letter from the Red Cross, which urged such a campaign.

The Executive Committee of the Council, in recommending the campaign, said it felt such an opportunity would be welcomed by the students and would offer them a constructive program which would build good will as well as accomplish a worthy project.

It was proposed that the blood donor campaign be organized towards the end of January, by the SAC Student Service Commission. It was also suggested that the means of organizing should be through the presidents of the various student governments, who in turn would work through the presidents of the years in each faculty.

Band May Get New Uniforms

The Students' Council decided to investigate the possibility of replacing the Blue and White Band's uniforms with new ones, possibly of a new design, at their meeting Wednesday night.

Investigation has been left to a committee of four, including the Council's Finance Commissioner and representatives of the Blue and White Society and the Band.

The matter was brought up at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Council, at which President Syd Wax pointed out the need for new uniforms.

"Present uniforms are in bad condition," Wax said. "The present uniforms have been in use since 1937, with the exception of the four war years. Some hats and trousers have been replaced from time to time, but that's all."

Band Leader Jim Guthro amplified Wax's remarks. He said the uniforms are too small for the average person, and suggested selling them into a high school band, as they could be cut down and repaired for smaller boys. He also pointed out that there is no leader's uniform of any kind.

He also thought the band should get great coats for cold days, as does the band at the University of Michigan.

It was suggested at the Executive meeting that if the cost of new uniforms is beyond the Council's budget, alumni donations should be solicited. This is done in many places, it was pointed out. For example, at Harvard a special request is placed in each envelope issued to season ticket subscribers.

It was the opinion of the Executive Committee that it would be difficult to salvage any part of the old uniforms, and it would be better to get entirely new ones.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

Josephine Baker with various bunches of bananas designed by Jacques Fath, Christian Dior and other Parisian couturiers, moves into Loew's Uptown on Monday next for a week's stay. So THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE, the current feature, will vanish into oblivion after today and tomorrow.

I suppose one must be philosophical about this, except that oblivion seems a waste for one of the most satisfying films to come this way in a while. Even in a time of Hollywood rebirth when upper-level films are turning up frequently, this John Huston production of the Stephen Crane novel deserves fanfare, bugle bands, and drum tattoos.

Novels meet unpredictable treatment in the California film mills. Sometimes the novel is more-or-less violated, the spirit is killed but the famous best-selling title remains. Or, sometimes the title is changed also, because the movie public may not be able to figure it out and so won't come.

On the brighter side of the scale, increasing attempts are being made by more sincere producers and directors to keep faith with the original work. This can sometimes sadly result in the dullness of THE MUDLARK. Or in the not completely satisfying translation of a novel like THE BRAVE BULLS, although the film deserves a lot of credit for an honest try.

But there are happy times when a novel and the film become one —entertaining and yet honest to the spirit. This has happened when John Huston made THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE.

It is obvious that director Huston thinks the Stephen Crane novel is the classic some literary critics claim it to be. He has treated the novel lovingly, and yet with the sure touch of film genius, he has made it live on the huge flat intimate screen. THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE grips your attention: what happens to the Youth in battle seems very important. And when it is over there is a sense of completeness.

THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE is not a war film as such. It is about a Youth, frightened but wanting to be brave and fearful he was not meet the standards of manhood in battle. The novel is a psychological study, and so the film treatment must show the working of the Youth's mind as things keep on happening. This is a new dimension for the screen; Huston takes it in his stride and makes it come true in more than just black-and-white terms.

Along with the Youth's mental turmoil that the camera reveals by dwelling on actor Audie Murphy, Huston makes the battle scenes exciting by having the camera following the Youth's regiment as it goes forward or back or holds. Battle is confusing to the individual soldier, battle in THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE has the same realistic confusion. One of the highlights is the Youth's panic-stricken flight through the woods and fields which in broad daylight captures the same panic of George Eastman's flight in A PLACE IN THE SUN.

The advertising impresses on us the fact that the two stars, Audie Murphy and Bill Mauldin, are well-known World War II personages. Murphy, of course, is the now-unavoidable "Most Decorated Soldier," and Mauldin is the cartoonist of Back Home and Willie and Joe. Despite these non sequitur recommendations, both Murphy and Mauldin are excellent in this film.

Because Murphy has been no actor in his previous films, it would seem that director Huston is responsible for the believable protrayal for a scared Young soldier. Mauldin is an interesting personality as TERESA revealed, and his only fault is that the Crane dialog ("By jiminy! By heck!") don't always fit his 20th century tongue.

The supporting cast are unfamiliar character actors which helps this realistic approach very much. John Dierkes as Jim Conklin is the best man among them. Only Hollywood stereotype present is Andy Devine who is in one short scene. But the strongest actor is Harold Rosson's camera.

MGM should be proud of John Huston and his THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE. But I suspect the studio and many exhibitors are embarrassed at the box office because of its quality and its "un-commercial" approach.

If it has an empty week at the Uptown, which is quite probable, THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE will not see the light of the screen of many neighborhood theatres. So there are two days to see THE RED BADGE at the Uptown. After that, you'll need a microscope for minute newspaper listings and constant vigil to catch it around the few theatres willing to take a chance.

TOMORROW'S HOMEMAKERS

In a few years, when coed balls, cutting classes and pep rallies are just memories, and members of the male fraternity have settled themselves down to earning and providing, just what do we have to look forward to? The first thing that comes to mind is returning home after a hard day at the office and accepting the excuses of the little woman, who just didn't have time to get supper ready at the right hour.

What does the wife do all day that keeps her so busy dinner isn't ready when it should be? What better a place to find out than the Home Ec practice house, that magnificent residential edifice tucked unobtrusively between the women's residence and the Dominion Rust Laboratory?

Here tomorrow's homemakers devote a full month of their precious young lives (during the penultimate year) to live and practice the ideals of modern living from the sink-and-oven point of vision right down to making beds and changing diapers. Here, obviously, is the place to go for a sneak preview.

From a cursory glance one would get the impression that all twelve of the young ladies, who just vacated the premises Monday night after their thirty-days stay, are more afraid of the baby than the baby is of them. The baby is a thirteen-month bundle of female dynamite with large brown eyes and jet black hair. Her favorite trick is paddling in bath water with her hands, much to the dismay of her supervisors, Norma Hastings and Isabel McLauchlan. The sight of these two cowering for protection from the showers being sprayed by the innocent infant would almost make a fellow think twice about his future plans.

Beverly Partridge, down in the laundry feverishly working to get her chores done before her first class, gave us the impression she could operate the most involved electronic device provided they handed her a sheet of instructions. With list in one hand, and Bendix controls in the other, she had the machine gurgling and bubbling merrily, as she endeavored all the while to keep the colored things out of the white wash.

From upstairs comes the synonomous growling of four vacuum cleaners as Pat Prokopenko, Bunny Mold, Betty Wood, and Betty Dynes riously wielded Mr. Hoover's version of mother's little helper. Scurrying frantically in and out of rooms and over cavorting electroluxes as Helen Brown, electric kettle clutched in one demure hand, dutch cleanser, dusters, and whisk in the other.

Throughout this pre-eight-forty nightmare we observed one coed who was quietly retaining her full dignity. This was reserved Mary Lobel, house manager, who interrupted her cleaning up of the living room to answer the phone, indifferent to the quiet riot taking place about her.

Probably because it is the way to a man's heart, the kitchen is regarded by the girls as the most important room in the whole practice house. Elvira Schultz took special care as the prepared a scrumptious rice pudding. Miriam Lobel might have been mixing the formula for an atom bomb the way she painstakingly brewed the ingredients for a delicious-smelling souffle.

Just before they leave for school, the girls rid themselves of their pincurls, affix their lipstick, and straighten their seams. These sights can also make a fellow hesitate in his plans.

This, then, is an inkling of that part of our future spouse's day which we shall probably never see. We're the wiser for it too: with all the many and varied things the homemaker has to do. it's a wonder to us, now, that supper ever gets ready on time.

Every little girl likes to ask Santa for something for Christmas, and Barbara Broadway, I Vic, has decided she is going to get there early. The Santa she is talking to stands in Victoria College, where students are selling Christmas cards. Money from the cards is going to the SHARE campaign, for aid to Asian students.

Advance Reports For Councillors

The trial run of a plan to mimeograph and distribute committee reports to all Council members before the regular meeting of the Students' Administrative Council is held will be tried out in the first weeks of January, the SAC decided Wednesday.

At the present time, committee reports are read at the SAC meetings, but since some of the committees do not meet until a few hours before the full Council meetings, it has been found impossible in the past to mimeograph the reports and distribute them to members beforehand, Secretary-Treasurer E. A. Macdonald said.

"Because we don't hear the reports until we have to approve or disapprove them, we can't deal adequately with the material in them", commented Bill Corbett, who suggested the idea.

He pointed out that in its committee reports Wednesday night, the Council had covered 32 separate items. "We can't do justice to these points if we have no idea what they're about until we come to the meeting," Corbett said.

Chuck Hanley, UC, pointed out that mimeographed reports would have the additional advantage of giving exact motions for the college and faculty executives to discuss.

A motion to have the minutes of full Council meetings mimeographed and distributed was defeated, when Associate Secretary-Treasurer Miss Parkes said that this would entail too much work.

UC Beat Irish 1-0 In Soccer Playoff

University College soccer team defeated the St. Mike's team yesterday afternoon to gain a berth in the Arts Faculty Cup Finals. The only goal of the game was scored by an unfortunate St. Mike's defenceman who blasted the best shot of the day past his own goalkeeper three minutes before the end of the first overtime period.

The game was played on a wet and muddy field on the Back Campus, and the poor conditions slowed many of the players to a walk by the end of regulation time. None the less, both teams played a very fine game, and only the quagmire in front of each goal prevented the score from being much higher.

St. Mike's took command at the start of the game, while the Redmen seemed unable to adapt their game to the wet field. A well-placed corner kick was headed by Miles Kennedy of St. Mike's right to the U.C. keeper, and seconds later Mikeman Don Rope hit the cross-bar with a free kick from the right wing. After the first fifteen minutes U.C. recovered somewhat, and Steve Dalnoki, playing a splendid roving game at centre-forward just missed the left post on a good breakthrough.

For the balance of the first period U.C. put on the pressure. Dalnoki, the centre, along with his two wings kept the St. Mike's defence fully occupied, and had their inside-forwards been able to get more into the attack, a goal might well have resulted. The rubber ball used in the game was too lively to be easily controlled, and some breakaways by both teams were spoiled by the ball rolling ahead of the forwards and over the goal-line. Low of U.C. missed a good chance shortly before the end of the half when he shot over the bar.

St. Mike's pressed strongly after the half-time interval, but were unable to pay off. Robin Scott of U.C. came up with some splendid defensive play, as did Lloyd Elmer at centre half. Ivern Davis of St. Mike's just missed heading in a well-placed corner from Don Rope, and after that U.C. returned to the attack. Three scrambles in front of the St. Mike's goal resulted in no score, thanks mainly to a brilliant save by goalie Don Murnane on Dalnoki's grounder. A few minutes later Dalnoki blasted an easy one over the bar as he lost balance in shooting.

Just before the end of regulation time the teams exchanged rushes up the field. Both teams were tiring badly, but the standard of play remained as high as was possible in the terrible footing. Ivern Davis and Don Rope played well at midfield, but their craft seemed to leave them as they came close to the U.C. goal.

The overtime period saw U.C. pressing for a score for the first five minutes. St. Mike's took over at the turn, and at one point had three forwards in on top of a bounding ball in front of an open U.C. net, and only the presence of mind of U.C.'s Robin Scott averted a score. Fred Brauer of U.C. played a brilliant game in the nets, as did his counterpart Murnane for St. Mike's.

Three minutes before the end of the overtime, chance played its part in a game which the breaks had to decide. In attempting to clear in front of his own net, a St. Mike's man miskicked, and Murnane had no chance on a ball which shot into the upper corner of the net. St. Mike's pressed strongly until the final whistle, but their luck had run out.

Considering the conditions, it was a well-played, very even game. U.C. often looked more likely to score, and Dalnoki and Scott were probably the best players on the field. The game was very fair and clean, and the refereeing was excellent. Either team might well have won, and the only difference between them was in their luck. U.C. advances to the final against Senior S.P.S.—the game being played early next week.

Amateurs Meet For Fistic Bouts

Well, boxing is here again. The novice tournament commences on Wednesday, December 5, the finals being fought at the Athletic Night on the following Saturday. The weighing in will be done on Tuesday and entry forms may be obtained at the Intramural office.

This tournament is open to all undergraduates with the exception of those who have participated in Intercollegiate competition previously, won senior Intramural championships or fought in public tournaments.

"It is going to be a good show, for this has been a good year for beginners. The turnout has been good this season and they have been improving very fast," said Tony Canzano, University of Toronto boxing coach.

There is a good representation in all the classes, especially in the 130 lb. class and in the light heavyweight class. The weight classes are 130, 135, 147, 155, 165, and heavyweight. There is a 2-lb. weight allowance in all the classes.

Orfuns Beat Central Y 55-52 In City League Basketball Tilt

By BOB GODSON

The Varsity Orphuns broke a tight seesaw battle wide open with very few minutes remaining to roll to their second straight win at Hart House last night. Newcomer Leo Madden scored twice to break a 48-48 deadlock with five minutes left in the game to lead the Blues to a final 55-52 victory.

The first half opened with a shooting duel between George Stulac of Varsity and Sandy Kier of Central Y but their shooting was off and the play turned rough and slow as the half ended 29-all.

The second half however had the crowd on their feet every second as the lead seesawed back and forth.

At the end of the third quarter the score was tied again 43-43 and set the stage for a fourth quarter which had everything a basketball fan would want. Sandy Kier, who was the game's high scorer with 23 points, raced down the middle to put Central Y ahead 45-43 in the early seconds of the last period. Stulac then sank two foul shots to tie the score again at 45 all. Again and again Stulac, Kettle and Dancy stormed in under the elusive Central Y basket failing to score until Al Dancy finally tipped in a rebound.

The play was rough and fast with many fouls as the score became 4-848 on an exchange of foul shots.

Leo Madden, who had been fairly ineffective during the early stages of the game, then showed why he was one of the New York city high school All Stars last year as he sank two beautiful long shots to set the Orphuns up 52 to 48. Leo broke away again with three minutes left to increase the lead to 55-48. Kier, who was practically a one-man team for Central scored the last two baskets, one on a breakaway, but it wasn't enough.

The Blues had to hold on in the final minutes protecting their lead and they did it just as successfully as they had done in their first game.

Jimmy Russell and Doug Kettle played good ball for Varsity although Stulac was the best ball handler on the floor.

George Stulac was again high scorer for the Baby Blues with 18 points giving him a two game total of 38 points.

YMHA surprised everybody by building up a 7-0 lead after 8 minutes of play in the first quarter over the powerful Tri Bells; however the Bells won easily. Varsity and Tri Bells now share the lead in the Senior league with two victories apiece.

Varsity Lineup

Centre, Stulac, 16. Forwards, Brown 4, Yakomin 5, Guards, Kettle 3, Milne 2. Alternates, Madden 9, Dancy 7, Russell 6, Stevens 3, Mandryk, Primeau, Reeves.

Vic Seniors Defeat SMC In Hockey Tilt

In a penalty studded hockey contest yesterday, Vic. Sr. blanked St. Mike's A's to the tune of 4-0. St. Mike's pressed hard in the first period but died under a withering attack by Vic. in the last frame. In the first period the play was rather slow with neither team showing much polish on the rushes, but at the seventeen minute mark, Vic's Walt Struthers managed to slap a loose pluck in for the first tally.

The second frame however was a different story altogether for it was Vic all the way. They outskated, outshot and outplayed the obviously tired Mikemen. Scoring in this period came when Paul Walton slapped two tallies past Grossi in the S.M.C. nets, and Gibson dented the twine once. St. Mike's matched Vic's goals by penalties drawing four in the second period, two of which were very cheap and did not help the game at all. Aside from some fine defensive play by Hatwich the double blue squad were not clicking at all.

Best for the winners were Walton, Struthers and Fenning. The losers showed individual power in the Cole, Hunt, McDonald line especially in the penalty-killing role, but obviously not enough to overcome the unified strength of the Scarlet and Gold squad.

Matmen Meet In Hart House This Saturday

The University of Toronto Wrestling team is all set for the first meet of the year. This will be the City of Toronto Novice tournament to be held tomorrow in Hart House. This is one that the University team took by a considerable majority last year.

Only those wrestlers who have not competed in any Intercollegiate competitions before this year, and those who have not won an interfaculty tournament are eligible for this meet. Varsity expects to have most of their promising juniors out to this meet which is generally a good preview of the junior interfaculty. Last year, out of seven men who went down to enter the meet there were six that came out with championships.

A week later, from December 5-8, will be the junior interfaculty tournament for this year. In it all the prospective wrestlers from the different faculties will wrestle off. The final championship fights will be held on Athletic Night on Dec. 8th. The regulations are the same as before with regard to who is eligible to enter the competition.

On December 15th there will be a meet of the senior team of the University against the Ontario champions in amateur wrestling. This year's senior team has not yet been picked, but there are a few carried over from last year's squad that will go a long way in carrying the Blues along. These include Joe Goldenberg, 123 lbs., Tom Hatashita, 135 lbs., and Bill Chykaliuk, 177 lbs. There are others from the Intermediate team of last year that will also fill in a few gaps. If the University team wins this meet they will be in a very favourable position with regard to the competitions for the Olympic teams next year.

Meet Bill Wade New Puck Coach

To take over the reigns from Wally Halder as coach of the hockey Blues and produce an intercollegiate championship is the task that has been set before this year's freshman pilot Bill Wade. This task however should not be a formidable one as Wade has become a customed to bringing home winners in the past years while coach of both Intermediates and Junior B's.

With a number of holdovers from last year's college champions plus an influx of several impressive newcomers, Bill will have plenty of good material to instruct this season. However he is not without problems and one of his main worries at present is how to equalize his defensive strength with the prevailing offensive power.

When queried about strength of the other teams in the league (McGill, U. of M., Laval) he replied that he thought both the Carabins from U. of M. and the Laval entry would be the toughest. Already this year these two teams have beaten each other once.

With regard to the defence situation Wade, who incidently plays for Kingsway Lumber in the T.H.L. Major group, has experimented by putting forward star Jack McKenzie back on defence along side of Joe Kane. Tonight the new coach will be able to see his team in action for the second time this year when the Blues take on Peoples Credit Jewellers in an exhibition tilt at the Arena starting at 8 p.m.

Rocky Robillard Coaches McGill

Rocky Robillard, assistant football coach at McGill University and former football and hockey star with the Redmen, has been appointed as coach of the McGill Senior hockey team for this season.

Rocky is stepping into the shoes of Dave Campbell, well-known hockey figure who has retired from the game. With only eight of last year's regulars back, the new coach has a job on his hands.

Women Swimmers Splash In London On Saturday Eve

The University of Toronto Women's Swim team journey to London under the watchful eyes, and in the capable hands of their manager Ross Stone, to avenge the one point margin by which the women from McGill won the Intercollegiate Women Swimming Championship last year. The line-up this year carries some names well known in women swimming, and includes Lois Cassar, who saw action in the Intercollegiate loop two years ago, Lou Willard, Peggy Rowntree, Pam Perrin and Frances Wood. All of whom have carried Toronto colors before.

Additions to the gals wearing the Blue and White are Beryl Lewis, a runner-up in back crawl event at last year's Canadian Women Swim Championships, Jennifer Crawford, who will lead the diving division, with Mary Crawther, and Claire McMullen to complete the free style relay squad.

With such an impressive array of talent the Women Swimming team should be able to add to this year's collection of Championship awards when they meet Western, Queen's and McGill to decide the Championship on Saturday.

Waterpolo

The first game of the Intercollegiate waterpolo series will be played tomorrow afternoon. Toronto and McGill are the only colleges with teams in this sport. The series is a two-game home-and-home affair with total points to count.

Varsity won last year by a considerable margin, piling up a big lead in both games.

Holding up the defensive end of the Blues' play is goalie Hart Robins. The two starting defencemen will be Bill Rosen, Bill Buik, and Bob MacKenzie. Larry Rosen plays rover and often goes the full length of the game.

The three starting forwards will be selected from Norm Mortimer, Bill McIlroy, Bernie Langer, and Gord Mackborn.

The waterpolo game is one half of an active afternoon of sport at House House tomorrow, as the Ontario novice wrestling championships will be held at the same time.

venerable institution, was the coach of last year's Mulock Cup winners, Forestry. Mac is coaching the line while ex-Blue player and former war veteran Byron Peebles is coaching the backfield. Lister was originally to be head coach, but took ill just before the season started. UC tried getting a couple of the local pros to take the job, but when their reliability proved to be considerably inferior to their football ability, Peebles was given the job. Lister came on the scene late in the season to help out.

Lew Fick has been coaching at Vic for three years now, ever since Bernie Taylor left for McMaster. Fick played for Vic two or three years before his appointment as coach.

Both teams rely mainly on a strong running attack. UC's strong front wall will likely be a decisive factor. Two outstanding linemen played with the Intermediates last year, guard Art Cringan and centre Carl Naumoff. Their defensive backfield, with Pete Gawinski and Jack MacFarlane as secondaries flanking Naumoff, and Danny Cucin and Pete Nichols at tertiaries with Gerry Love at safety, is probably the best in the league in spite of lack of height. Ed Richardson and Ralph Brown do most of the ball carrying from the halfback spots.

Vic's ends, Art Williams and Mel Moyer, will probably be better at stopping UC's wide stuff than any other team's this year. Ed File, John Wilson, and Jim Rogers should be able to hold down the centre of the line if the flanks can hold. Lorne Lorge, who has quarterbacked Vic teams for four years, will direct a capable and more experienced backfield than UC's, with Mal Frazor, John Bond, and Jim Goodfellow.

Too Much Rein?

As publishers of The Varsity, it seems strange we (the Council) should be condemned by our own paper. . . . We are giving the editors of The Varsity too much rein. . . . The Varsity considers itself the only champion of the people. . . .

These statements, made at last Wednesday's Students' Administrative Council, indicate a misconception of the role of The Varsity in university life. Because of the seriousness of the charges and in view of the incorrectness of the basic assumptions we would like to clarify our position.

The Students' Administrative Council and its most important job, the publication of The Varsity, have a common goal, that of working in the best interests of the students. And although we may disagree on precisely what student interests are in particular cases, we are agreed on our responsibility to the student body. The Varsity is not asked to agree with the SAC at all costs, but rather to work for the good of the students. In short, the SAC and The Varsity have identical aims, but their interpretations may vary.

We stand somewhere between the SAC and the student body. Our function, on the editorial page of this paper is to interpret the news in view of what we consider to be the best interests of the students. That is our duty; that is what the editor of our student newspaper is chosen to do. And disagreeing with the SAC may at times be the inevitable consequence of a conflicting interpretation of student interests.

The Varsity is not published by the Students' Administrative Council to forward its views to the exclusion of the opinions of its editors. If this were the case, there would be little point in publishing anything more than a bulletin sheet.

But this is not the case and the contract between the Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity and the Students' Adinmistrative Council states so explicitly:

That, when appointed to the position of Editor-in-Chief of The Varsity by the Council, the Editor is given the confidence of the Student Body and in holding this important position, he is expected to use his ability in their best interests. . . .

In being criticized by the SAC, we are following in the fine tradition of previous Varsity editors. Indeed, such criticism has become almost an annual custom. It would seem hardly less than inevitable that the SAC and The Varsity would disagree in their interpretation of student interests.

It has been implied that the publishers (SAC) of this paper are above criticism. But we are not a commercial organization, like the downtown papers, to be told what to do and say in our editorial columns. The SAC, as representatives of the students of this university, have chosen the editors of this paper to fulfil a certain function — that of editing a newspaper to the best of their ability. No strings are attached; the SAC may criticize us and may even fire us, if we fail in our duty to the students.

In a definition of the function of a college paper, Dr. B. K. Sandwell has said: "Once appointed, the university editor owes his entire allegiance to the organization which appointed him — not to any section of it, and not even to the officers of it, but to the student body as a whole." This opinion we heartily endorse; indeed, we believe that few would agree with a narrower definition.

OUR READERS WRITE

More Bamboo

Editor, The Varsity:

I regret that I feel obliged to reply to Mr. Cheng's letter in Wednesday's issue of The Varsity on the Dean of Shanghai's address to the UN club on "Life Behind the Bamboo Curtain." I regret that valuable time should have been wasted in trying to correct a completely biased and distorted impression tha Mr. Cheng would like to leave with those who were not at the meeting.

Characteristically, Mr. Cheng begins his disagreement with the Dean's remarks by a not so subtle imputation of discreditable motives to the Dean and the use of carefully selected remarks lifted out of a descriptive talks to suggest that what he said could not be taken seriously simply because he happened to be pastor of a big church. For Mr. Cheng to say that he was "not impressed that the Dean is a true Christian serving for the cause of human brotherhood and friendship" on such ridiculous grounds is, I consider, both an unwarranted attack on the speaker's character and an insult to a guest of the University. This is so particularly since the Dean is not on the campus to reply.

For such a politically conscious engineer as Mr. Cheng to attack the speaker's remarks in such a personal way and then continue, as I shall point out, to ignore the point of his address and attempt to refute it with a series of irrevelant non sequiturs is to lay himself open to the suspicion that he is deliberately trying to squelch the only first hand evidence we have had recently from China and at the same time suggest a highly colored picture of his own based on irrelevant statistics.

In his second paragraph Mr. Cheng states categorically that the Dean's remarks "had achieved no other effect than to excite hatred between the peoples of Canada and China". Since people tend to take the printed word at face value only a critical reading will disclose the totally "misleading" character of the remark. In the first place the Dean's remarks were confined to actions of the governments of China which he distinguished from the people of China. In fact he described the people as non-political.

Secondly the tone and character of his remarks were confined to actual incidents of which he had direct knowledge. There was nothing in his remarks to excite in the first place or secondly to induce even slightly among his audience the emotion of hatred. This I verified personally by conversation with many of those present after the remarks. Surely, Mr. Cheng cannot hold the Dean responsible for his exceptional emotional sensitivity to the relation of events, might I say facts, which intrude on some personal theory of his. The reductio ad absurdum of this particular phrase can be seen by the fact that the 450 million odd people of China are undoubtedly unaware of the Dean's remarks and it is known that many of them are of the same opinion if they could express it openly.

I dealt at such length with this remark because I think it an example of the misleading impression without a shadow of substance that can be created and yet not look implausible to the hurried or casual reader. Occasional exaggerated emphasis or mistaken impression in argument is excusable. When this is coupled with personal attack on the speaker and his motives plus continued subtle use of the "colored" phrase, the meaningless statistics, and neat confusions of categories such as mixing the people and the government as the same thing, it is no longer excusable. To anyone interested in valid communication the hand of the practicing propagandist is evident to the point of annoyance.

Mr. Cheng contends the Dean began by defending Chiang Kai-Shek. The Dean said he thought Chiang was personally honest but condemned the actions of his government officials. This did not imply any support to the Nationalist cause and was no more than a partial corrective to the undiscriminaing incrimination of an individual as the symbol of a regime. A man's character and his responsibility for his public office are two different things.

Mr. Cheng prefaces his remarks on land reform by saying that the Dean's comments are superficial. The gist of these "superficial" remarks of the Dean was that although land was re-distributed, title was not given to the peasants (here Mr. Cheng's statement about a peasant land ownership system is completely wrong) hence the peasants are given possession at the pleasure of the government. Those middle peasants who have acquired a little more land at the price of life-long saving have their little surplus divided too. Besides not having title the present grim joke in the scheme is that although the peasants have all the responsibility of the land when it comes to the produce raised, the government takes half or more away in taxes. That is the meaning of the "cloud of starvation hanging over the country." It is the price of the government's dependence on the cities and the huge army and the war which they are waging that they must deprive the peasants of the produce that is rightfully theirs. It is also the reason why rice can be sold at moderately inflationary prices. What is collected for nothing can be sold reasonably. What is the meaning of an increase in the harvest if it is mostly taken up in feeding a huge army in home occupation, an expeditionary army in Korea, a large bureaucracy engaged in detailed regulation and suppression of anti-government thought and action? Mr. Cheng's description of production without reference to distribution is surely "superficial" in its common meaning. As has been so aptly remarked of the peoples' governments "pretty soon the people begin to wonder who these people are."

No one denies that the breakdown of the extortionate landlord class is a step towards progress in China. The Dean stated that this shift of possession was going on. If he "neglected the significance of land reform with regard to mass education" it was probably because he had not been instructed in a somewhat tenuous relationship. Any attempt to teach the people new techniques to make them more efficient is to be welcomed. Let us hope the increased production will go to the same people that produced it.

John B. Tinker,
I Law.

UN And Peace

Editor, The Varsity:

I would appreciate the opportunity of denying the "undemocratic" nature of the happenings in the Peace Council last spring. The happenings in question were judged by the Caput to be constitutional at a meeting on May 1st. If the use of the word "undemocratic" in your editorial is meant to imply that the constitution of the Peace Council is undemocratic, this should have been stated explicity.

That the Peace Council has "backed down" is unfortunately one possible interpretation of our activities. However, the new policy of the Peace Council was to study the problem of Peace in its entirety. We did not wish, as previous executives appear to have done, to separate it from its component parts, reiterating the while that they, and only they wanted Peace. To investigate the problem of Peace intelligently, is impossible or at least ineffective if it is carried on in secret, and for reasons which have already been produced, I insist the Peace Council was a secret society until March 13th, 1951.

To correct this situation the new Executive had intended to commence a series of talks and discussions to bring Peace back into polite and intelligent conversation. The formation of the UN Club took the wind out of our sails somewhat and it is true to say that these new aims of the Peace Council are now identical with those of the UN Club.

To assert that we are passive is perhaps a little poetic license on your part. We have had an open introductory meeting which was addressed by a representative of the Toronto World Federalists and we have had an open membership business meeting. It is true that these meetings were well run and devoid of incidents of a violent physical nature, that appeal to the newspaperman's imagination, but "passive"—no!

I would like to point out that all meetings have been open meetings and criticism welcomed. The previous executive has had ample opportunity to put its views forward but only Don Anderson has spoken up and his remarks were reported in The Varsity. It would appear that our actions have not provoked very much criticism.

Finally only a Communist would try to organize a club with peace as its sole aim and purpose. Peace like happiness will follow when world society is properly adjusted to settling its problems without resort to force. It would be a ridiculous medical doctor who tried to correct a severe headache condition without conducting a complete examination of the patient. In the case of Peace, the patient and the doctor are one and the same and the problem is made correspondingly more difficult. It cannot be simplified by ignoring world conditions, in fact to do so might be taken to imply a certain insincerity.

D. Bishop,
IV SPS.

Mulock Cup

25-0 SHUTOUT FOR VIC

By DAVID ROTENBERG

The Mulock Cup is back at Victoria College. The Scarlet and Gold football squad earned it last Friday as they rolled to a 25-0 win over the University College Redmen. The Victsters surprised their opponents and the majority of the fans in Varsity Stadium as they completely outplayed the UC team in the first half, in which they scored all of their points. The second half was pretty even, but the losers were too far behind, and just couldn't get rolling.

The University College squad did not play the football of which they are capable, and were certainly far off the form which they displayed in beating Trinity in the semi-finals a week ago. This, combined with a Vic team which could do nothing wrong, made the first half completely one-sided, and it seemed that the contest would be turned into a rout.

In that first half, the Victsters rolled for ten first downs as against two for the Redmen. Also Quarter Lorne Lodge completed four passes in five tries, and three of these passes went for touchdowns.

Vic opened the scoring early in the game, as George Hevenor booted a single, after his team recovered a fumble deep in UC territory. The Redmen took over on their 25, and quick-kicked on second down. The Victsters got the ball on their own 50, and brought it all the way to the UC two on a ground attack behind some beautiful blocking. Mal Frazor hit the line for six and seven yard gains, while Hevenor and John Bond each ran around the end for 20. From the UC two Lodge threw a pass to Doug Mowat who was uncovered deep in the end zone. Williams converted and the Victsters were ahead 7-0.

The second Victoria score was set up by Bond who broke loose for the UC 40 and ran all the way to the 12 before being pushed into touch. On the next play Lodge bumped a pass into the arms of George Hevenor on the goal line, but again the UC defenders were offside out of position. Art Williams again converted, but he had two men as the Redmen were offside on the first one.

Late in the second session, the Victsters gained possession on the UC 53, and two off-tackle smashes by Frazor moved the ball up to the 33. Bond moved it up to the three on two end sweeps, behind some terrific blocking led by Bruce Dunlop, and Frazor plunged over for the TD. Williams converted on the second try, as UC were offside again.

In the last minute of play of the half, Williams broke through to block a UC kick, and his teammates fell on the ball on the Red 24. Frazor hit the line for eight yards, and then Lodge threw another pass to Hevenor in the end zone for the winners' final major. Williams converted bringing the score up to 25-0 for Victoria.

The second half was an entirely different ballgame. The Redmen were able to keep the Victsters off the scoresheet and the latter only threatened once. But the UC team were unable to get rolling on the muddy field, and although they kept up to their opponents on the play, they were unable to put a dent in the large Vic lead.

The play in the last half slowed down considerably, and the game was one of the two bucks and a kick variety. The Redmen registered three first downs in the half on runs by Richardson and Brown, but otherwise their attack was nonexistent. Both sides opened up with passes in the final frame, but got nowhere. The Victsters threw five but all went incomplete as the UC defence tightened up, while Danny Patterson of the Redmen completed two short ones in five tries, and Charlie Goberis completed one twenty-yard toss on a fake kick.

A great deal of credit for the Victoria win goes to the line, which outplayed their opponents for the major part of the contest. Led by Tony Lobraico, Jim Rogers and Art Williams, they consistently stopped the UC attacks before they could get started, and they also gave good protection to their passers and kicker. In the backfield, Lorne Lodge turned in one of his better performances at quarter, while halves John Bond, Mal Frazor and George Hevenor played well.

The best that can be said for the UC team is that they had an off day and are capble of better football than they showed in Friday's performance. Nevertheless good games were turned in by linemen Pete Earl, who played almost 60 minutes, Carl Naumoff, Bruce Evans and Pete Gawinski.

A masterly pass from Lodge to Mowatt, the latter deep in the heart of UC territory, spelled touchdown number one for the Victoria College team at the Mulock Cup finals on Friday. Mowatt is shown as the ball drops into his arms.

Bagpipes, Flags To Liven Rally Of Tory Party

In a pre-Election Rally this afternoon in the Junior Common Room, (UC), at 4 p.m., the campus Conservatives will blow the lid off, in an effort to stage a Party Convention, as wild as any put on by their big brothers in the Dominion or Provincial organizations.

This was made known yesterday by David Fry, President of the Macdonald-Cartier Club.

Fry said that at this rally the party would reveal its platform for the forthcoming Mock Parliament and that bagpipers would lead the procession into the flag bedecked hall. John Yaremko, Candidate elect in Bellwoods Riding is expected as guest speaker.

Aid Campaign Meeting

A meeting to discuss the structure, budget and plans for the forthcoming Student Help To Asian Relief and Education campaign has been scheduled for Tuesday evening at seven o'clock in Room 22 of the Mining Building. Besides all members of the External Affairs committee, presidents or responsible represenatives of the various college and faculty student societies are particularly requested to attend. The entire meeting will be devoted to the campaign in an effort to make it successful in raising the $11,00 objective said Graeme Ferguson, E.A.C. chairman.

Campus Profile

Robert Gill

By PEARL PARNES

Theoretically, Robert Gill was destined to continue his family's tradition of the Church of England ministry. But since the time he was ten years old, no one took this too seriously.

At that time, the family moved from Spokane, Washington, Bob's birthplace, to Baltimore, and the present director of Hart House Theatre has had his own theatre ever since.

This may sound odd. But, before he knew anything about the stage, he used to cut out comic strip characters, put them on a string, and direct his own "movies". In high school, he built a little model theatre, and used puppets for his casts. His major interest at that time was in lighting and scenery, and he rigged up footlights made of Christmas tree bulbs. An interest, incidentally, which has had its effect on Hart House stage, where the director has a large part in the scenic and lighting efects so marked in his productions.

Gill joined his first actual theatre company when he was in high school, working backstage on Gilbert and Sullivan productions. After graduation from high school he discovered, almost by accident, that one could study theatre and get a degree in it. So Bob went to the Carnegie Institute of Technology. He graduated with the Otto Kahn prize for the best actor in the graduating class, and became a radio announcer and actor.

"I hated every minute of it. It was sterile, and commercialized. When I came to Toronto, Stage 47 was a revelation, far above anything in the United States".

The next few years were more to the actor's liking. He went back to college for his M.A., and then joined the Cleveland Playhouse on a Rookefeller Foundation Fellowship as an actor, directing stock during his summers.

Then, in 1942, he assumed two posts — a teaching position at Carnegie, and director of the Pittsburgh Playhouse. Four years later he came to Toronto.

"It was the luckiest move I've ever made in my life. I love the job. So much of theatre is filled with strictly commercial stuff; here we have an intelligent audience and can do a solid program without having to depend on farce-comedies." He said that his friends in television constantly nagged him, asking why he "buried himself in a hole like Toronto".

"They hate their jobs, are on the verge of nervous breakdowns, and have to deal with trash. Here I can do Shaw and Shakespeare; I can work with beginners, and watch their development". Helen Armesto, last year's Medea, is a prize example of Bob's teaching. "She began with a bit part in 'Skin of Our Teeth', and two years later gave a phenomenal performance in one of the most demanding parts in theatre."

Many of the Hart House Theatre alumni are still in theatre, doing remarkably well in places like England, Bermuda, and Vancouver.

Student theatre has two main purposes as far as the students go, Bob feels. One is to train those who want to become actors, professional or otherwise. The second reason is equally important. Bob loaths the phrase, "We must educate our audiences". "It's patronizing and petty." But, he feels, many students come here who have never had the opportunity to see plays of any stature before.

"The theatre can show how the spoken drama enters our culture and becomes part of our life. And when the student leaves the university, he does not automatically drop his intellectual activities and his interest in culture. And this is what will increase the nucleus of Canadian theatre".

This past summer, after three summers of teaching at Banff and at UBC, Bob spent in Europe, seeing much theatre. The English, he said, have a tradition of theatre-going. "Everyone goes. It's part of their way of life, and the cost is very little."

"The tendency on this continent is towards theatre as purely entertainment. It's much bigger than that. Theatre was originally a religious experience. The emotional catharsis produced in really good drama is elevating, a supreme aesthetic experience."

Theatre is primarily emotional, but it can present ideas. Bob instances Thornton Wilder's plays, "Our Town", or his own production, "Skin of Our Teeth".

"These plays are moving and amusing. But he is telling us something as well, preaching to us to relish life as you live it, a reaffirmation of faith in mankind." It's the old idea of identification with the characters in the drama.

Bob has no patience with purely academic theatre. "People involved in productions must always remember they are still in showbusiness. Theatre should always be exciting." Bob has a tremendous enthusiasm for the renewed interest in poetic drama. Theatre as a whole, he sees, is moving away from the realistic school, and every phase of it is being used more poetically, with lighting, scenery, and use of music in plays. His own current productions of Christopher Fry have captured his imagination for the sheer poetry and fantasy.

Bob's pet ambition is to do Shaw's "Back to Methuselah". It would take two or three nights to see the performance in its entirety, but "the play is magnificent. Someday I will get the nerve to do it!"

Higgins to Describe Her Latest Exploits

Tickets are on sale today in the S.A.C. Office in Hart House for the second Holy Blossom Temple Forum Speaker, Maggie Higgins. "On the Rim of the Iron Curtain" is the subject of her address. Miss Higgins is a New York Herald Tribune war correspondent and won the Pulitzer journalism prize for her reports on the Korean War. In May she won the George Polk Memorial Award given by the Overseas Press Club for "a display of courage, integrity and enterprise over and beyond the call of duty." She recently returned from a European tour on which her lecture will be based.

She flew to Korea from Tokyo two days after the fighting began. Shortly after this the Army called her back for safety reasons but she received General McArthur's permission to return to Korea.

Miss Higgins graduated with honors from the University of California and the Columbia School of Journalism. In 1944 she went to Europe as a War Correspondent and covered Buchenwald and the capture of Munich by the 7th Army. For her stories [illegible] liberation of Dachau and [illegible] tengatin she got the New[illegible] women's Club award as [illegible] eign correspondent of [illegible] twenty-four she was the [illegible] The Herald Tribune Ber[illegible] reau.

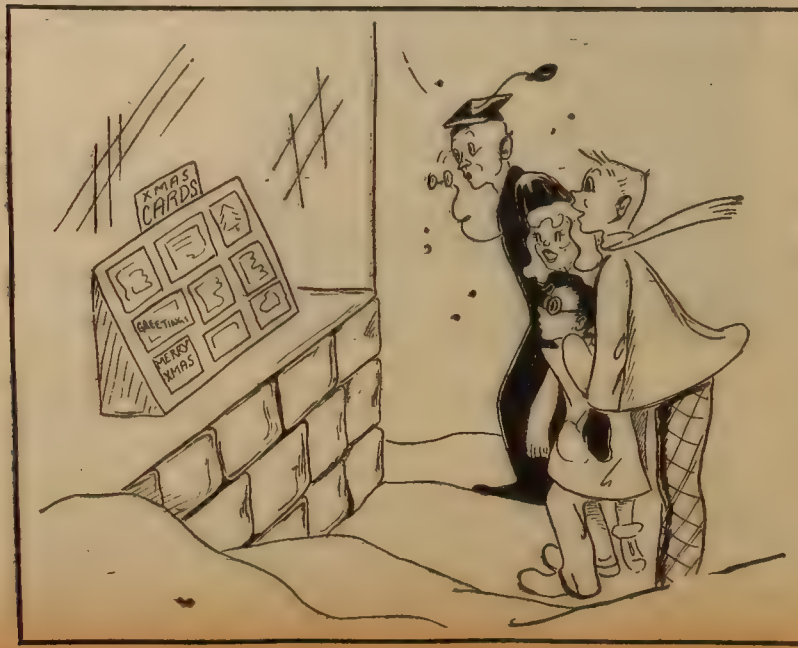
By DAVID PEDDIE

It's too bad that tradition demands that an evening in the [illegible] should fill in the time between 8.30 and 11.00. A religious [illegible] A BOY WITH A CART has a certain charm and ingenuousness [illegible] still wields a heavy hand in the theatre with its churches, and [illegible] of sheep, its fathers and its miracles. You can actually see the [illegible] play sort of stretched and twisted to one certain effect. It keeps [illegible] "I am a religious play so please show respect even though there are [illegible] funny lines." It's a silly thing to say when the comedy is [illegible] and the religion as awkward and gangling as Guthman, its [illegible] should I say saint. Anyway Mr. Gill could easily have played [illegible] ancient but hot Greek music until nine o'clock (to let all the [illegible] get into their seats), then presented his gem A PHOENIX TOO [illegible] QUENT and sent us all packing by ten o'clock. I don't think [illegible] would have complained about not getting their money's worth.

Christopher Fry lost a little prestige as playwright in BOY [illegible] A CART but gained it all back with interest in PHOENIX. The same applies to Hart House Theatre who stand and fall with [illegible] the first play the cast made a noble effort and the play lived [illegible] certain extent. But there was not the material to make it real either in the play or the acting. Martin Hunter who played Gu[illegible] gave a sincere and forthright performance. The play was built [illegible] him and he held it up remarkably well. Nadyne Smith as his [illegible] had all the funny lines and a very human personality, but her voice [illegible] monotonous and she completely disregarded the reactions of the [illegible] wasted her lines and lost half of her effectiveness. The [illegible] Donald Urquhart, looked very impressive and obviously has a [illegible] voice but unfortunately he, like the play, was trying to be [illegible] and was merely wooden. His best attitude was the worldly one [illegible] is your faith now, Guthman?" Good performances were given by [illegible] Callaghan and Douglas Quirk as Alfred and Demiwulf, the scots[illegible]

As to A PHOENIX TOO FREQUENT, I am almost tempted [illegible] that it is the best thing Hart House has done for many years. [illegible] superb play and the production lived up to it. The very beautiful [illegible] Jean Bannihr kept Mr. Gill away from his all to prevalent [illegible] and had the elegance and sophistication that is the essence of [illegible] topher Fry's poetry. It was also a relief to see student acting [illegible] was not self-conscious.



The play had overtones of classical Greek tragedy. The [illegible] Fate, the "deus ex machina" — Article 6, paragraph 3, of the Royal [illegible] Army Regulations, the hero's almost-suicide after his tragic failure [illegible] corporal, the philosophizing on algebra and the gods — all the [illegible] Fry handles as skillfully as though he had been brought up [illegible] tradition. But of course, he hasn't. He insists on being the mad [illegible] search of comedy rather than tragedy. He never once believes [illegible] will actually kill herself for grief over her husband's death. [illegible] cannot take his characters seriously, and we, the audience, are the [illegible] who benefit. The wit, the puns, the almost constant flow of [illegible] images and attitudes that stem from this cavalier approach to [illegible] thing — even his own poetry — are "nothing but to please our [illegible]

The play is obvious — yes. It is written so, it is meant so. [illegible] its greatness, for it delights us by delicately and in a roundabout [illegible] arriving at a foregone conclusion. Only in the long speeches does [illegible] anything of that overflowing of fun and games.

Charlotte Schrager as Dynamene acted with restraint and a [illegible] propriety as if she were actually trying to make us take her seri[illegible] but there was just the suggestion of a wink in her eye and [illegible] knew it was just an act.

Edith Greenberg was properly simple-minded as the maid [illegible] pleased to find death a new interest in life, fortunate to find [illegible] bottle of wine. It was a fine bit of ham-acting.

Frank Lawlor as Tegeus was the stand-out. Except for an [illegible] habit of shaking his head to the rhythm of his lines, he gave [illegible] worldly guard of six hanging men depth and understanding. He [illegible] was excellent and he made the poetry trip off his tongue as if [illegible] spoken it all his life. It was a good performance in a clever play [illegible] of Mr. Fry's best play.

Jolliffe Talk On Province CCF Feature

The basic political problems facing Canada today will be the subject of an address to be delivered in University College this afternoon by E. B. Jolliffe, K.C., leader of the CCF Party in Ontario. Sponsored by the Campus CCF Club, he will stress the effect of current legislation on Ontario in particular.

Mr. Jolliffe graduated from Victoria College in 1931. As a Rhodes scholar, he continued his studies in England, and was admitted to the English Bar in 1934. Returning to Canada in 1935, he worked for a time as a newspaperman, and then entered law practice in 1936. In 1942 he was elected leader of the CCF party in Ontario.

Mr. Jolliffe has spent many years on the provincial legislature and headed the CCF Party twice. Any student who wants to "see Ontario" through the eyes of this party can do so by attending the meeting in Room 8, University College, at 4:30 today.

Elections To Be Held For New Baby On Campus

The campus election for the Mock Parliament will take place this Thursday. Every student of the University of Toronto is eligible to vote, and the four political parties on the campus will solicit votes in a variety of ways.

The parties are fighting out their differences mainly at the Mock Parliament Forums. At the first of these, held last Wednesday, the place of the political club on the campus was thoroughly discussed. The topic of discussion at the second and last one to be held tomorrow at 1 p.m. in Room 6 of University College will be "What Our Party Stands For."

On election day, each of the political clubs will have its posters up, or will be making some kind of demonstration in an effort to create interest and get the students to express their party preferences.

The purpose of the election is to set up Mock Parliament debates later in the year on the basis of the student preference. These debates will be held in the Legislative Assembly Room of the Parliament Buildings in Queen's Park and will also be based on a 90 seat representation. The number of members from each party will be decided by the percentage of the total votes that each party gets in the election.

The Political Science Club is the organization in charge of making the arrangements between the parties, and will play the part of impartial judge in such negotiations.

Already postponed once this year, the election on Thursday will be the first of its kind on the campus. It is expected that the first Mock Parliament will be held later this year, and that another will be held early next year.

Sea-Monsters

By ORIE LOUCKS

From the very earliest time there have been stories told and retold about more or less mythical sea-monsters. At first they were thought to be malformations of forms of life that people knew. It was through an appeal to the imagination of the ancients that these creatures became the portentous objects of satanic origin.

Early in the Eighteenth Century people became a little more serious and a practice of physical observation began to replace the superstitions of those before. The study and cause of such sea monsters has now become a part of natural history and most of these explanations are quite commonplace.

Yet even the existence of some definite species of sea serpents is believed in by most seafaring men many of whom have observed confirmatory appearances. Most of these circumstances can however be explained satisfactorily as simple phenomena of the sea. One of the most common things mistaken for sea-monsters are the tide rows of seaweed which the ocean rolls up into great windrows of tattered matter and leaves them to roll up and down in undulating motions by the wave action.

Schools of porpoises moving in single file along the surface of the water are also often mistaken for a twisting sea-monster. Another sealiving creature, the giant squid with it many serpantine arms trailing behind it, comes in this class too.

Despite the fact that a great many accounts of sea-monsters have been explained there remain, however, several instances when owing to the general agreement and trustworthiness of those concerned the stories could not be denied. In fact many zoologists are convinced of the existence of such a monster, although in the absence of scientific proof, a general skepticism prevails.

The basis of many of these sea-serpent stories may lie in the fact that there are many large fishes the serpentine form living today in the ocean. Among them are the ribbon fishes, with elongated tapering bodies and a dorsal fin extending the full length of the fish. Specimens of these up to twenty feet in length have been washed ashore and examined by naturalists. Others of a much larger size have been observed swimming swiftly along the surface of the water. It is easy to conjecture that since these fish are supposed to live in the depths of the sea, there could be so called sea monsters develop and rise to the surface on rare occasions.

There is also a slender eel like shark that lives in the depths of the Pacific which, if it attained a large size would justify reports of sea-serpents seen in that region.

Further it must be remembered that in past ages huge sea-serpants did roam the high seas just as they are supposedly dong now. Some naturalists have even considered the possibility of some of these creatures persisting in the lowest abysses of the ocean to this day. They were called Mosasaurs and were closely related to the true serpents of today. They were very common over a wide area during the Cretaceous period and some reached a length of from sixty to seventy feet.

Of course this is barely even of a general interest to the skepticist who is convinced that there are no such things as monsters and that the sailors' tales are only fit for a child's imagination. But does not the average person when looking over the ocean think that there indeed, is a home for monsters such as no one has ever seen.

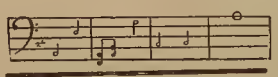
Lack of Enthusiasm Displayed —Reviewer of Art Gallery Night

With figurative white gloves in hand and polite smiles on their faces, about 450 students attended the Blue and White Art Gallery Night last Thursday evening to express ohs and ahs at the Royal Canadian Artists' exhibit and the old masters on loan from the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art. Aside from the 100 drop in attendance over last year, there was a decided drop in spirit. Last year it seemed that there was a spirit of gay abandon and downright fun attached to the evening. There was even perhaps a desire to shock the "culture vultures" which were so talked about.

This year the spirit seemed very different. It ranged from indifference to a "boy are we determined to absorb culture" attitude. And the program as presented by the Art Gallery Women's Committee left little room for anything else.

There was fun to be found, of course, and many did. In the clay modelling in the basement the influence of Matisse, John Barleycorn and the Gallup Co. question "What animal would you most like to be?" could be seen. The "try your hand at drawing" section was not quite so gay.



But a great deal of merriment resulted from "What is it?" where two abstract paintings were hung. The problem was to decide what they depicted. Picture B stimulated titles that ran from TTC Subway and acute indigestion to beans on a stone staircase and hell. The actual title was "Cell and Crystals". Answers to A fell into two brackets: those who thought they saw ships in the composition, and those who maintained its was a circus. "Star of a Three-ring Circus" was the title. W. B. Kay, III UC, came closest to the correct name and received as a prize a print of "The Market Place" by William Morrice.

D. R. Butt, II UC, a maths and physics student, was the winner of a draw from 57 correct answers for the Who Dun It section. The Now I Ask You contest had so many winners too, that there was a draw, and David Lorente, OCE came out top man.

Last year the Art Gallery evening was a tremendous success and although the evening was scheduled to end shortly after 11 p.m. the gallery officials were still rounding up students and shooing them out nearly an hour later. This year things petered out about 10 o'clock. Students who were attending their first Art Gallery evening didn't seem to be too disappointed, but many of those who remembered the delightful evening last year were disappointed.

While being wholly in favour of such evenings, I'd rather not attend another such as last week's. I hope that when another evening is planned there will be more of the calibre of the Dora Wechsler ceramic sculpture demonstration of last year and the discussion centred around Alex Miller's abstract version of a still life, with Miller commenting as he painted.

Margaret Welch

Ancient Music

"Imagine yourself setting in a medieval castle. You have just finished chewing at a large piece of meat and have thrown the bone under the table for the dogs. Now you are ready to sit back on your bench, relax, and enjoy the music."

With these words, Albert G. Hess, on Thursday afternoon in the Conservatory Concert Hall, introduced his Early Music Ensemble of the University of Minnesota in one of the most enchanting musical programs heard in many a season. It was a program of very early music going back as far as the 13th century and ending with Bach (1750).

Not content with exhuming this long-forgotten music, the group also brought along reproductions of the instruments used at that time, together with two original instruments of the 17th century, the cither and the hurdy-gurdy.

Needless to say, the instruments of that period didn't possess the refinements and technical resources of their modern counterparts. The tromba marina, for instance, which is about six feet long and looks like a cross between a paddle and an enlarged cricket bat, sounded something like the scraping of chalk on a blackboard.

Played like an organ-grinder, but sounding more like an out-of-tune violin is the hurdy-gurdy, which has a handle that rotates a wooden wheel setting two strings in vibration. These strings are stopped not by the fingers of the left hand, as with the violin, but by a set of piano-like keys placed along the finger-board. All very complicated, perhaps, but fascinating to watch and hear.

The cither looked more familiar. It is an old member of the guitar family, smaller and rounder in shape, with thirteen instead of the usual six strings. Also included in the ensemble were the viola da gamba and the recorder, precursers of the cello and flute respectively.

There was nothing dull or stuffy in the music. Indeed, much of it was rousing and full of good humor. An old German kissing song, for example, advises that kisses be "not too dry and not too dewy, not too short and not too long." In "The Hunt" (14th Century) sung with cornetto and fiddle accompaniment, the history is told of men and hounds hunting after bears. One of the hunters comes upon a shapely village maiden and the hunt is brought to an end. The cornetto, which supplies a piercing obbligato to the song, is a "wooden brass instrument, a forerunner of the trumper, but strangely enough sounding like a saxophone in its upper register.

In a different mood were three songs of exquisite beauty by Bach, which were done with quiet restraint and compassion.

The thing most characteristic of the entire program was the complete ease and relaxation with which the music was performed and listened to. Indeed, music of this early period was a social pastime and as necessary as cakes and ale to the enjoyment of an evening. In short, it was a thing to be listened to and enjoyed; about all that was missing Thursday afternoon was the ale.

The mood of the program was climaxed by the final number, a joyous carol, in which all the instruments and the singer joined in a sort of 15th century jam session.

"Tartuffe" Is Trinity Play Choice

The first reading for the annual Trinity College three-act play took place yesterday afternoon at St. Hilda's College. This year, the Trinity Dramatic Society has chosen "Tartuffe", by Moliere, as the third in its trilogy of annual plays. It will again be directed by Herbert Whittaker, entertainment editor of The Globe and Mail.

Whittaker directed "Vanity Fair" in 1949, and last year, "The Enchanted". Last spring at the Dominion Drama Festival, his entry "In Good King Charles' Golden Days", won the regional award, as the best play.

Tartuffe will be presented in Hart House Theatre during the week of February 5th. In common with its two predecessors is in "period", has a large cast, and is a comedy. The script has been adapted from the original French by Miles Malleson.

The central character, Tartuffe, is a sort of "holy man who came to dinner," who attaches himself to a household, and stays. Because of its religious implications the play was banned by the Catholic Church after its first performance in France, in which Moliere himself played the lead. And even though Louis XIV was in favor of it, nothing could persuade the Church to change its decision. Moliere was even refused burial on church ground for creating this "religious hypocrite"!

A Short Story

Talk Over Tea

By MARIE TAUROGES
Reprinted from The Georgian

"Have some tea?"
"Thanks, I will."
"Rum in it?"
"You bet."
"Good?"
"Excellent!"
"Read any good books lately?"
"Oh, yes.'"
"What?"
"Do you really want to know?"
"Yes. We've got to talk about something."

"Well, I've read 'Festival at Farbridge' by J. B. Priestly which was very gay and very readable. He wrote it for the Festival of Britain, you know."

"Oh, I didn't know. I'll have to read it then. My aunt's sister went over to England for the Festival."

"Your aunt's sister? Wouldn't that be another aunt or your mother?"

"Yes. It was my mother."

"Well then why didn't you say so."

"I did."

"Then I've read all the Evelyn Waugh books in the Penguin series. Liked 'Decline and Fall' and 'Scoop' best. Did you read any?"

"Yes, I read them all, too. I liked 'A Handful of Dust' best . . . didn't like 'Scoop' at all . . . thought it was silly."

"I didn't ask for your opinion . . . I merely asked you if you had read any, that's all."

"Pardon me, I'm sure."

"I'm reading an excellent book now. It's called 'Stephen Potter on Lifemanship'. It's a philosophical treatise on man and his relation to God and the unknown. Would you like me to read you some of it?"

"No."

"Good. I shall. Now here's a good sport . . . and don't look at me like that, it's time you listened to a bit of culture . . . Ahem . . . 'How to be one up—how to make the other man feel that something has gone wrong, however slightly. The Lifeman is never caddish himself, but how simply and certainly, often, he can make the other man feel a cad, and over proionged periods.' "

"That doesn't sound like a philosophical treatise on Man and God."

"Well, really! If you want to twist everything round in that dirty mind of yours go right ahead. But please don't interrupt."

"Now to give an example of Lifemanship. 'The cottage of the Meynells is a beautifully altered and luxurious Georgian house, but it is an important general rule always to refer to your friend's country establishment as a cottage. Why? Because it is an extraordinarily difficult gambit to counter. Impossible to reply "My what??", "It's not really a cottage" is no better if not worse.

" 'T. Driberg suggests that as an answer to the generalized question "Are you going down to your cottage this weekend?" the reply should be a firm "Yes." Followed after a small pause by one of the following phrases of extended qualifications.

" '(i) "We've had to close the south wing altogether except of course to the dollar tippers." (ii) "We're just having the octagon room done up. I wish I could get the Gainsborough back." (iii) "Nothing takes so much dusting as a dome." (iv) "The man from National Gallery has just been down to look at the Cellini mantelpiece." '

"What in thunderation has that got to do with Man and God?"

"Well, if you don't know there's no use my telling you. I don't think you appreciate this book highly enough. I shan't read you any more."

"Would you like some more tea?"

"No."

"Seen any good movies lately?"

"No."

"Well, you don't need to get huffy because I don't like your book."

"Pardon me, but you're sitting on Beatrice."

"Huh?"

"Get up, you lout, you're sitting on Beatrice."

"Well, I'm standing, and I don't see an Beatrice. Who's Beatrice anyway?"

"My imaginaary alligator. Come here, you poor little thing, did the nasty man sit on you? . . . BEATRICE! What a NAUGHTY thing to say!!"

Blue Hockey

Don Rope of the Blues slides into the Peoples goalie as he flips in one of the two lonely Blue goals scored in the exhibition match last Friday night in Varsity Arena. A meagre crowd was on hand to watch the Blues absorb a 10-2 shellacking at the hands of the more-polished Peoples club.

Female Swimmers Win Title Two Intercoll Records Fall

By ROSELYN STONE

The football team is not the only one around this university that can bring home the bacon. Last Saturday night in London Varsity's nine Intercollegiate swimmin' women splashed through to collect 45 points and a first place at the Annual swim meet in Thames Hall.

Two Intercollegiate records were smashed. Beryl Lewis cut .8 seconds from the back stroke record to cover the 50 yard distance in 34.4 seconds. She also beat her own Canadian record by one-tenth of a second. The second record was broken by the 150 yard medley relay team composed of three PHE girls, Beryl Lewis, backstroke, Frickey Wood, breast stroke, and Peg Rowntree, freestyle.

Kay Miles of Western took the 50 yard free style. McGill and Toronto's team captain Peg Rowntree swam a fingernail race for second and third place respectively. Frichey Wood took an easy first in the breast stroke for Toronto in 37.8 seconds. In one of the closest races of the evening, Kay Miles overtook Pam Perrin in the last lap of the 75 yard medley to win by .6 of a second. Varsity came through to win the 200 yard free style relay, an event which Toronto swimmers have captured several years running. Blue swimmers in this event were Mary Crowther, Claire McMullen, Pam Perrin and Beryl Lewis.

With the leadership of Helen and Marg Currie, Queen's took the honors in synchronized swimming. Individually, Toronto's Lois Cossar took first spot with her solo "To A Water Lily". Highest marks in the diving events went to Mc. Gill. Jennifer Crawford and Lou Willard displayed good diving form to take third place for Toronto.

Blue Pucksters Outclassed As Peoples Team Wins 10-2

By BARRY THOMAS

Last Friday night the hockey Blues suffered a 10-2 lacing at the hands of a polished Peoples Credit Jewellers team in an exhibition game played before about 100 spectators at Varsity Arena. The locals were no match for the smooth passing T.H.L. Major group team and were outclassed in almost every aspect of the game. A sheer lack of fight was probably the main reason for such a trouncing as only two or three of the Blues showed the drive that last year's championship team was noted for.

The Blues scored first in the opening period when Don Rope rapped home a pass from Al Conboy but Peoples bounced back with three goals before the period was over to take the lead 3-1. Peoples added four more in the second frame and three in the last period before Johnny Adams slapped in a loose puck for the Blues with less than two minutes to play.

Instead of solving Coach Bill Wade's defensive problem the game only served to accentuate his headache. In the last period in an effort to plug the gap he moved Jack McKenzie back on the defence to help strengthen the rearguard that gave little protection to Varsity's goalies, Orr, Ross and Taylor, who shared the netminding chores. Up front the Arrowsmith-Adams-Weldrake line looked the best with Weldrake especially executing a couple of fine solo rushes.

The game was played cleanly with not a single penalty being issued. The Blues, who sported new white uniforms, will likely be in for a strenuous week of practices in preparation for their first two league games this week-end against McGill and Laval away from home. In spite of Friday's game ("the bad one out of their system") the Blues will undoubtedly put up a much better showing against the Quebec teams when the week-end rolls around.

STAFF MEETING TODAY

The following are asked to be present at a staff meeting in the news office of The Varsity at 1.15 p.m.: Bill Wilson, Jim Proudfoot, Bruce North, Jerry Hollyer and Francis Quinlan.

Mulock Cup

25 - Ouch! - 0

'Twas a sad story for UC last Friday afternoon, as Vic claimed the Mulock Cup for the fifth time in seven tries. The supposedly superior (if you read the notices in the JCR) UC team was "edged" by a score of 25-0.

However, all was not sadness at the game. Vic rooters went semi-wild at the VICtory. "We were red hot" was all that modest Hugh Alexander, end for Vic, could say. Even though they beat UC by such a big score, lineman Pete McMurtry still had a good word for them. "It's a good team." Vic's coach Lew Fick, well-known for his revealing and often sensational statements for the press, said characteristically, "The boys were really tackling and really driving."

During half time several UC men conducted a jam session, mutilating such favorites as "Dark Town Strutters' Ball" and "The Three Blind Mice." Among the exhibitionists was a clown from Vic who managed to carry a good part of the mud off the field after several attempts to place kick a ball. The clown was later identified as John Lewis, I Vic. By that time all he could say was, "Where's UC?" Also among the clowns were those up in the press box who by the end of the game were sending down three different types of parts made from the program sheets.

Murray Gaziuk, Athletic Director for UC, summed up the game in one sentence. "Vic stopped our famous end run and we couldn't stop their famous pass." The UC dressing room after the game was a ecene of devastated desolation. The top halves of their uniforms, which had been borrowed from the Intermediates, were slowly peeled off while the University equipment custodian stood by wearing an expression that seemed to indicate concern as to whether UC should have been allowed to so disgrace the Blue and White. Just wait till UC tries to borrow them again for next year's Mulock Cup final.

Sore arms and legs were being rubbed, mud-spattered socks were tossed aside. Several players were saying, "If I hadn't missed that pass", or "If I had made that tackle" . . .

Both Vic and UC had a good turnout in lovely cheerleaders. Among the Vic cheerleaders was Suzanne Morrow, famous skating star. She could not be reached for comment on the game. So the annual Mulock Cup final ended with the strains of "rah rah Victoria", a cheer that UC hopes next year to drown out.

Trin. Protest Soccer Tilt Replay Voted

In a meeting held on Friday, Nov. 30, the Soccer Standing Committee ordered the game between Sr. S.P.S. and Trinity replayed on Monday, December 3 at 12:30, after a protest of the game by Trinity was upheld.

At the previous meeting of the two teams, Skule had defeated Trinity by a score of 1-0. The lonely goal had been scored on a penalty kick in the second overtime period.

The penalty kick had been awarded to Skule for intentional handling of the ball by Trinity. The latter protested the legality of the penalty, and were awarded a replay.

This will cause a postponement of the final game until Wednesday, December 5, instead of Monday, as previously scheduled.

The game on Wednesday will be between the winner of Monday's game and U.C., who earned the right to play in the finals on Thursday.

Redmen vs Laval In Hockey Clash

A brilliant unassisted goal late in the third period by Norm Lupovitch, his second of the game, broke up a two-all tie and gave McGill a three to two victory on Friday night over Laval University in Quebec A crowd of close to a thousand saw the Redmen open their season in a hard hitting game in which 13 penalties were handed out, eight to McGill and five to Laval.

Lupovitch's second goal came late in the second period to tie the score after Laval had taken a two to one lead. The other McGill goal went to Whitey Schultz, while Marg LeGace netted both for the losers. Laval now has a record of one win and two losses in Intercollegiate play, splitting decisions in two games with the University of Montreal.

Sportshoes

The volleyball playoffs continued on Friday when Sr. U.C. defeated Meds I in a noon-hour contest. They won the match in two straight games, both by a score of 15-10.

Betty-Jean Hagan

It is not very often that one hears a performance that keeps you on the edge of your seat in expectancy, that elevates and sweeps you away by its beauty and depth of emotion. Such a performance Betty-Jean Hagen, young Canadian violinist, gave last Saturday evening at Eaton Auditorium.

Inspired, fiery, dramatic, brilliant, moving, executed with poise, self-assurance and showmanship, it was all this and more. She enjoyed the music she was playing, poured herself, body and spirit, into every part of it. There was immediate and powerful communication between performer and listener.

Her program was cleverly designed, classical in mode in the first half, modern in the second. In both styles, she revealed her artistry and musicianship. Miss Hagen commenced with the Handel Sonata in G Minor; it was finely interpreted and delicately shaded throughout. The Andante and Adagio movements, which can be so dull, were brought out with great tonal warmth and interest was constantly sustained. The Allegro movements, carried at a beautiful tempo, were masterfully executed.

She followed with the Adagio and Fugue in G Minor, the first two movements of Bach's First Violin Sonata. The Fugue, technically difficult to play clearly and precisely with its three and four part chords, was a thrilling performance. The Fugue theme was always clear, never buried in the rich chording. It was Pablo Cassals, I believe, who once said that it was the use of rubato that distinguished the wheat and chaff in Bach interpreters; Miss Hagen's rubato was discriminating and sensitive.

The first half of the concert was climaxed by one of the greatest violin sonatas, Beethoven's C Minor. The sombre music of the first movement, the music of the Beethoven of the brooding eyes, the heavy, overhanging eyebrows, the lyrical Adagio cantabile, the light, ironic Scherzo, and the drama of the final movement — all these various and changing colourings of this colossal work, Miss Hagen successfully captured. Her rendition was powerfully emotional. It was, perhaps, in the Adagio Cantabile that she elicited the greatest beauty. Miss Hagen excels in lyrical passages.

This was to be revealed even more strongly in the Prokofieff Violin Concerto No. 1 in D Major (1917). The concerto was the triumph of the evening, and a less inhibited and more demonstrative audience would have stood and cheered. In his autobiography, Prokofieff refers to the broad, gentle melodies of the first and third movements of this concerto as representing the lyrical element in his creative style. These movements are remarkably free of cadenzas and pyrotechnical displays. The second movement, Scherzo, is a fine example of Prokofieff's puckish jests and piquant mockery; it is a tricky course of pizzicatos, double harmonics, slides in double stops, leaps of long intervals, and so on. To all, the lyrical and ironic, Miss Hagen gave full and inspiring expression. It was a magnificent performance.

Miss Hagen is a mature artist, not just a violinist. There is no higher praise.

William Kotcheff.

UN Club Films At Hart House Depict Fight Against Narcotics

The United Nations Club announced yesterday that new movies recently received from United Nations headquarters will be shown on the campus during the next three days. The first showing will be tomorrow at 1:30 in Hart House Common Room.

Included in the reels to be shown is the story of the U.N.'s running fight with insidious under-world characters in the narcotics trade and the battle against epidemics and plagues which is being waged in the undernourished countries of the world.

The U.N. Club has also announced the names of the various countries which will be represented at the Model Security Council being held Wed. night at 8 p.m. in University College Women's Union auditorium at 79 St. George Street. Representing India will be Idrak Bahtty, Grad. Studies (elec.); United States, Jorn Tinker, I Law; France, David Trent, II Trin; Russia, Dave. Turnbull, II SPS; China, Bud Trivett, II Law; Canada, Elliott Whiteman, II U.C.; Pakistan, Ali Tayed, Grad. Studies (Geog.); Egypt, Grad. Studies: United Kingdom, Joe Quittner, III SPS (Elec.); Norway, Heinz Feldberg, Grad. Studies (Civil); Yugoslavia, Sandy Chisholm, I Pre-Meds. Each speaker will be allowed only ten minutes which can be used up a few minutes at a time and may be spread over the various resolutions which may be discussed.

It has been learned that Security Council procedure allows other delegates to speak in addition to the chosen speaker, but a total of ten minutes per country cannot be exceeded unless some countries do not desire to use up their entire time.

Rudolf Serkin

Last Thursday, Rudolf Serkin, internationally renowned pianist, played a recital in Massey Hall. An artist does not become internationally renowned without some special characteristic in his art. In Serkin's case it is precision. His followers and admirers have learned to expect performances that are not only vital and dynamic, but almost metronomically exact.

Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Brahms' Variations on a Theme of Schumann, op. 9, and Beethoven's Waldstein Sonata, op. 53, made up the first part of the program. The Brahms is scarcely a concert piece—its quiet, introspective mood and the delicate tonal shadings on which Serkin's performance of it depended, seemed to lose their way in the vastness of Massey Hall.

The Beethoven sonata, with its feeling of suppressed excitement, was the highlight of the evening. Here, Serkin's inexorable rhythmic exactitude gave the dramatic force of the music full rein. It is a strong temptation to slow up some of Beethoven's ominously quiet anticipatory passages. Serkin kept them moving. In such places as the long introduction before the first outburst of the finale, he succeeded in building up a wonderful tension without ever slackening the pace.

The other half of the program consisted of lighter works: Weber's Invitation to the Dance, two short pieces by Busoni (the closest approach to modern music on the program), and a Barcarolle and a Polonaise by Chopin.

Here again, Serkin made no concessions to the "romanticism" of the music, but played in strict tempo. Chopin's A-flat Polonaise—a considerably overplayed work in its several hopped-up versions — was performed with a vigor and forcefulness from which a freer tempo could only have detracted.

Serkin is too great and too well known an artist to require criticism—the reviewer merely sits back and enjoys himself.

Blue Hoopsters Lose Three On Exhibition Trip To US

Varsity's basketball season got off to a somewhat inauspicious start over the week-end as the Blues went on a warm-up tour of Upper New York State, playing three colleges, Hobart, Hamilton, and Colgate, on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights respectively. To Hobart they lost 48-42, to Hamilton they lost 69-63, and by Colgate they were clobbered 86-46.

Bud Natanson and Bill Huycke paced the Blues in a losing cause with consistently good showings. They led the Blues' scoring in all three games, and in fact scored over half the Toronto team's total points on the trip. Don Fawcett and Gary Glover also played a lot of good basketball.

The team, with only eight days of practice as a unit this year, suffered badly from lack of practice by comparison with the other clubs who have been working out for anywhere up to two months. This is a little earlier than the Blues usually start playing scheduled games, but they will no doubt benefit from the experience, especially the four new men on the team, who had never played down in the States before and were a little shaky until things got going.

Bill Huycke was top scorer in the Hobart game with 14 points. Bud Natanson got 11, and Art Binnington was next with 5 points. Hobart, whom the Blues beat 43-41 at Hart House last year, have a return engagement in January. By then the difference in practice should have been evened up and the respective worth of the two teams should be evidenced more clearly.

The loss to Hamilton College was a complete reversal of form from last year. Anyone who saw the Blues whip the Hams 70-55 last year would have thought it impossible for the same team — losing team, that is — to score 69 against Varsity the following year without adding a Mikan or a Fulks. The boys started feeding the ball to Natanson a little more in this one, and big Bud (who had the best scoring percentage of the team over the three games, as well as the highest total score) netted 20 points. Bill Huycke scored 15, and Don Fawcett 12. The Blues actually sank more field goals than Hamilton, but the latter were awarded 31 foul shots, on which they scored 21 times. The Blues sank only 7 of 19 foul shots. Hamilton's top man, Ryan, scored 18 points, two less than Natanson.

Colgate, which may be a nationally ranking team this year, was the last and worst stop on the tour. Though there was no one-man team, every member of the starting line-up scored up in two figures. Warren was tops with 15 points, and Dodds (all-conference last year) and Patterson hooped 13 apiece. Natanson was again top man for Varsity, with 11 points this time. Huycke scored 10, and Ray Menott 5.

On Being

Canadian. The title of the Rt. Hon. Vincent Massey's book just about synthesizes the present rage of Canadians, or at least a substantial number of them, for national soul searching. Indeed, "Canadianism for the sake of Canadianism" is becoming our equivalent to the "Art for Art's sake" war cry of the late Victorian aesthetes.

Of course, Canada's tendency towards national self-consciousness is quite natural and to be expected. But in many ways it is a bit archaic. While nationalistic upsurges in the nineteenth century were even applauded at times, their twentieth century results have made nationalism a suspect word. Even patriotism seems a bit dangerous to some people.

Canada, unfortunately or fortunately, was a bit young to get on the nationalistic bandwagon in the nineteenth century. And in the increasingly international-minded world finds it a bit rather hard to beat the national drums effectively. Indeed, External Affairs Minister Pearson's occasional declarations of American independence have to be made either mild enough to be meaningless or strong enough to be received sceptically.

Of course, Canada is quite aware of and affected by, the international temper of the times. And however jolly the good old days of cut-throat nationalism were, it has become increasingly obvious that co-operation must be substituted for nationalistic competition.

All of which leaves Canada without much excuse let alone desire for any flagrant display of nationalism, politically or economically. But something of a yen remains and culture seems to be about the only medium for expressing nationalistic fervour. The only practicable way, at least.

Thence we have the oft-expressed desire for a "distinctively Canadian culture". And thence also, the plaintive whine of the Royal Commission on Arts, Letters and Sciences in its somewhat maternal report on the cultural state of the nation.

While we would be the last to discourage prospective writers, artists and so forth, we would willingly trample the "if it's Canadian, it's got to be good" attitude to death. There can be no more stultifying atmosphere for creative work.

The "This is my home, my native land" approach is becoming excessively common. Possibly because of the increasing number of Canadian books being published, paintings being displayed, ballet companies being formed. Canadians are simply not used to it.

For example, for years and years we have read novels about Other People in Other Places. Perhaps it never occurred to Canadians, that their own country might be a suitable setting for a novel. And when novels do centre about a place with which we are familiar, we read it like tourists look for landmarks.

The critical faculties of the Canadian mind — and we assume that they are existent — are completely dispelled by looking at themselves in the mirror. Fascinated, of course, but not quite capable of behaving rationally under the circumstances.

A return to rationalism would be a pleasant, if unexpected, relief to the hothouse atmosphere we are in the process of enforcing on our delicate Canadian culture.

The Too Brave Bulls

In the following article, the writer not only reviews THE BRAVE BULLS, a box office failure so far as Toronto was concerned, but also attacks those regular patrons of the Towne Cinema who condemned it, sight unseen.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

One short week is all that the film, THE BRAVE BULLS, lasted at the Towne Cinema. At the box office, the film laid a big fat sad egg. There are several reasons for this, of which perhaps the most important is that Canadians do not like bullfighting.

But THE BRAVE BULLS is not just another superficial movie that uses bullfighting to provide blood-and-guts. It is a sensitive, intelligent attempt by a talented director-producer, Robert Rossen, to put in film the artist Tom Lea's novel of the same name. Rossen is one of the few dedicated men in Hollywood, being responsible for such acclaimed films as ALL THE KING'S MEN and BODY AND SOUL. The first film was based on the Robert Penn Warren novel about the career of a Louisiana demagogue. The second was a hard-hitting comment on the prize-fight racket. Both were honest, often subtle, and also entertaining.

THE BRAVE BULLS is not as successful a motion picture as the previous two. Tom Lea's novel was a fairly well-integrated mixture of the author's enthusiasm for bullfighting and the brave bulls, and the story of matador Luis Bell's inner struggles. Rossen does not succeed in tying the two elements together: the brave bulls win through.

Luis Bello's story suffers because of script deficiencies. The important events in Bello's career are too sketchy. In the novel, Bello's relations with his manager Fuestes and the aristocratic Linda are well-defined. But in the film, Bello's inner suffering because of the double death and betrayal of his manager and his girl does not make sense. His manager does not seem like this "right arm," as Bello says, and his girl seems like a passing bit of sexy fluff.

One the other hand, the documentary approach to the bulls on the San Mateo ranch is very effective. The bullring sequences are even more effective, basically because of the expert technique of cameraman James Wong Howe. And to top this, is Robert Rossen's handling of the bullfight crowds. ALL THE KING'S MEN is immediately remembered: the crowds being told to yell, "We want Willie Stark." The bullfight crowds are frightening as they boo and cheer, and hysterically stream after a dead matador's hearse. In the final bullring sequence, matador and brave bull are equals, united against the bestial force of the crowd.

So much for the picture. It is not completely successful, although it is an uncompromising and sensitive try that shows taste and intelligence. That it might be a big flop at the box office is understandable. A distaste for bullfighting may be universal enough to cause people to stay away.

But here is where I would take up cudgels for the embattled theatre management. They, of course, are not as interested in my arguments they are in business and they lost on a gamble. But apparently, letters have been pouring in from many sources, including regular patrons of the Towne-International Cinemas, charging the Towne with "condoning bullfighting" by presenting the film. The highly indignant plaints have been accompanied by requests to be taken off the mailing list of art house publicity.

This may sound democratic; it is an effective way to change theatre programming. But most of these complaints come from those WHO HAVE NOT seen the film.

Does not this sound like the civic official's complaint against The Kinsey Report which he had not read but knew was bad for public morals? Or the fuss raised by women leaders who had not seen the paintings about Thomas Benton's Susannah and the Elders and the lesser known but exuberant Sailors and Floozies, which, of course, did a lot to increase paid customers in the art exhibits at the Canadian National Exhibition?

Perhaps this is naive and idealistic, but it was my impression that a solid core of the people who regularly patronize the offerings of the Towne, the International and also the Odeon-Hyland, were the educated minority, the minority which asks for higher-quality products, not the often shoddy Hollywood factory-produced imitations of life. This is the group that made films like THE BICYCLE THIEF, DEVIL IN THE FLESH, THE BROWNING VERSION, HAMLET, CYRANO, CITY LIGHTS, ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT tributes to the growing taste for adult films.

But out of this group come frothing self-appointed guardians of civic morals, cat lovers who hold the SPCA for their Church, stupid people who can't understand other people and other ways. And what is more, do not make any effort to do so.

THE BRAVE BULLS is not that good a film. It will never rank as one of the ten best. But it is more honest and intelligent and adult than 99 per cent of films that come to us. Because of this a theatre brought it to Toronto as a presentation for what is known as a "special" audience. But instead of being composed of adults, the "special" audience happened to have leading them some highly vocal people whose culture is worn self-consciously and conspicuously.

Bullfighting is a national tradition in Spain and Mexico. Tom Lea tries to explain why. Robert Rosen tried to put this on the screen. To us, bullfighting may seem brutal and cruel. But though we may not like bullfighting, surely it is a part of being adult to listen to someone who thinks it's a misunderstood art.

Surely we have too much difficulty as it is knowing how it feels to be in someone else's shoes. You don't solve things by screaming that the shoes stink.

Much Maligned

Editor, The Varsity:

As is often the case with "Varsity" editorials, the essential point in the object of their criticism has been misconstrued. This is eminently evident with regard to the criticism of the Brading Debating Competition by the UC Literary and Athletic Society.

The principle which the "Lit" deprecates is not that the donor of the funds is a brewery, nor that the name of the prize is the Brading Trophy (although some of us would question the suitability of this name), but that this competition is being advertised as something, which in fact it is not. This competition is being called "the Canadian-Scottish championship". It is representative neither of Scottish debating supremacy, nor of Canadian debating supremacy. Only four universities of either country have been invited to participate.

As is blatantly evident from a communication only recently received by the UTDU Commissioner from McGill, the donors of this trophy are interested in only one end—the advertisement of their product. Mr. Hanly has been requested to keep McGill informed as to how often the name "Canadian Breweries Ltd." appears in the Toronto advertisements, in order to satisfy the donors that they are receiving full value for their money.

Your criticism of the "Lit" is wholly unjust, and factually groundless. We are not attempting "exhibitionism" and least of all "prudishness". We have been trying to show, in complete sincerity, to the students of the University of Toronto, through the medium of the SAC, that this fund is in no way an act of philanthropy for student cultural devopment, but rather that it has many unsavory strings attached. And what is more, support for this competition is contingent upon its publicity value for the donors, and the competition itself is a misrepresentation in as much as it is being publicly advertised under false pretenses, as a truly representative Canadian competition.

We feel that you have not only misunderstood our motion to the SAC, but even worse, maligned us in misconstruing our intentions.

Yours truly,
The University College Literary And Athletic Society.

Ed Note: Sincerity may have been the guiding light behind the UC Lit, but its object hardly seems to warrant it. "The Canadian - Scottish championship" may not represent all universities in the countries concerned, but then the world championship in hockey, the Stanley Cup, has no competitors outside Canada and the United States. Nor does the World Series in baseball go beyond US borders. Again, your letter would indicate the motivation behind your desire to change the competition's name seems to come from a fear of brewery commercialism, rather than from a desire for the strictest accuracy. As we suggested before university students are capable of ignoring the alleged commercial implications and make the most of a splendid opportunity for debating.

JOLLIFFE APPLAUDS STAR

Accurate Handling Of Recent Election By Papers-Jolliffe

Ontario CCF leader Jolliffe last night reaffirmed his recent statement that the Toronto Daily Star and the other Toronto dailies gave full and accurate coverage to the three political parties in the recent Ontario election at a meeting of the campus CCF club.

"The Star handles all news, be it an election, a murder or a fire in the same manner," he said. There were even some days on which the Star gave Premier Frost better coverage than did the Telegram, he continued.

The press is less effective in deciding an election than most people think, he said, and did not caus the recent CCF defeat.

"Private enterprise has never done anything important in Canada unless it was subsidized to do so." Mr. Jolliffe said, citing as an example the government-built, owned and operated Northland Railroad.

Jolliffe criticized so-called "department-store politicians" who try to be all things to all people. Their continuance in office exemplifies the "public apathy" that pervades today's Canadian political scene, he said.

Politicians who follow the line of least resistance when in office fail to give strong leadership Jolliffe said.

They form the habit of evading issues. In this regard the late Mackenzie King was particularly adept, Jolliffe commented. Such politicians also evade responsibilities he continued and are governed by the "policies of expediency."

Jolliffe forecast a "showdown" on an international level and also in the economic field. The Canadian economy is basically unsound he declared. There is artificial activity at present based on fear of war, Jolliffe declared, which will eventually collapse.

Discussing proportional representation and the single transferable vote, Jolliffe said that he did not favor their use. He denied that "statistical tinkering" would give minority parties their fair share of seats.

Meds' Vets Must Pay Fee Raise

More than one hundred veterans attending medical school at Toronto have received a Christmas surprise! Late last week they were informed by mail that they owed the University $2.100 for fees. Normally veterans' fees are paid by the Department of Veterans Affairs, but with the rise in medsmen's fees to $521.00 the DVA limit of $500.00 per year has been exceeded—and the veterans will have to fork over the difference.

Most of the vets felt the timing of the announcement of their debt would make for a slim Chrismas. The amount will be due in late January, according to Mr. Court of the University accounting office.

Mr. Hounsom, DVA in charge of university affairs, stated that "the University did not confirm any rise in fees to our office until late last month, with the result we were not able to inform the veterans sooner. Actually there have been several instances of the $500.00 ceiling being passed in the United States, and also at McGill. Veterans have had to make up the difference."

Of the 106 veterans in medicine and the four in Hospital Administration who have been informed of an outstanding amount, one third year man capsuled their feelings in one comment, "Why don't they sell the ruddy tarpaulin and pay our debt?"

Tories Unfurl Mock Platform

Pomp and Circumstance ... Flags . . . Bagpipes . . . the Union Jack . . . bunting-draped head table . . . and newspapers strewn all over the floor; they were all there at the Pre-election Rally of the Campus Conservatives in the JCR yesterday afternoon.

In the head table party were David Fry, President of the Macdonald Cartier Club; Scotty Mathews, the bagpest, II Trinity; Mr. Frank Greene, Vice-president of the Ontario Young Progressive Conservatives, and Mary Bowman, Executive Secretary of the Young PC's.

Fry announced that there will be a Political Science Club forum to discuss party policy, today at 1:00 p.m. in Room 6, UC. Voting will take place this Thursday between 11:00 and 2:30 p.m. and all voters must produce their ATL cards.

Greene said that "the Conservatives haven't got a party line because they don't need one. The socialists tried to sell a line," he added, "it wasn't sound business, and St. Laurent is going to find that out. There is no doubt that people have had all the socialism they are going to want for some time to come," he said.

Bill Freedman, III UC, asked if he considered St. Laurent a socialist. "Howe has more power than anybody else in this democracy," replied Greene.

Fry outlined the Progressive Conservative platform in the forthcoming elections Their platform includes free enterprise, increased immigration, comprehensive social security, increased government bursaries, sending Kurt Meyer back to jail (if guilty), and the adoption of the Giles' Report on Liquor. The last-mentioned relegates liquor control to the provinces, condemns "socially undesirable occurrences", but generally goes in for relaxation of existing restrictions on the grounds that the least restriction leads to the least drunkenness.

Lundberg Will Speak To Skule

Hans Lundberg, president and manager of Lundberg Explorations, Ltd., will be the speaker at the 62nd annual Skule Dinner in the Great Hall of Hart House tomorrow. Lundberg is the head of an organization of geophysicists who carry out investigations and surveys on the North American continent and Europe. He has used electrical prospecting methods in Sweden (where he was born), Finland, Belgium, France, Germany, Spain, U.S., Mexico, Canada, and Greenland.

Tickets for both the dinner and stag being held later in the evening cost $2.25, with about 200 tickets still available at the Engineering stores.

Lundberg will speak on "Modern Exploration" at the Skule dinner, immediately after his return from Sweden. He arrived in Toronto on Nov. 5, left for Sweden on Nov. 9 and will travel west on the day after the Skule dinner. He is credited with being one of those responsible for the discovery of two of the largest ore deposits in the world, one in Sweden and the other in Labrador.

Discuss Asia Aid Planning

There will be an open meeting to discuss the budget and plans for the forthcoming Student Help to Asian Relief and Education campaign tonight at 7 p.m. in Room 22 of the Mining Building, said Tim Armstrong, chairman of SHARE's executive committee. All members of the External Affairs Committee and presidents or representatives of the various colleges and faculties are particularly requested to attend.

"The purpose of the meeting," said Armstrong, "is to explain what SHARE has done so far, what it will do until and including campaign week. It will give everybody the chance to ask questions, criticize and make suggestions about the SHARE campaign. Jack Robson, Graduate Studies, member of the Executive Committee, stated "The faculties and colleges can run their canvassing during the big week. Supported by adequate publicity from the SHARE committee. This facilitates the campaigning for three reasons; it utilizes the existent year and course structure, it provides more personal contacts, and leads to more diversified campaign."

According to Graeme Ferguson, External Affairs Committee Chairman, this will be a special meeting, where there will probably be enough time to explain to everybody why we have SHARE, the needs in Asia and how ISS will distribute the receipts.

Urge Cancellation Of Meet At Nancy

Letters of criticism are being received by the French national student union as a result of its proposal for an international student conference to be held this month at the University of Nancy. This was announced yesterday by the Chairman of the Canadian student body's foreign arm, Syd Wax.

The Finnish and combined Scandinavian unions have written letters to the French, pointing out that the proposed meeting will occur just a few weeks before the Edinburgh conference at the end of this month, and will involve the same people. It will conflict with the conference already planned for the Scottish city, they fear.

The French proposal is for an international conference on student needs; the discussion to concern itself with "La Vie Materielle de l'Etudiant." They suggest that the national student unions send representatives to Nancy for the conference from December 15 to 20.

In the invitation to the conference, they suggest that the Nancy conference will not conflict with the Edinburgh conference, but will supplement it by a regional approach to the problems (decided at Nancy) to be carried to the other meeting.

At present the French have received recommendations that the Nancy meet be cancelled, but no word has been reached regarding their decision. The Canadian national union (NFCUS) is not sending anyone.

The Edinburgh conference, to be held at the end of this month, will be a meeting of the national unions of western countries. In the past these countries have found it difficult to co-operate with the Communist-dominated International Union of Students.

In the summer of 1950 most of these withdrew from IUS, and decided to hold a meeting of their own. This meeting, held at Stockholm a year ago, decided not to set up a new international union rivalling IUS. Instead they distributed a number of mandates to the countries present, but set up no central secretariat to co-ordinate them. The results of these mandates will be given at Edinburgh.

In a letter to the French student union, the Finnish national body said: "We will not participate in the Nancy conference, since we feel it will handle the same questions, and concern the same people, as the Edinburgh meeting.

"This is an obvious conflict with the Stockholm principle," the letter continues.

The combined student bodies of Norway, Sweden and Denmark said approximately the same thing, admitting surprise at the proposal. "We can see no reason for it," they said, and suggested that it be called off.

The Finnish and Scandinavian remarks were included in letters circulated by them to all the national student bodies invited to the conference.

In another letter, the French students added their support to the Canadian proposal for a Unity meeting between the western student unions and the IUS, in an effort to find common grounds between the organizations.

"We are skeptical regarding the amount of co-operation which will be achieved," they added.

Mock Candidates Give Platforms

Today at 1:00 p.m. the University of Toronto political clubs will hold their second forum of the Mock Election campaign. The subject of today's forum is, "What our party stands for". Each of the four campus political clubs will express their views, and a discussion will follow.

Speaking for the CCF Club, Walter Parker, III UC, said he intended to show the students what his party stood for, and would let them choose for themselves. "We will place before the students constructive alternatives to the principles of the Liberals, the Conservatives, and the Labor Progressive Party," he said.

David Fry, IV Trin., stated on behalf of the Macdonald-Cartier Club, "The Conservatives do not believe that the political struggle is the most important thing in life."

"The main issue facing a political party today is peace," said Ron Biederman, speaking for the LPP Club. "We stand for big five negotiations leading to a big five peace pact and disarmament so that true benefits can be brought to the Canadian people and the standard of living raised."

Said John Medcof, IV UC, speaking for the Liberal Club, "Unlike the Tories, we are happy to face the voters on Thusday, and are not afraid to put our party and our club forward. The policies of the Liberal party are sound," he said, "and we welcome the test of the student vote."

Nine Entrances Of The Temple Symbolize Baha'i Unity—Manser

BAHA'I HOUSE OF WORSHIP

"From time to time on the Toronto campus have had occasion to say 'I am a Baha'i,' almost universal response has been: 'You're a what?'," said Elizabeth Manser, IV Vic. Manser and Nora Nablo, II Vic, want to clear air a little with an explanation of what the campus club stands for.

"As members of the Baha'i Student Group which was founded three years ago, and also as members of the Baha'i World Faith, revealed in 1844, share beliefs which are considerably more extensive than any political platform, any plan for social welfare, or any psychology for the individual. Baha'i literature has been published and distributed in more than 50 languages, as the Faith has been established in over 100 countries.

"Its members believe that the various religions are in reality progressive stages in the revelation of God's will, and that the Manifestations have come to educate man and to enable him to carry forward an ever-advancing civilization. Man's continuing cultural evolution is dependent on his recognition, acceptance and application of the teachings of God for his day. Baha'u'llah, who they believe to be the Manifestation of God, taught that there is but one God and one religion, that mankind is one; and men and women equal, that religion and science must go hand in hand, that through an independent investigation of truth prejudice of all kinds must be abolished. By means of a universal language and universal education they hold, the spiritual solution of the economic problem, the establishment of a world tribunal, world peace and a world civilization will be achieved.

Illustrative of this desire to embrace all peoples and religions is the building shown on this page. The Baha'i House of Worship, designed by a Canadian architect, Louis Bourgeois, has recently been completed at Wilmette, Illinois, on the shore of Lake Michigan. It has been said to represent the first completely new departure in architecture since the Gothic period, offering a "hitherto unknown combination of fragile beauty of design with strength of structure." Because of the jewel-like fineness of the material (a mixture of special white cement and quartz), the building is referred to locally as "the Baha'is' fifty-million carat diamond.."

The dome is intricately pierced and designed to transmit light through the glass dome of the interior. This is a symbol of the radiation of Divine light in a darkened world.

The nine stately entrances of the Temple typify the nine greatest of the world's religions, and the great dome itself symbolizes a unity of all of these religions in one common faith of brotherhood and love.

The ultimate completion of the Temple will include a hospital and dispensary, a school for orphans, a hospice and a university. These services will be rendered regardless of colour, race or nationality, all of which distinctions are regarded by Baha'is as being superficial.

The inclusion of a college for higher education in this group calls attention to another basic Baha'i principle, that religion must be in accord with science and reason. Ceremony and liturgy have been abolished in the Baha'i Faith, which teaches that such things are merely means to an end which can be more easily attained without them. The Baha'i Temple is therefore a place of private prayer.

Representation on the Toronto campus includes a weekly public meeting for students, and seminars for the study of the Baha'i teachings.

Peace Council Hold Election

The University of Toronto Peace Council will hold an election Friday, December seventh, from twelve noon to two o'clock, in the SAC office in Hart House. Co-eds are eligible to vote.

There are two positions vacant: that of vice-president and that of the publicity director. K. Gradwell and Don Anderson, Meds-ex-President of the Council, have been nominated for vice-president. D Thompson and M. Lipmann are candidates for publicity director.

Knox College Carol Service On Wednesday

The all-male choir of Knox College will present their annual carol service on Wednesday from 5:00-6:00 p.m. in the chapel of Knox College.

This choir of 25 members has been gaining renown during the past two years through tours made throughout Ontario and Quebec. This spring the choir will be visiting about twenty churches on a tour throughout the Maritimes. As in the past, broadcasts of the choir's singing will be made throughout the three-week tour.

The tour through the Maritimes is being undertaken mainly for the purpose of presenting the challenge of the Christian Ministry to young men.

The director of the choir, Carleton Milligan, is the official organist and choirmaster of t. Andrew's Church in Ottawa, formerly the church of the late William Lyon Mackenzie King. Milligan lectures in Church Music at Knox College every other week and in the alternate weeks lectures at McGill University.

Professor D. K. Andrews, lecturer in the Old Testament, will be the guest speaker at the carol service. In addition to the traditional carols, the choir will sing two other selections on Wednesday.

Recruiting Volunteers For Chest

The Volunteer Department of the Toronto Welfare Council is intensifying its program of recruiting volunteers to assist in local social welfare services, according to the Community Chest. The Department especially needs nursery school assistants, health assistants, and recreation workers.

The Community Chest says that volunteers should be over 16 years of age, eager to help their fellow man and should be willing to learn.

Nursery school assistants are required any morning or afternoon from Monday to Friday in all districts of the city and suburbs, while health assistants are needed for both child health centres and school health centres in Toronto.

Any student interested in learning how he or she can help should telephone the Volunteer Department, Welfare Council of the Community Chest, at EMpire 3-4971, or contact the department at 100 Adelaide Street West.

Student And Staff Fare Reductions

Students and members of the teaching staff at the University of Toronto are entitled to a reduced railway fare during the Christmas and New Year vacation period, December 21st to January 7th.

In a bulletin issued by the Canadian Passenger Association recently, it was announced that on surrender of a Canadian Passenger Association Teachers' and Pupils Vacation certificate the fare will be reduced to the current normal one-way fare and one-half for the round trip. The special forms may be obtained at all college and faculty offices.

Although the reduced fares will be in effect between all stations in Canada, with a very few exceptions, students and teachers travelling to the United States will be able to make use of the discount only from certain stations in Canada to certain border points in the United States.

Gone Are The Days

The ads tell us that there are only eighteen shopping days left until Christmas, but the campus seems to deny this story. We have had snow, but it has gone leaving us only three inches of mud as a reminder. In case you have forgotten what snow looks like, here is a picture of some.

Selling Subscriptions For Torontonensis

Subscriptions for Torontonensis, the Varsity yearbook, went on sale yesterday. If paid before December 15, they will cost $3.00; after that they will cost $3.50. Subscription forms can be obtained at the Women's S.A.C. office, Room 62, U.C., or the S.A.C. at Hart House.

Torontonensis has developed from a strictly graduate magazine to one of interest to all years. Walt Mackenzie, this year's editor, is continuing the policy of making 'Nensis attractive to all students.

While pictures of grads will still be in the yearbook, there will be less stress placed on them. Pictures of college activities will accompany them. Contributions of pictures of informal campus scenes, football games, etc., will be welcomed by the staff. Because of these changes more yearbooks were sold last year, and it is to be expected that the response will be even greater this year.

Help is still needed to put Torontonensis out. The office at 119 St. George St. is open every afternoon. A last appeal for any remaining biography cards is made.

UC Debate Today On Last Election

The large Conservative majority in the present Ontario legislature has provided the topic for the debate at the University College debating parliament today at 4:00 p.m. in the Junior Common Room. Murray Chusid, II UC, and Cynthia Olsen, III UC, will be the speakers for the government while Grant Gibson, I UC, and Jean Fox, I UC, will oppose the resolution that the party system as exemplified in Canada and particularly in the recent Ontario election, leads to dictatorship.

To be an effective instrument of government, Miss Olsen said yesterday, the party system requires the effective criticism which can only be provided by an integrated and strong opposition party. Where the government is virtually unopposed, she said, it is able to use its authority to override the wishes of the majority of the people. She concluded that the strength and freedom of a democracy lies in the balance of power in its government.

Gibson, expressing an opposing view, said if the speakers for the government confine their remarks to facts as proven in past experience, their position seems rather precarious. He added that Canadian history so far has not shown nor produced any political dictators.

The second speaker for the opposition, Jean Fox, felt that as the people of Canada have the freedom to elect that party which they believe to be best and as they are constitutionally guaranteed that right, it would be impossible for democracy to degenerate into dictatorship in this country.

The political parties of Canada according to Murray Chusid, have outlived their usefulness, as vigorous expressions of any real blocks of political feeling in this country. He felt that the results of such pseudo-politics are apathy at the polls, minority governments, meaningless majorities, and all too powerful cabinets.

Chusid said that the government is dissociated from the people and shamefully gives us a normally unthinkable Kurt Meyer incident and a self-defeating tobacco tax in Ottawa, and in Ontario our agricultural minister decides after the election to support not milk subsidies, but milk price increases.

Prof. Strakhovsky To Talk Thursday On Russian Policy

"Soviet Russia's Foreign Policy" is the subject of an address to be given by Prof. Leonid Strakhovsky, a visiting professor in the Dept. of Slavic Studies, at the Modern History Club meeting on Thursday evening at the Women's Union.

Prof. Strakhovsky is one of the foremost authorities on Russian history and literature. He was born in Russia at Orenburg, in 1898, and received his education at the Alexander Lyceum at St. Petersburg from 1913 to 1917. He then went abroad to continue his studies in Belgium, and from there came to the United States for further graduate work at Georgetown University. In 1934 he became an American citizen.

Prof. Strakhovsky joined the Faculty of the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University, and later was on the staff of the University of Maryland. From 1943 to 1948 he lectured at Harvard University. During the war he worked with the Army Map Service. He came to the University of Toronto as a visiting professor for the 1950-51 session, and has continued on for this session. This summer he lectured at the Harvard University Summer School.

In 1946-47 Prof. Strakhovsky was the Managing Editor of the "American and Slavic and East European Review." He has written many books on Slavic and Russian history and literature, as well as numerous articles and reviews.

Prof. Strakhovsky's outstanding work in his field has been recognized with many awards and honours from such countries as Belgium, Yugoslavia, and Rumania. He has travelled widely over Western and Central Europe.

UN Club's Rapid Rise — CBC Talk

The University of Toronto branch of the United Nations Clubs will be described by Michael Hind-Smith, Grad. Studies, at 10:35 a.m. today over CBL and the trans-Canada network of the CBC when he is interviewed by Jane Weston, a CBC commentator. Hind-Smith will outline the rapid growth of the campus U.N. Club from a group of twenty students in October to the 100 members in the model Security Council meeting tomorrow night at 8 p.m. in the Women's Union, 79 St. George Street.

The U.N. Club will show three films at 12:30 p.m. in the debates room of Hart House and at 1:15 p.m. in Room 252 in the Mechanical Building, according to publicity director Bud Trivett.

The films will tell the story of the U.N.'s fight against narcotics and epidemics in founding the new state of Libya. Trivett said that a large number of engineers had shown an interest in the films and that the showing in the Mechanical Building was for those with 12 o'clock lectures and for co-eds.

Magdalene Singers

The coming of St. Mary Magdalene Singers to Hart House early in December, to give the last Sunday evening concert before Christmas, is a tradition. It has happened for so many years that an undergraduate cannot remember when it was not so.

Unlike some traditions, this one is upheld annually with as fresh and invigorating an event as though it were not traditional at all. In fact, the performance given last Sunday evening by the St. Mary Magdalene Singers would stand on its own merits anywhere, quite irrespective of events in the past or future.

This group of about twenty singers under the direction of Dr. Healy Willan sings entirely without accompaniment. Their programs in Hart House always consist only of church and Christmas music. Yet, such is the variety of music in their limited sphere that one never hears complaints of boredom, and the size of their audiences testifies to their popularity.

As usual Sunday's program began with a Bach chorale, followed by a group of examples of polyphonic church music, this time from sixteenth-century England. Dr. Willan's own "Gloria Deo", written in the same spirit, concluded the group. All this music is unaccompanied in the truest sense—no parts are subordinated to any others, and all are of equal interest. The St. Mary Magdalene Singers were at their best here. They obviously enjoy the interweaving of the numerous voices, and sing with a robust, straightforward tone, and sharp, incisive attacks.

The Christmas music which followed was of an altogether different sort. Almost all the songs were sung in a very hushed, subdued way and in a good many, the entire choir was reduced to the function of an accompanying instrument for a soloist or group of solo voices.

This group included a number of modern arrangements and compositions, including several by Dr. Willan himself. As usual, his arrangement of "The Twelve Days of Christmas" brought a storm of applause, and had to be repeated. This fascinating work thoroughly deserves to be listened to a second time. The way in which the humming accompaniment accents different parts of the melody in each verse, and in which the shifting chords shed strange harmonic lights on the regular, diatonic, old tune, make this the sort of thing one can readily listen to without tiring of it.

The annual ushering-in of the Christmas season on the campus by the St. Mary Magdalene Singers is a welcome event. Hackneyed music is never admitted on the program, and the performance is always perfection itself. No one could ask for more.

By FRANK MORITSUGU

The only people who should go to see TWO TICKETS TO BROADWAY are Tony Martin fans and Blue and White Society officials. This new Howard Hughes musical (at the Imperial) has a lot of Tony Martin tenor to offer, and in two scenes Tweepers are used by a high school rah-rah bunch with assurance and enthusiasm. Otherwise the film is a dud.

Tony Martin is the Big Star of the film and he is seen a lot. Most of the time he is singing (There's No Tomorrow, Manhattan, and some other songs). When he has to speak lines, Martin does so as if he were in a hurry to get around to singing again.

But there is one number, Chief Hole-in-the-Ground, which is great fun even if there is no novelty. Here Martin shows a comic sense that should be developed. At other times, Martin is unintentionally funny, when he is being very serious and very tenorish.

Janet Leigh is the chief girl and she is a pretty thin-faced young thing. She isn't much of a singer (she doesn't do too much) and not much of a dancer (she does quite a bit).

Others in the cast include Ann Miller who can tap dance faster than anybody and has unbelievably long legs, Gloria DeHaven who has a pert charm but obviously got into the picture because Eddie Bracken needed a girl friend, Barbara Lawrence who has even longer legs than Ann Miller, and Bracken who used to have better material 6-7 years ago and didn't have to fall over so many stools and chairs to get laughs. The three girls, along with Miss Leigh make up the dancing-singing chorus for the tenor, and in the Indian number are quite funny.

But the trouble with TWO TICKETS TO BROADWAY is not the cast. They all try pretty hard, but ths script has as much imagination as a tub of lard. The love story between Martin and Leigh was so sketchy it didn't reach the stage of simplicity that traditional musical romances do. The final number is a dull eternity in blue ballad. Miss Leigh dances about in a close-fitting nightgownish effort which reminded us of Rita Hayworth's choice of dancing costumes. And all the while Martin sings about whether she is a dream or not. It's more fun watching Martin although Miss Leigh is more beautiful because he moves back and forward as if he's sitting on an observation car platform.

But it is in the Pagliacci number that things reach some kind of climax. It is a clash of light and Technicolor and the electrician seems to go mad. Every color and shade in the Technicolor spectrum flashes on Martin in his clown costume. There are moments when Martin looks like Mario Lantz looking like Caruso. Other moments, when Martin looks like some other departed spirit.

Vienna Night At The Pops

Friday's Pop Concert, "Vienna Night", paid tribute to some of Vienna's distinguished composers. The orchestra, conducted by Paul Scherman, showed discernment in its interpretations, and was characterized at all times by restraint. The latter quality, while well suited to the classic compositions of Haydn and Mozart, failed at times to do justice to Strauss' more flamboyant style. This defect was apparent in practically all the earlier works on the program, including Evelyn Gould's rather tentative renderings of two Mozart arias.

Artistic highlights of the evening were von Suppe's overture "Poet and Peasant", Strauss' "Perpetual Motion" and his overture to "The Bat". Miss Gould, accompanied by Leo Barkin at the piano, distinguished herself in a group of four folk-songs which called forth her discriminating taste and were enthusiastically received by her audience.

A wide range of compositions and the disciplined conducting of Mr. Scherman made this a most enjoyable evening.

Ryerson-McMaster Exchange

Toronto (Exchange) — Ryerson students may be able to go to McMaster University for BA degrees, The Ryersonian, Ryerson Institute of Technology publication, announced recently. The Ryerson graduate is said to have as much technical knowledge in many subjects such as electronics as the McMaster student but lacks the arts influence and the degree. It is felt that, by an equating between Ryerson subjects and McMaster electives, the Ryerson student with senior matriculation could receive his degree after one fall academic session, reports The Ryersonian.

This system could be offered for those in the Journalism course at Ryerson. McMaster's Dean Armstong does not favor a Journalism course at the University, feeling those interested can learn enough through student publications and broadening arts courses such as History and English.

Ave Atque Vale

By ANNE CARNWATH
Book Review Editor

Every now and again it's fun to take a plunge into the big-time and pretend that you are out there in front with Edmund Wilson or Anthony West or J. Donald Adams. It takes a lot out of a person because in order to do it you have to have spark and nerve AND imagination. It takes imagination most of all because you have to be able to write as if you'd just been down the street and taken the literary pulse of the nation for the reader's benefit. You have to assume that there are at least a thousand uncompromising writers living across the country whose waking thoughts are devoted to the craft of writing and to whose "attitude" you can refer with the utmost confidence that they are out there nodding in silent affirmation to everything you write about them.

Some days you can make these assumptions more easily than you can on others. And, too, there are bright fiery days when you outdo yourself. You even challenge the assumptions of the big-time!

For instance, when J. Donald Adams complains that "in a country that is going soft, too many excuses are being made for the current difficulties of the writer," and that writers need to re-discover the values set forth by Faulkner in his Nobel Prize Speech last year, then we dare to challenge Mr. Adams' attitude to the younger writers of today.

Faulkner advised young writers to return to themes which involve the conflict of human hearts, to describe love, compassion, pity and dignity as it is found in the lives of human beings. Adams feels that courage and guts on the part of the writer are all that is needed to accomplish this re-discovery of the human heart.

We wonder first if it is possible to recover old values, and if courage or guts or anything can make meaningful parts of human experience that now fail to get any response from us. Adams can splutter that his reaction to writers who whine about "the problem of ordering and making dramatically meaningful the experience of a valueless time" is not printable, but the fact remains that any serious writer today has to realize that the situations which stimulated an immediate reaction in his parents only arouse an uninterested "so what?" from his contemporaries.

However, our bright and fiery today didn't arrive with an impetus strong enough to lead us on to formulate a way out for that uncompromising thousand. We raised our objection to Adams and, well it's a funny thing but sometimes our bright fiery days go all to pieces just before high noon.

Sociologist Sees Problems Of American Middle Class

"White Collar," by C. Wright Mills; Oxford Press, 1951, $5.75.

Readers who found the terrifying impact of George Orwell's 1948 or Gheorghius' 25th Hour somewhat modified by the consideration that these two creations were, after all fiction portrayals of future events, will be able to derive no such comfort from C. Wright Mills' White Collar.

Here in 350 pages is the history of the rise of the New American Middle Class which culminates, not in warnings about their inevitable future, but a sad statement of their immediate predicament. "As a group," Mills writes, "they do not threaten anyone; as individuals, they do not practice an independent way of life . . . they may be politically irritable, but they have no political passion. They are a chorus, too afraid to grumble, too hysterical in their applause . . . and on the political market place of American society, they are up for sale but so far nobody has made a serious bid."

The life histories of managers, salesmen, personnel officials, clerks, promotors and stenographers are all presented as the victims of a shift from a propertied old middle class to a system where machines have taken over most of the "doing" and the mass of men are left with jobs which involve the selling of their personalities. "'Getting ahead' becomes a continual selling job, whether you are seeking a new position or are aiming at the job just ahead. In either case you must sell yourself and keep on selling. Become genuinely interested in other people . . . make the other person feel important . . . I am talking,' concludes Dale Carnegie, 'about a new way of life.' "

This new way of life, Mills points out, has recently lost favor in the eyes of the white collar man who has found the going too tough, or the returns too dissatisfying. Quoting from James M. Cain's The Moth, "I had everything I ever wanted, a dream job, big dough, a Packard that just floated, a woman . . . and yet if it was what I had been thirsty for, it never came clear, but had bubbles in it like champagne. I felt like life was nothing but one long string of Christmas afternoons . . . I felt big and cruel and cold, a thick heavy-shouldered bunch of whatever it takes to be a success."—Mills traces the gradual shift of sentiment on the part of the white collar man which accounts for the new literature of resignation which a Reader's Digest or Peace of Mind philosophy exemplifies. The Horatio Alger of yesterday has become the Willie Loman of today.

For university students Mills' description of the predicament of the intellectual and the prospects for graduates at present will be an unpleasant reminder of much that students are familiar with but try to ignore. If the intellectual wishes to find a place for himself in present society he must become either the the idea man of some large corporation writing memoranda instead of books, produce symbols to win the consumer over to a special product, or write in the knowledge that technical, economic and social structures owned and operated by others will have the final say about what the public shall read.

"The basis of an artist's integrity can be gained or renewed only by activity, including communication in which there is a medium of repression. When a man sells the lies of others, he is selling himself. To sell himself is to turn himself into a commodity whose nominal worth is determined by what the market will offer," Mills writes. The intellect who remains free feels that only through politics could he fight these forces, and yet it is practically impossible for him to 'crash' into politics. He is forced to realize his own impotence, and sinks back into an existential outlook which signifies his confession of defeat. There is nothing he can do.

Roman Literature For Wider Public

The Portable Roman Reader, ed. Basil Davenport, MacMillang, 1951, $2.95.

The Viking Portable Readers continue to flow from the presses at a steady rate. Three of their latest titles are: S. T. Coleridge, Cervantes and the book under consideration in this review, The Roman Reader.

Editor Basil Davenport has broken this new 650-page embodiment of Roman culture into four main sections corresponding to the rise and fall of the Roman civilization. Representative literature expressing the spirit of The Age of Cicero, The Augustan Age, The Silver Age and the final decline of Roman power is here presented for the general reader. With Horace's maxim in mind, 'that silver buried in the ground has no color' editor Davenport has made readability the primary criterion in making his choice of selections.

In his selections from Plautus and Terence he has given us a complete play from each author rather than several stellar passages. This policy naturally could not be maintained throughout the collection and The Roman Reader, like any anthology leaves the reader with the feeling that he never gets a complete picture of any one thing. The fact that all of The Roman Reader is in translation adds to this first frustration.

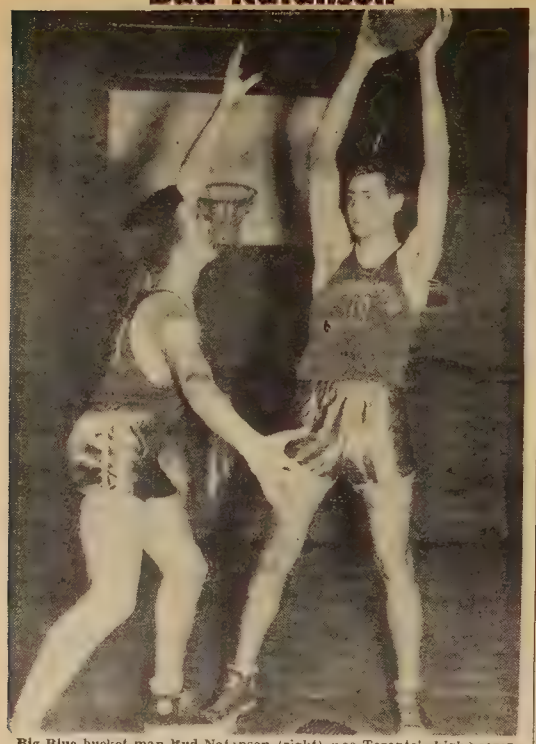
On the whole however, the attempt of The Roman Reader to present Roman culture to a wider audience than it generally reaches is far better than leaving it for only the academics and dilettantes. And the editors of the Viking Portables have once more succeeded in putting out the best one-volume anthology on the market which fails within the price range of everyone.

Dream Language Universal: Fromm

"The Forgotten Language," by Erich Fromm; Clarke Irwin, 1951, $4.00.

"I believe that the understanding of symbolic language should be taught in our high schools and colleges just as other 'foreign languages' are a part of their curriculum," writes Dr. Fromm in the Foreword to his latest book, The Forgotten Language. The symbolic language is described as a language in which intensity and association, not time and space are the ruling categories, and these categories come into their own when sleep seals us off from the demands of the space and time categories. The land of dreams becomes the homeground of symbolic language and from there it is only a matter of everyone agreeing upon the interpretation of dream incident in terms of this language. This language, Fromm contends, is the one universal language.

For Freud, dreams were the fulfillment of irrational passions repressed during our waking life; for Jung dreams were revelations of unconscious wisdom, and for Fromm they are an expression of both our irrational strivings and our highest aspirations. To this reviewer it seems that each of these theories would base their interpretation of the symbolic action in dreams on what they believed to be the function of dreams in human experience. Fromm's re-working of the Oedipus myth, the fairy tale within the fairy tale which he finds in Red Riding Hood's adventures, and his interpretation of Kafka's Trial can all be challenged by anyone who cares to derive different meanings from the symbols involved in these three tales.



For this reason we object to Dr. Fromm's hypothesis that a symbolic language that can be taught is possible. For once symbols are subjected to a rigid system of meanings such as would be involved in the formulation of a symbolic language just like "other foreign languages," then these symbols lose their essential charm.

Knowledge For Less

Thrift Books — R. J. Saunders 1951, 25c.

In a brave attempt to issue informative books at the same price as drugstore literature, a new English series called Thrift Books has been published recently. Printed on rough paper with thin cardboard covers, Thrift Books will appeal to the Penguin customer who has decided that 40c is too much to pay for his weekly plunge into informative literature. Titles now available in the Thrift series cover a variety of topics such as A Signpost to Mathematics, The Glands Inside Us, A Short History of Our Time, and Finding Out About Atomic Energy.

Speaking Of Sport

By MAL CRAWFORD

Now is about the time when we ought to promise our readers that we won't write any more columns about football this year, otherwise they will start thinking that it's the only thing we know anything about. Of course, they'll be right — both of them. (All the others realized long ago that we don't know anything about football either.) But enough of this bragging.

Probably there has never been a more striking demonstration of what a team can do with just two running plays and two pass plays than Vic's win Friday over the luckless UC Redmen. A quick-opener by Frazor between guard and tackle, and a pitchout to Bond was just about as far as Vic's ground repertoire went, but together with a pass play in which three men flooded the flat zone and another in which two men went out on each side of the field, these were enough to ruin the Redmen.

Fick's idea of having the backs start in motion, either forward or lateral, half a count or so before the ball is snapped, is one which we are surprised other coaches have not picked up or thought up for themselves. Frazor had an extra two steps to gather momentum before he hit the line, and his quick opener hit much faster than the usual T quick-opener as a result. He was usually through the hole before the UC linemen knew he was there. As well as giving the back more momentum, it makes it easier for the linemen, who don't have to hold their blocks. It also makes the end run break faster; Lodge's steps had to be quicker and his pitch-out longer than is generally the case. How Vic's linemen managed to get out in front of the ball-carrier on the sweep, we can't imagine; they must all be ten second men. But we can't think of any other explanation for their small offensive line (averages about 170 pounds, according to football "expert", Brad Colbert) getting the backs away for long gains against a defence like UC's.

Lorne Lodge, who has played four years of solid football for Victoria as quarterback, played the last game of his career, as he graduates in Commerce and Finance this year. It was probably his best game, too. Up until Friday he had the reputation of being a good play-caller and ball-handler, a fair runner, and the best defensive back in the league, but nobody figured on him much as a passer. Apparently UC didn't, until the end of the first half, because they refused to cover the receivers in the flat. That flat pass play in which one man draws the tertiary deep, another draws the secondary out in the flat, and a third man catches the ball in the space thus vacated, we consider the most effective pass play there is, if you're willing to risk the disastrous consequences of an interception out there in the clear. Anyway, Lodge was throwing them, and making them connect. They scored three touchdowns off it, and UC didn't intercept any.

Lodge, who collected his second knee brace this year, is one of those good if not sensational ball players who are content to play in the rather glamorless inter-faculty league, muddy back campus and all. If he had gone up to the Intermediates in say his second year (and he likely could have made it that year), he probably would have had a stint with the Blues by now.

Trinity Soccerites Upset SPS In Replay Of Semi-Final Game

Yesterday afternoon the Trinity "A" soccer team defeated the Senior SPS team by a 1-0 score in the semi-final of the Arts Faculty Cup. The Trinity squad thus advanced to the final of the Cup, and will meet the unbeaten U.C. team on the Back Campus at noon on Wednesday.

Early this season the Trinity squad was reported to be playing like a machine that needed oiling. The wear and tear of the season seemed to be the lubricant the team needed, and yesterday Trinity proved that once more it was the team to beat on the campus. The game played yesterday was the second in a row between the two teams, as Skule won what was supposed to be the semi-final last Wednesday. The Intramural Standing Committee, however, reviewed the game, and decided that the referee had acted in contravention of the rules in awarding the decisive penalty kick to the SPS team. The Committee ordered the game annulled, and the semi-final to be played yesterday.

The game was played before the largest crowd to watch a soccer game on the campus this year. It well deserved the audience. Field and playing conditions were as ideal as could be expected at this time of year, and the standard of play of both teams was very high.

During the first half of the game play was fairly evenly divided. Trinity had the edge on territorial play, but the quick Red and Black forward line never seemed to look as dangerous, in the early stages, as the Skulemen. Trinity, however, did have some good shots on goal, which were well handled by Tommy Andresen in the Skule nets. SPS were foiled in the Trinity area by the fine playing of Rick Gaunt, Hugh Wareham and Dennis Snowdon, and John Pettigrew in the Trinity goal handled only one shot in the half.

The game was quite rough at times, and more than one player had the referee issuing warnings to him. At one time the Skule goalkeeper ran out of his goal to charge a Trinity forward who had been checking him closely all afternoon. Skule missed a good chance when a corner-kick skimmed over the bar. Shortly after, a nice run up the middle by Doug Andison of Trinity almost resulted in a goal, as Andison crossed to Hugh Rowan who put the ball just outside the post. The first half ended without any score.

At the start of the second period Trinity took over the play more and more. Superior conditioning began to pay off, and it seemed a matter of time until Trinity scored. Five minutes from the start of the period Trinity was on the front of victory. A corner kick from Skule Cater curved into the goalmouth, and Andresen was lucky to stop the well-placed ball. Hal Macdonald, Trinity's left-half, moved in on the goal and took a strong shot which Andresen saved brilliantly.

A few minutes later Trinity ran the scoresheet. Murray Jackson on the left wing was playing his best game of the season, and sent across a lovely pass to Hugh Rowan, who blasted one that had Andresen well beaten. Trinity seemed to take extra spirit from their lead, while the Engineers play began to look a bit desperate.

The rest of the game was scoreless. Both teams tried extremely hard, but failed to score. Tim Clarkson and Stan Cater of Trinity missed good chacnes, while Tony Seljac of Skule shot a clear chance well outside the goal. Both goalkeepers played well, although Pettigrew often had little to do for five or ten minutes on end. Trinity was the better team without a doubt, and outplayed and outpassed the Engineers. Doug Andison on the right wing, and Rick Gaunt at centre-half sparked the Trinity play. Tony Seljac and Per Berg-Johansen turned in a spectacular game for the Engineers.

Trinity and U.C. meet on Wednesday to determine the winner of the Arts Faculty Cup for 1951. Although U.C. has beaten the Buttery Boys once this season, the outcome of Wednesday's game should be in doubt until the final whistle, and the game promises to be the best played on the campus this year.

McGill Beaten By 16-3 Count In Water Polo

The University of Toronto water polo team trounced the McGill Redmen 16-3 on Saturday, to take a commanding lead in the Intercollegiate championship series. There are only two teams entered in the Intercollegiate loop and the title is decided by a home and home total goals to count series. The second tilt will be played next Saturday at Montreal.

In the game last weekend, the Blues completely outplayed their opposition in every department. Norm Mortimer was the individual star as he scored no less than eleven times. Bill McIlroy and John Bates were standouts on the forward line although they only managed one tally apiece.

Hart Robbins, rookie goalie, turned in a stellar performance and he had good protection in front of him, with defencemen Phil Rosen and Bob MacKenzie turning in particularly good games.

The majority of the contest was played in the McGill end as the hard checking Blue squad, led by rover Larry Rosen bottled up the Redmen and kept them on the defensive.

The Varsity squad started off slowly, and were ahead 3-1 by quarter time. They added three second session, and made it 10-2 in more unanswered tallies in the the third quarter. The McGill tallies were scored by Humphry, Novick and Berry.

Varsity vs. Albion At First A-Night

The first Athletic Night of the 1951-52 season will be held this Saturday night in Hart House. A-nights, which combine a sports with a social evening have been very popular in the past few seasons, and there will be a series of them again this year.

Athletic nights were introduced as a wartime measure when Intercollegiate sports were suspended. Representative teams were formed from the University and they competed with local teams. These contests, combined with Intramural events made up the sports section of the nights. The proceeds from these events were used for war work.

These nights were so popular that at the end of the war, when Intercollegiate activity was restored, the Saturday evening affairs were continued as a setting for Varsity home games.

The sports events usually last until about ten o'clock after which there is square and round dancing, ping pong and other games. But it is not primarily a social evening, and no one is admitted to the House after the end of the athletic events.

The feature event of this week's Athletic night will be the basketball contest between the Senior Blues and Albion College. This will be the first home appearance of the Varsity squad, which dropped three tilts last weekend on a tour of upper New York State. As a preliminary to this, the Baby Blue team will tackle the Ryerson Institute of Technology basketball team in an exhibition tilt. The first game will start at 7:00, and the senior tilt will get underway at 8:30.

In the upper gym the finals of the junior Intramural boxing and wrestling tournaments will be run off. There will be a full card in both events, and some promising fighters will be on hand. The mitt events will be run first, commencing at 7:00 and the wrestling will follow immediately after.

In the pool, there will be the finals of the Intramural swimming meets. Each college and faculty have been running their own meets all fall, and the best competitors of each will meet on Saturday night.

Tickets for this Athletic night will go on sale at 6:30 Saturday evening at the Athletic Wing box office. The ducats are 50c apiece, and 1,400 will be available.

Interfac All-Stars

This year's Mulock Cup champions, Victoria College placed four men on the Intramural football all-star team. The dream-team, as selected by the sports staff of The Varsity has two Vicsters in the backfield, and two on the line. The University College crew have three men on the team, and Sr. SPS are represented by two of their players.

The Scarlet and Gold placed three more on the second squad, as did the Senior SPS squad.

Only repeaters on the first team from last year are John Riddell of Senior SPS and Mal Frazor of Vic. Doug Andison, this year's quarter was on the second team last year.

Following the discussion, refreshments will be served. All students are welcome and urged to attend.

Frames, housings, bearings, gears of machine tools are made of nickel alloys—stronger, tougher, more wear-resistant.

Hammers, wrenches, screw drivers and other hand tools are made of nickel steel to provide unusual strength, toughness and hardness with minimum weight.

Better tools because of NICKEL

Hundreds of everyday uses for Nickel have been developed by the Nickel industry through a planned program of research. Today a large share of Canada's Nickel production is being diverted from peacetime uses into channels for preparedness. So the Nickel mine facilities, greatly expanded over the past decade, are again being operated at peak capacity. There is actually more Nickel now being delivered by Canada to the free world than in any peacetime year.

Asians And Us

In answer to the crying need of Asia, the University of Toronto last year sent $10,330 worth of equipment to the Asian Universities of Sindh, Jamia and Delhi.

The principles of liberty and equality behind the campaign were those over which some of the world's best blood has been spilled time and again. This year, a similar campaign, Student Help for Asian Relief and Education, has been inaugurated for principles just as sound.

We and the Asians live in One World. We are members of a single race—the human race. The ideals of democracy stress equality of opportunity. Such ideals stretch beyond national boundaries—or should. Last year All-Varsity Aid campaign shows that students here were concerned about what is happening in Asia.

If the reception for this year's SHARE campaign is less warm, are we to conclude that Toronto's concern over the unfortunate millions has suddenly stopped dead? That we are going to restrict our ideals to within our own boundaries, to what is immediately before our eyes? Perhaps it is just that our memories need refreshing. One hundred people still drop dead every day on the streets of Calcutta.

This One World is made up of haves and the have-nots. We are fortunate in belonging to the haves. But our comfort is an uneasy one. And we grow increasingly nervous about conditions in the east, and what they may lead to.

Our interest in the campaign lies partly in donating $11,000. That is a lot of money for 11,000 students to give. But the goal, though arbitrarily set, is an admirable one. It makes us aware that there are 11,000 of us, and unless each one of us gives at least one dollar, the campaign will flop.

The SHARE campaign this year is being held in conjunction with the annual International Student Service campaign. Of the money raised, $1,100 will go to the ISS, according to the amount of ten cents per head which ISS requires from member universities. $1,500 will go towards scholarships for exchange students. Half of the remaining amount, less shipping costs, has already been allocated. Six Asian Universities have been chosen as recipients of the aid, largely on the basis of their need: Sindh and Dacca in Pakistan; Delhi and Assam in India; Thailand and Indonesia.

Those are the particulars. At an open meeting tonight at 7:00 p.m. in room 22 of the Mining Building, you will have a chance to find out more.

SHARE is our campaign, the baby of the University of Toronto. Therefore we should take an active interest in it. At tonight's open meeting we all have a chance to go and ask questions. We want our campaign run in the best possible way. This is our chance to find out if we think it is being run in the best way. It is probable that there is still room for improvement, and suggestions should come from us to make it really our campaign.

Charity should be more than just a means to a private end, more than a method to give us the warm glow of self-satisfaction. Charity should be an intelligent business; for that reason the donors must know what they are giving to.

Charity is not just aimless generosity to be tossed off as the good deed of the day. It must be more than that.

Mock Parliament Elections

Planks

As a preliminary to the forthcoming Mock Parliament Elections, The Varsity is printing the following planks from the platforms of the various campus political clubs participating in the Election. These are the official statements of these clubs. Today's statements cover world trade.

Conservative

When asked about world trade, most Conservatives would say that they were in favor of it. Traditionally, the Conservative Party favors strong Imperial Preference. We would support Imperial Preference as an integral part of Commonwealth co-operation. In this line we have lost much of British business because of currency inconvertibility. It is hoped that this problem may be solved in the near future.

Our trade with the United States is extremely large especially in an unfavorable direction. To combat this tendency, we must build up our industries and increase our population. It is impossible to count on US markets at present because of the recurring political pressure in that country. While we remain a country of 14 million we will always be subject to American ability to undersell us.

World Trade bulks large in Canada's economy. We must reduce our dependence upon world markets by increasing the home markets. We must make greater efforts to sell in the markets open to us, especially those of the Commonwealth.

Liberal

International Trade is Canada's life blood. The swifter it flows, the greater its increases, the freer it becomes and the healthier our nation will develop. Free trade is the old fashioned Liberal gospel. True, tariffs and the industries they maintain are here to stay, but we should develop our industries so that tariffs are regulatory, rather than prohibitive.

We disdain power bloc trading, preferring free individual bargaining. Still, government marketing is essential in many cases to protect our people in the modern world.

Canada cannot afford to disrupt World Trade with currency juggling. She has too much to lose. Rather she must strive unshakably toward world economy in a free market of one world.

CCF

The CCF believes that in a world of nations organized economies Canada must organize buying and selling of her main imports and exports under public boards, and take steps to regulate the flow of less important commodities by a system of licenses. By so doing she will be enabled to make the best trade agreements possible with foreign countries, and put a stop to the exploitation of both primary producer and ultimate consumer. Also, it would make possible the co-ordination of internal processing, transportation and marketing of farm products, and it would facilitate the establishment of stable prices for such export commodities.

It is generally agreed that Canada is dependent on external sources of supply for many of her essential requirements of raw materials and manufactured products. These she can obtain only by large exports of the goods she is best fitted to produce. Therefore the CCF also feels that the strangling of our export trade by insane protectionist policies must be brought to an end.

LPP

. . . Canada has cut herself off from the markets of the "Communist" countries for her manufactured goods and the means of production used for these are converted into armament production. That arms production provides jobs is a fallacy (unless the arms are used, the market will not endure) and Canada is now suffering trade difficulties.

Especially is this true of our trade with the US where we are forced to export raw materials and import manufactured commodities, thus preventing the development of our own manufacturing.

When 7,000 Windsor auto workers became jobless last August Canada had the opportunity to trade 50 million dollars worth of automobiles for Chinese cotton of similar value.

This she could not do because the St. Laurent government following Washington refuses to recognize the Peking government.

The LPP advocates trade between socialist and capitalist countries as one of the means to peace and to maintenance of our standard of living.

Flash—MUP (Mongolian University Press)

It was reported today through our usual unreliable sources, that Mongolian students have voted 9,000,000 to 1 (a Walyer Thomson fan) to make an unreciprocal tour of Canada. It is reported that they will cross the Pole by dog-sled and kayak, distributing pamphlets in the traditional Christmas colour — red, red, and more red, to Santa Claus and his helpers en route. Rumour has it that Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer is already lining up recruits to guide the tour.

One scholarship student to the University of Gobi, in central Mongolia, III Honor Propaganda, smiled toothlessly from beneath his hair, and grunted warmly of the incipient tour. "We the students of Lower Slobbovia, I mean Upper Mongolia, we're always getting mixed up, feel that the highlight of the tour will be our stay in Toronto. Even here, through the great undergraduate unbourgeois daily — the "Collegeski" we have heard how dull it is culturally, how dusty and windswept — especially on that detestable bourgeois holiday, Sunday. The red lights that are used to confuse traffic will remind us of our glorious cause. We know we will find much in common between the arch-Communist city Toronto, and our own beloved bare desert.

Untranslated, his speech in the guttural Mongolian tongue ran thus — "Ughski, Toronto, ughski."

A yak-coated, blubber-chewing co-ed coyly harpooned a seal, skinned it, and started to make a blouse. "This is part of our course," she explained. "I'm in General Hunting. We feel badly that we can't be there when the Brading Trophy Debates are going to be held. We used to have an inter-desert debate sponsored by the international yak milk company, but some of our comrades felt that the company had bourgeois connections — their product is white you know — Now it's sponsored by Stalin Brothers Limited (Joe and Ivan to their friends) — makers of the most proletarian vodka ever.

Unfortunately this interview was stopped by a sandstorm, in which our reporter was killed. However, next week from my headquarters in beautiful SCLIRPB (the capital city of Outer Mongolia) I will tell you how the plans have progressed.

The West Responds

Editor, The Varsity:

On page one of your issue of November 22, you carry a news story under the heading, "West Plans Russian Visit\Swap". I do not know where you obtained the information for this story since it is not datelined. However I would like to correct an error implied in the lead paragraph.

You state: "The University of Saskatchewan unanimously defeated the principle of the Soviet students visiting Canada at a meeting of its student council last week." This is simply not true as would be evident to anyone carefully reading the actual motion passed by the student council. Saskatchewan students are certainly not opposed to Soviet students visiting Canada at any time and under any conditions.

The motion passed by the Saskatchewan SRC merely ratified the decision of a particular organization not to invite a group of Soviet students to Canada this year. It has nothing to say on the general principle of student exchange or visits of Russian students.

In my opinion much of the confusion regarding this particular proposal in your publication and elsewhere, could have been avoided by a recognition that approval of the principle of student exchanges and tours does not necessarily mean that every such tour or exchange is practical or desirable.

I hope you can correct the unfortunate effect of the above-mentioned news story, either by publishing this letter or by a newspaper correction.

Don McGillivray,
CUP Editor,
The Sheaf.

Ed. note: The story printed in The Varsity to which Mr. McGillivray refers was based on a report received from the University of Saskatchewan from the International Affairs Commission of the National Federation of Canadian University Students. It read in part:

"The Students' Representative Council of the University of Saskatchewan considered the Laval proposal for a Russian student exchange . . . The result was unanimous approval of a motion which reads as follows: 'The Students' Representative Council of the University of Saskatchewan ratifies the NFCUS decision not to invite a group of Russian students to visit Canada on an exchange basis at the present time.'"

The reasons cited for this decision were its impracticability, its effect on NFCUS, and distrust of the motives of the Russian Government and government-controlled student group.

SEES SHARE A WELCOME

Hung Up

esterday, many students walked across the camus and saw a long cord running across the camus in front of the Medical Building. On it all ey saw was a mess of cloth with paint smeared ll over it and four bunches of balloons. The Unit-d Nations Club had strung it up as publicity for their meeting tonight. After going to considerable trouble to make a sign that would stand the weather, all efforts were foiled when the rain came. In the picture above we see the sign as it was earlier in the day.

Aid Greets Asians Said Just Entering Stud. Community

Solidarity in the World University Community is one of the things that can keep this world sane, a former international chairman of the International Student Service (ISS) Robert MacKie, remarked last night at the special meeting of the External Affair Committee, concerning the SHARE campaign.

"By sending help to Asia we have a chance to show the Asian students that we welcome them into the World Student University Community," he continued. Mr. MacKie added, "When we keep things to ourselves, this private knowledge can only be used for such things as war."

"Canada is in an exceptionally important position," Mr. MacKie went on. "The English are poor, and when they give help to India and Pakistan, people say it is about time; when the Americans help, people ask why; but when Canadians give, they can startle other people into doing the same thing." There is nothing like a bit of encouragement, he added. Give them a start and national government and student effort will take the thing through, he said.

John Coleman, National ISS chairman said, "Diplomats may make the headlines, the students will make the friendships". The moment the student gives, he continued, he should be made to understand the real meaning of his gift.

Bob Johnson, Trinity, a member of the SHARE Executive Committee reported that SHARE already has about $900 in its coffers. Of this amount $475 were received from the Vic Informal, where cigarettes, soft drinks, doughnuts and sandwiches were sold for SHARE. St. Mike's is running a carnival this Thursday, from which all proceeds will go to SHARE.

According to Johnson, displays will be prepared by Eaton's for the campaign from January 14-18. The executive committee plans to put up on the first day of the campaign, a large thermometer on the front campus showing the receipts.

In the week previous to the campaign the University of Toronto Film Society will show films each noon in Hart House or the Museum. The committee plans to have some well-known speaker for the campaign week, but as yet no one has accepted an invitation to speak.

Club Sign Is Ruined With Rain

A publicity stunt which involved among other things climbing trees and filling balloons with helium, flopped yesterday — all because of the weather.

The UN Club prepared a sign Monday to be hung up over the front campus, strung between the trees in front of the Engineering Building and those at the north-east corner. The sign read "UN Club Security Council, Wednesday, 8 p.m.". To attract attention, the club added helium-filled balloons.

In the early hours of yesterday morning, the publicity men climbed the trees, and using 200 yards of cord, strung up the sign. Then came the rain and wind.

First of all, the rain washed out all the starch in the cloth sign. This left the sign so limp that the wind wrapped it around itself many times.

"The whole trouble was the paint," said Bud Trivett, Law, who engineered the scheme. "I went all over town to get waterproof paint, but when I did get some, the stuff was washable as well. When the sign started blowing around, the paint didn't run, but got all smeared, just as if it was being washed."

The result: instead of the brilliant sign Trivett had hoped for, students strolling across the front campus at noon saw a sodden, smeared piece of cotton.

For those who couldn't read it, the sign said, "UN Club, Security Council, Wednesday, 8 p.m."

Canada Parliament System Leads To No Dictatorship

he resolution that "The party em, as exemplified in Canada particularly in the recent Ono elections, leads to dictator-
" was defeated by a vote of 8
24 in the University College
ment Debate yesterday.

The first speaker for the af-
mative, Murray Chusid, II UC, that in the Ontario Parlia-
the opposition was weak —
fa e and ludicrous idea of opition". The leader of the opition was not elected into the se. "And," he said, "it is a tter of importance that opposileaders get into the House".
stated that most of the people
o voted in the recent elections voted against the present govern-
nt. He predicted that, as a re-lt, "a split within the party is nd to occur". This, he continued, ds to dictatorship. He cited the an o and Hitler regimes as ex-mples. He went on to say that thout an effective majority, a vernment was not afraid to go ad and do what it liked.

The first speaker for the opposi-
Jean Fox, I UC, stated that people have shown confidence
e Conservatives by electing
, and that they can throw
m out in the next election ough the powers granted them universal franchise and the ret ballot. To establish a dic-or-ship by amending the Constion, she said, a party would to be in power in the Do-ion government, and also in one of the provincial governments. Britain would never pass such an amendment, she added. The judiciary too, continued Miss Fox, protects our rights, as in the case of the Padlock Act of Quebec, when the courts ruled that the Act restricted freedom. She said that countries such as Germany do not have the tradition we have.

Cynthia Olsen, III UC, was the second speaker on the affirmative. She said that in a two-party system, the government did its best for the people, because it was afraid that otherwise the opposition would be put in power in the next election. In a three-party system, however, the opposition is split, and therefore weak, said Miss Olsen. She also stated that the Conservatives were put in power by people holding vested interests, and that it looks after the interests of these people.

The second speaker for the opposition was Grant Gibson, I UC. Mr. Gibson argued that it is the people of Ontario who are the opposition of the government, and that they are "reasonably intelligent". He mentioned the possibility of a dictatorship being established in South America, "but," said he, "you can't compare Latins with people in Canada." He explained that they were different in temperament — more explosive than we are. He concluded by saying, "In Ontario, Frost Conditions are general, but it's a Frost that pleases, not that freezes".

International Ball

Cosmopolitan Toronto

Representative students from forty different national groups on the campus are combining their efforts to produce the annual International Ball. This colorful affair was initiated about four years ago by the International Students' Organization.

Last year, the decorations were so original and colorful that they were praised by the Warden of Hart House, Nicholas Ignatieff, and by the Honourable Vincent Price of the UN. Although the International Ball was organized last year by a committee which was made up of representatives from each national club on the campus, the annual event will be sponsored by the Students' Administrative Council this year.

Members of the ISO come from all over the world — from such countries as Poland, Estonia, Italy, France, India, Pakistan, Nigeria, and the West Indies and many will be wearing their national dress at the Ball on Friday evening. Each national club on the campus will be responsible for one phase of the decorations and the Spanish Club will be in charge of the entertainment.

Included in the evening's entertainment will be a demonstration of national, folk, and square dancing by the Ukrainian, Hillel and Polish Clubs. The Spanish Club will be contributing solo dancers and a singer of "gypsy galinas." A soloist from the Russian Club will be singing classical Russian music in addition to a choir of eight girls from the Hillel Foundation. There will even by a magician present.

The Debates Room in Hart House House will be decorated in the theme of various countries. The east side of the room will be decorated by a group of East Indian students with sari motifs and with a miniature pagoda. There will be an Israeli display in one part of the room, and the south end of the room will be decorated by Russian, Ukrainian and Polish students.

Through the combined effort of the Spanish, Italian and French Clubs, the Music Room of Hart House will be transformed into a cabaret with the traditional red and white checkered tablecloths and Italian menus. The East Common Room will be decorated with the Canadian scene as its motif.

Among the guests at the Ball will be the honorary presidents of each national club on the campus, the chairman of the Toronto chapter of International House, the secretary of the Friendly Relations with Overseas Students, Mrs. Jerry Riddel, and the president of the SAC, Syd Wax.

The ISO, which initiated the International Ball, is essentially a social club which helps to orient foreign students into university life. It provides a common meeting ground for both Canadian and foreign students at the University of Toronto.

The ISO recently helped to form a local committee for Friendly Relations with Overseas Students and twenty European students who are studying at the U of T on an exchange basis have been introduced to Canadian university life by the ISO.

Orientation Tea Is Trinity Plan

The Trinity College Freshmen Orientation Tea will be held in the Trinity Buttery from 3:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. this afternoon. This will be the third in the series of teas given by the four arts colleges. St. Mike's and UC held their earlier in the fall.

The teas, which are followed by a dance, are sponsored by the SAC. The idea grew out of a series of four lectures which were offered to first year students last year so that they might develop an interest in questions considered to be of academic interest.

Last spring a committee consisting of the principals, registrars and senior students of the arts colleges met to discuss the problem of the orientation of the first year student. A smaller committee of students from each college drew up a brief which they submitted to the co-ordinating committee of the SAC. The brief was approved and funds were granted for its execution of its proposals.

The brief suggested that questionnaires be sent to all first year student and that teas be held by each to which all first year students in the other colleges were invited. The committee hoped that the SAC would use this idea as a pilot experiment by which they could make recommendations for a more comprehensive program in succeeding years. It is only it its infancy and it is hoped that the plan will be extended to the professional faculties.

The co-ordinating committee hopes that the teas will have a dual function both as a means of allowing frosh to get to know students in all colleges and also that it will introduce first year students into the total university community so that they will be early presented with the problems and potentialities of university life.

Club Lunch Will Hear TTC Exec

Mr. P. Baker of the Toronto Transportation Commission, will give an illustrated lecture on the "Toronto Subway" this afternoon at 1:00 at the annual Commerce Club luncheon. The luncheon will be held at Diana Sweets.

Employed by the TTC for the past 30 years, Mr. Baker is on their Public Relations executive. He has been editor of the TTC newspaper "The Coupler," and is in charge of the TTC information department.

In addition to the illustrated lecture, an amendment deciding whether or not girls should be allowed in the Commerce Club will be placed before the gathering. This has been a prominent question in the Commerce Club in recent years.

Fence On Campus Warning To Study

Students are getting a reminder to study for Christmas term exams, as the fence which traditionally encircles the front campus in the spring goes up this week.

Work on the fence started yesterday, instead of in April as usual. University's Assistant Superintendent Alex Russell explained yesterday that the early work is being done because of unseasonal warm weather.

"When there is snow on the ground", he said, "we don't need a fence to protect the campus. But with this unusual warm weather, the campus is a quagmire."

He explained that if the students walked across the campus in its present condition, they would turn it into a "plowed field". It would be almost impossible to get a good base in the spring, he added.

The fence probably won't be taken down this winter, even if snow fell, he said, since the University would only have to put it up again in the spring.

Commented one student, "The only trouble is, how are we going to know when to start studying in the spring?"

Fall Lectures Get Deferred

The Professor Alexander Memorial series of lectures on English literature, usually held during the fall, will be deferred until spring, University officials said yesterday. It is expected that the series this year will deal with modern literary criticism.

The lectures this year will be given by Professor R. S. Crane of the University of Chicago, in Hart House Theatre for five days during the week of March 17th.

The Meaning of the University Is Subject Of Van Wyck Talk

"Looking back, I know that when young I missed much I was offered at the university", remarked Dr. H. B. Van Wyck, Prof. Emeritus, Faculty of Medicine, who is to speak at 8 p.m. this Thursday at the Toronto Psychiatric Hospital on the subject "The Meaning Of The University."

"The ideal relationship between a student and a university is one that continues throughout life. This relationship evolves from what the young see in university to what the older generation have found to be true. This would justify frequent discussion on the meaning of university, a discussion which is naturally enhanced if it is undertaken by undergraduates and graduates, old and young together," he went on.

Dr. Van Wyck, who retired from the Faculty of Medicine a year and a half ago, was the first speaker in the Hart House debate this fall. A graduate of U of T, he has written a textbook on obstetrics and gynecology. This is the second one in a series of five discussion groups sponsored by the University Health Service on the subject of mental hygiene.

The purpose of the series is to attempt to solve in a palatable form the problems of university, said Dr. Wodehouse, of the University Health Service. Other lectures, given in previous years, were possibly more down to earth, he went on. One of these, for example, given by Dr. Blatz, was entitled "Study Habits."

This year the University of Toronto Bookstore has introduced many improvements to their store for the use of the student body. The setting up of the Christmas tree every year in the corner of the store makes a considerate improvement to the campus. Here we see one of the bookstore staff putting on some of the decorations.

REDUCED RAILWAY FARE FOR CHRISTMAS VACATION

The Canadian Passenger Association has announced that reduced fare arrangements have now been authorized for the Christmas and New Year vacation period. Students and members of the teaching staff may obtain at College and Faculty offices forms which will permit them to buy a return ticket at current normal one-way fare and one-half.

These forms carry the dates of the University vacation period, December 21st to January 7th, and no member of the University staff has any authority to alter these dates.

eterans In Meds ot Fined If Late With Fee Payment

An appeal made to the University authorities by veteran men to put off January payment of a $21.00 fee has ted in a favourable reply from the office of the Chief ntant. Veterans will not be penalized with the usual per month fine, if the payment is late, according to Court of that office.

The appeal for a time extension of the $21.00 debt was made on the grounds that notification of the debt was not received until a few days ago. "With Christmas coming up and many of us with families, the $21.00 will make quite a hole in our stockings," said one Meds man. "Ordinarily, if we had been informed at the first of the year we could have budgeted for the amount, but the suddenness of this jolt makes budgeting impossible," he explained.

The $21.00 payment by the vets was made necessary when fees for the top medical years were raised to $521.00, the highest of standard course fees.

Remedial Classes Started

University College Remedial ish course is in full operation Under a general plan with ifications imposed by the Dent of English, the four inors are giving their own speassignments to the classes.

The first assignment of one of lasses was to find any errors ammar, diction or punctuaand any instances of illogicalf argument or ambiguity of lines in The Varsity. "This not done for the purpose of zing The Varsity," said the uctor. "On the contrary, it was elp stimulate the students in roup to a critical awareness." errors were pointed out even e Globe and Mail.

rnalistic style was not conned, but the meaning of eving had to be clear and exed without too many cliches rder not to be called an error. e instructors say that much is needed by the students to ole them to speak and write erly and without error. They e that the students often do know the exact meanings of ds, and hence do not use them ectly.

the first assignment, most of mistakes were found including w that weren't there. "However," the instructors said, "the al results were good, and the onistic attitude felt at first ds the imposition of the e is giving way to a realizaof its benefits."

Mixed At Last

The All-Varsity Mixed Chorus is giving a concert this Sunday night in Convocation Hall. They will be accompanied by the University of Toronto Symphony Orchestra, as they appear in a concert for the first time together this year. Here we see conductor Keith Girard and a group of the girls in the chorus. Despite some difficulty in getting male voices earlier in the year, quite a few have shown up since, and the chorus is Mixed at last.

VARSITY PARTY

The second Varsity party will be held Friday, Dec. 14, to celebrate the last issue of the term, which will come out that day. Certain members of the staff are also expected to come out at the party. For security reasons, no address will be given in print, but all interested staffers can find out by giving the password at the office. All staff members are especially invited to attend.

University Opera

Detroit, Michigan (Exchange)—The world premier of Jan Meyerowitz' opera Eastward in Eden was to be given at Wayne University recently according to The Detroit Collegian, Wayne student newspaper. This opera marked the first appearance of full-dress opera at the University and the opening of the University Theatre. Wayne is proud of its contribution to the cultural life of Detroit and the whole country.

Many Students Sign List To Translate Languages

An ad in yesterday's Varsity has resulted in 58 students signing a list in the Students' Administrative Council office to translate foreign language manuscripts. Among the languages that they are willing to translate are German, Croatian, French, Malayan, Dutch, Spanish, Polish, Czechoslovakian, Russian, Portugese, Italian, Yiddish, Latin, Hungarian, Icelandic, Old Norse, and Greek.

Practically all the students who signed the list are not in language courses. Some of the students were from Forestry, SPS, Commerce and Finance, Medicine, Social Works, Nursing, Dentistry and Arts. Several students said that they spoke a second or third language but did not feel that they could translate documents in the other language.

Five students volunteered to translate four languages apiece. One student spoke French, Spanish, Dutch, and German while another in Forestry listed Dutch, German, French, and Malayan.

Prof. Heichelheim at University College has already given some of the students manuscripts to translate. Any other students interested in translating should sign the list being kept in the SAC office at Hart House.

Les Carabins

Two events being planned by the Carabin Weekend Committee are open to all interested students and faculty members, according to committee chairman Dorothy Lieberman, II Pre-meds. She said that the first of these two events will be an open seminar-style discussion which will take place on Friday at 3.00 p.m. in Alumni Hall, Victoria College, on the subject of "The aims and methods of education in Quebec and Ontario."

Warden Ignatieff of Hart House, Marg Fleming, president of the Women's Undergraduate Association at University College, a faculty member and a student from Montreal will lead off the discussion with brief talks, Miss Lieberman said. It is planned to divide those participating in the discussion into smaller groups, she said, and have them carry on their discussions in smaller rooms before reassembling in Alumni Hall. A spokesman from each group will then summarize the points raised in the group he is representing.

The second event open to all students and staff, Miss Lieberman said, will be a "seeing-off tea" at 2.30 p.m. Sunday in Wymilwood.

Spain's Admittance To UN Is Favored By Debaters

The resolution "That this House advocates the admission of Spain to the United Nations" was upheld last night at St. Hilda's by a 14 to 12 vote. St. Hilda's Literary Society was hosts to St. Michael's College Senate Club.

The first speaker for the government, Christie Russell, IV Trinity, pointed out that Franco's dictatorship in Spain is not the only difficulty facing the UN when it considers this problem. She outlined the history of this complicated problem.

In 1945 the San Francisco conference excluded countries from the UN who were brought to power by the axis, she said.

Spain was closely connected with the Latin American countries she said, and her exclusion would only prevent co-operation in that quarter.

John Johnson, St. Mike's, said Spain may be "still free to dance the tango" but it was also forced to "dance attendance on the Spanish government."

The Spanish government disallows all human rights, he added therefore it does not live up to the ideals of the UN Charter, and should not be admitted. He pointed out that "Man's ideals would drift aimlessly" if the UN recognized Spain and at the same time condone her government.
